Founded in 1907

—The First Moving Picture Trade Paper in America.

—The paper that introduced the many helpful departments for Exhibitors which have all been imitated by each and every publication that has since entered the field.

is the one paper in the industry all others try to follow and the one with which they all compare themselves.

Why? — Simply Because It Leads

MR. EXHIBITOR:

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD costs a little more than some others, but it is worth ten times its cost to YOU. Ask some of our old subscribers of six and seven years' standing and over.

We have the largest staff of the best known, most experienced, and ablest editors and correspondents in the country. Consequently our paper gives the biggest value to all of our readers. It is by far the greatest help to everyone in the industry, but particularly to the EXHIBITOR.

MR. ADVERTISER:

Our circulation among exhibitors and theatre men is in a class by itself. It has all been secured on the merits of the paper and the service it renders. We have paid no fancy commissions to subscription agents. We have never placed outside lists of exhibitors in any part of the country on a free mailing list for a period of several months. Moreover, our paper is promptly discontinued if a subscription is not renewed.

Ours is a circulation that brings results.

"I get 'THE WORLD' whatever else I may get" and "I would rather pay for your paper than get any other for nothing"—such expressions indicate the attitude of a large proportion of the readers of motion picture trade publications.

WE HAVE NOW AND ALWAYS HAVE HAD

The Largest Circulation Among Exhibitors Everywhere

Whether your theatre is large or small you need a FEDERAL Electric Sign

There is nothing better than a crowd and there is nothing better to attract crowds than a Federal Electric Sign. You can run over in your mind all the possible means of publicity you could afford to employ for your theatre and the fact remains that a Federal Electric Sign is by far the most efficient and economical means of attracting permanent and profitable patronage to your theatre.

The wide experience of the designers of Federal Electric Signs enables them to get the maximum publicity efficiency, whether you install a large or small sign.

Don't buy a cheap electric sign. If you wish to increase the line in front of your box office, you want to get in touch with us today. Find out how truly economical a Federal Electric Sign really is. Write now for special theatre bulletin No. 140.

New Panchroma Twin Arc

MODEL C

Used by leading producers all over the United States and adopted as the standard portable lighting unit for motion picture work.

PRICE $70

Price of Lamp complete, with collapsible reflector, rheostat and carrying-case containing all, and separate folding stand, $70.

THE new model C contains a number of improvements, which our experience of the past year indicates to be of additional convenience to the operator. The rheostat is now mounted on the lamp instead of being placed in the carrying case and the whole lamp has been made more rigid and solid. A special oscillating device fitted to the carbon feed keeps the carbons always in accurate contact. 8,000 c. p. guaranteed per lamp.

Total weight of each unit less than twenty pounds, exclusive of stand.

WE ARE LIGHTING EXPERTS FOR ALL PURPOSES IN MOTION PHOTOGRAPHY

We outfit operators for studio, transit, commercial and unusual purposes.

Rental terms on request at headquarters.

Lowest cost per operating unit.

The New Model H TOP LIGHT our newest offering to date. See it and judge its efficiency.

DON'T YOU KNOW THAT A MACHINE MADE WATCH WILL GIVE BETTER SERVICE THAN A HAND MADE ONE? WHY?

Accuracy, and finish of parts the same always, uniformity and detail that the human machine cannot accomplish. Then why experiment with a hand made imitation of a genuine machine made

MIRROROID SCREEN

The imitation costing you from 2 to 3 times as much as Mirroroid. Not only first cost but remember the imitation cannot produce permanent results.

Let us send you large, free samples. Test! Compare! Prove what 9,500 exhibitors already know concerning Mirroroid, the perfect screen. Not our say so, but your brains and intelligence. Investigate before you buy.

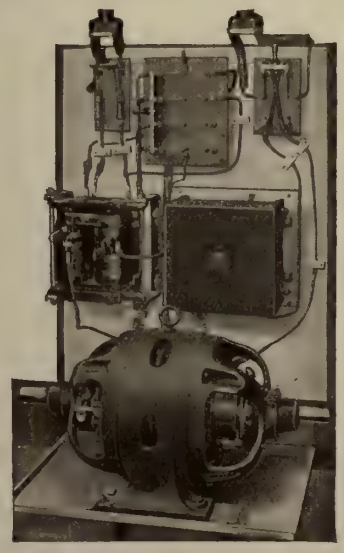
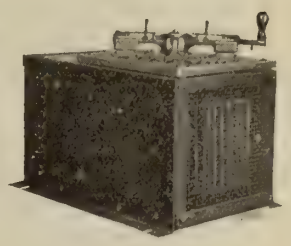
One Move of the Lever

OF THE WAGNER DUPLEX ARC REGULATOR,



Wagner White Light Converter

to change from one arc to another. To the audience it is one continuous reel without interruption even in the intensity of screen illumination. It relieves the operator from complicated adjustments and regulations. It allows him to devote his whole time to other duties.



Wagner Duplex Arc Regulator

The Wagner WHITE LIGHT Converter

This is only one of the features of the Wagner White Light Converter that permit QUALITY PROJECTION. Be consistent! You pay for good films—put them before your patrons right. We all agree DIRECT CURRENT is better and cheaper than alternating current. But the machine you buy must be simple, easily handled, reasonable in price, and above all DEPENDABLE. That last word is the key-note to success.

Simplicity means a big step toward dependability, freedom from repairs. The White Light Converter has one shaft, one armature, one set of coils, two bearings. No fragile parts, no complicated system of wiring or control. First cost is last cost. It is Wagner Quality

OUR FORESIGHT MEANT YOUR PROTECTION!!

Ten days after the outbreak of war we received the largest stock of French-made condensers ever shipped into this country

That's why we are able to offer you now

THE KLEINE WHITE LABEL CONDENSER

at before-war-time prices. Foreign factories formerly engaged in the manufacture of optical goods for the entire world now devote their sole energies to war merchandise for their own countries, thus making possible the distribution of inferior, cheaply made and costly-in-the-long-run-domestic substitutes.

KLEINE WHITE LABEL CONDENSERS are ground from pure optical glass. They do not discolor—no green, pink or purple effects after a brief use. They are the only satisfactory condensers on the American market today. If you are not using them you are not obtaining maximum results from your projection equipment.

PRICES:

Plano Convex
6½, 7½, 8½, 9½ and 10½ inch E. F., 4½ inch diameter $1.25

One Word "If"

You have been paying good money for film destroyed—

If you have been compelled to pay for part of a reel which was lost by fire, SOMETHING IS WRONG.

You know your projection room must have the best equipment; you will find the best in the MOTIOGRAPH.

THERE'S A REASON why the LATE MODEL MOTIOGRAPH has increased its sales 500% in less than six months.

Just one inspection of the MOTIOGRAPH in regard to its projection, simplicity, material used and SAFETY (approved by the National Board of Fire Underwriters), will convince you that you should intall a LATE MODEL MOTIOGRAPH.

RICHARDSON'S
MOTION PICTURE
HANDBOOK

Published by

THE CHALMERS
Publishing Co.

The third and latest edition of this valuable work has just come from the presses.

It is bigger, better, and more helpful than have been either of its predecessors by the same able author.

In daily touch with practical operators throughout the country by reason of his connection with THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, in which his PROJECTION DEPARTMENT is featured, Mr. Richardson is especially well qualified to deal with the problems which are constantly confronting the motion picture mechanics upon whose skill the industry depends so largely for its healthy growth.

RICHARDSON'S MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK is a carefully prepared guide to perfect projection.

It is an invaluable help to every single individual in the trade who has to do with the mechanical handling of motion picture film.

There are more than 400 Pages of Text and the illustrations—of which there are many—have been especially devised for this particular publication.

Motion Picture Campaign

Actors Fund of America

Exhibitors!

Many Exhibitors throughout America are contributing 10% of the gross receipts of their theatres on dates extending to June Fifteenth. Local conditions in many instances made this necessary.

Exhibitors!

If you have not donated 10% as yet please do so now or before June 15th.

The American public appreciate the worthiness of the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors Fund of America and will help by packing your theatres and increasing your receipts on your day.

June 15th

The wide range of this campaign and the support given it by the American public is largely due to the enthusiastic co-operation and assistance of Exhibitors in the United States of America. The Executive Committee extends them a hearty vote of thanks and grateful appreciation for their disinterested kindness.

POWER'S
Cameragraph No. 6B

The Perfect Moving Picture Machine

Efficiency is not of a mushroom growth; it is born of hard labor and study—and wisdom which profits by experience.

Power's Cameragraph represents an evolution extending over a period of sixteen years.

It is the result of ceaseless thought and research of a Master Mechanical Mind.

It stands for the elimination of all the crude and inefficient appliances of the past, and possesses every known feature of worth which present day knowledge affords.

It is manufactured throughout, in the largest and best equipped factory of its kind in the world.

It is used by the great majority of exhibitors in America.

The Woman on the Cross!

The half-naked troglodyte stalked forth from his cave in search of a mate. He clubbed her into submission. When she proved untrue the remedy was easy, for she was the weaker. He killed her.

Civilized man stalks his mate by cajolery and many promises. When she proves untrue, he slays her.

He does not cleave her with a stone hatchet as did the troglodyte. Civilization has devised more subtle methods. He makes of her an outcast; he tears her own flesh and blood from her arms; he turns a deaf ear to the agonized cry of motherhood robbed of its young; he crucifies her on the cross of convention.

It matters not that he himself has sinned. The woman is the weaker and she must pay.

But must she alone pay?

This question now is stirring the civilized world. Every woman is vitally interested; it is a potent force in the life of every man.

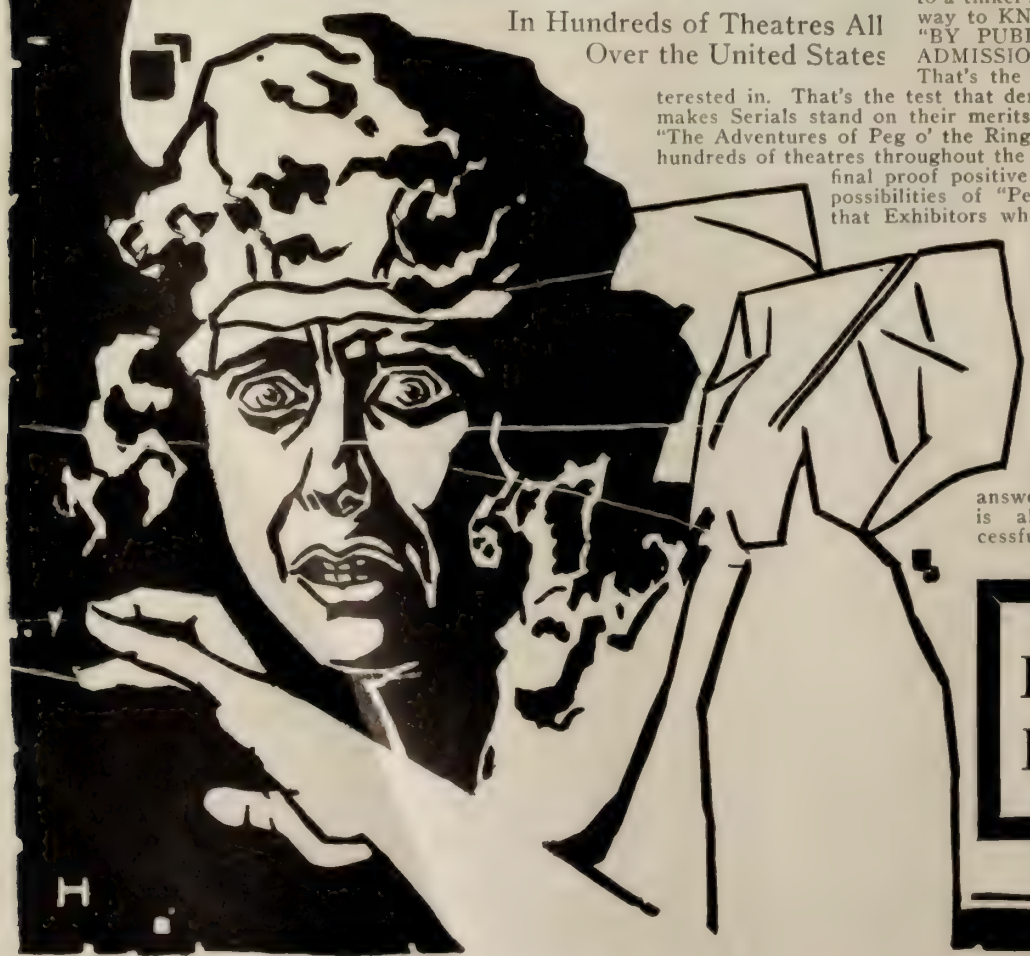
"That Sort," Essanay's five act feature, deals with just such a problem. Warda Howard depicts the agonies of the woman on the cross with a dramatic intensity that strikes straight to the heart. She is ably supported by Duncan McRae, Ernest Maupain and John Lorenz.

This photoplay is taken from the drama of Basil McDonald Hastings, produced under the direction of Charles J. Brabin and released through the V-L-S-E.

PEG O' THE RING

Tremendously Successful

In Hundreds of Theatres All Over the United States



You CAN READ "Trade Paper ads on Serials" or any other kind of Serial advertising till you're black in the face and all you read don't amount to a tinker's dam. The ONE and ONLY way to KNOW the value of a Serial is "BY PUBLIC RESPONSE IN CASH ADMISSIONS." That's the Acid Test. That's the test that YOU are most interested in. That's the test that denudes advertising claims and makes Serials stand on their merits alone. That's the test that "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring" has already been put to in hundreds of theatres throughout the entire United States and the final proof positive of the huge money-making possibilities of "Peg o' the Ring" is the fact that Exhibitors who have watched competition draw the money with this new, novel and entirely unique serial are now after it. This is the NEW IDEA serial—new in theme—new in environments—new in swiftness of action—and the reason why this Serial is "Packing 'em In" is because IT IS EXACTLY WHAT THE PEOPLE WANT in Serial Photoplay Entertainment. There's your answer why "Peg o' the Ring" is already Tremendously Successful.

BOOK IT NOW

15 Weeks-30 Reels of the GREATEST Film Show on Earth

Fifteen weeks of super photoplay with 30 reels crammed with thrills, excitement, fascination, suspense, all bound together by a delightful story of love and romance. "The Adventures of Peg O' the Ring" is The Greatest Film Show on Earth . . . with the two greatest Serial Photoplay Stars.

Where are my Children?

Blocks Broadway Traffic

Old Timers along the Great White Way who saw the huge mob struggling to gain admission to the GLOBE THEATRE to see "Where Are My Children" pronounced it "Unbelievable" that Broadway Traffic could be blocked by ANY Moving picture ever produced.

Yet the crowd shown in the picture reproduced below is ONLY the crowd that jammed the sidewalk in front of the Globe Theatre.

Inside, in the lobby (which is nearly 100 feet deep), another huge crowd was massed from doors to entrance. That's how "Where Are My Children" packed 'em in on Broadway, the hardest show street in the world, and in spite of the fierce competition in this, the greatest Theatre neighborhood in the world. The New York Newspapers, the Clergy, the Trade Press and the Public pronounced it "Wonderful," "Amazing," "Sensational," "Dignified." With playing the lead, supported by a brilliant cast, including Marie Walcamp and others, "Where Are My Children" presents the Box Office Attraction of the decade. Scenario and story by that brilliant genius of filmdom,

The Universal Program
The Greatest on Earth

REASONS why the Universal Program reigns supreme are offered in the following review of the seven feature releases which head the daily programs for the week of June 12. Read and learn why the Universal dominates them all. Remember the balance of the week's bill includes one reelers that other producers would pad to two or three. It includes animated cartoons; the "always first" Universal Animated Weekly. It is the one supreme varied program that never fails of interest. Get full particulars from your nearest Universal Exchange. If you cannot get the Universal Program NOW—watch your chance and get it at the very first opportunity. In the meantime book these features and bolster up your show.

"What Love Can Do." With Adele Farrington, C. H. Hammond and Mina Cunard. Story by Gertrude Nelson Andrews. Directed by Jay Hunt. Twentieth Red Feather Production. Released June 12. A theme that stirs a responsive chord in the heart of every lover of moving pictures forms the basis of the strong photoplay reviewed here. That theme is the course of a great love that suffers all, gives all, conquers all—thereby proving itself true. Adele is a newspaper woman who for five years has given her love—her very life—to the owner of the paper. She is loved by the city editor—"Old Grouch," who is ignorant of her liason. The "man" in the case thinks he is tired of Adele, and only her wonderful loyalty through a dangerous strike, and great mental trouble, bring him to the realization of his true feeling for her—that of undying love and devotion. Strong situations; a big strike scene; emotional moments of tense dramatic power, mark this as a fine play—one that will please your audiences at every performance.

J. Warren Kerrigan in "The Melody of Love." Three Reel Gold Seal Heroic Western Drama. Produced by J. Warren Kerrigan. Released June 13. Fortunate indeed, are the Universal Exhibitors, who recognize the box office power of J. Warren Kerrigan in plays like "The Melody of Love." Fortunately for them here is one of the best this great actor ever did, released at a time when he is at the height of his power—in constant demand for features of greater length. It was in this stirring style of drama that he made his first bid for fame, and the present release is worked out with all his old-time swing and dash that captivates every man, woman and child who sees it. This is an opportunity that happens once in a lifetime. If you are not showing the Universal Program, book this and be happy.

"How Stars Are Made." With Alice Howell and Ray Griffith. Two Reel L-KO Komical Absurdity. Released for laughing purposes only June 14. Alice has an ambition. She will be a movie star. She interviews the studio watchman. She sneaks into the star's dressing room and swipes a costume. There's a grand carnival in town that day and the star is to ride on a float as a queen—of something or other. Alice beats her to it and the fun is fast and furious. The street parade is a scream and the finish is typically L-KO—that means an absolute surprise with the laughing punch that will leave your audiences breathless.

"Her Soul's Song." With Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson Two Reel Laemmle Heart Interest Drama. Directed by Lloyd Carleton. Released June 15. The varied nature of the Universal Program has made it the greatest on earth. The recognition of what people want, and that they don't want the same thing all the time, keeps the U. P. at the top of the heap all the time. Here's evidence. The stars of this beautiful little drama have shown what they could do in heavy emotional work time and again. In this story of an opera singer who gave up her career for love, and who lost her voice when the baby came; who regained it uner the most peculiar conditions, is so absorbingly human that it is positively universal in its appeal to the finer emotions of the heart. Abounding in heart throbs, it will please any audience.

Hobart Henley in "The Devil's Image." Two Reel Dope Drama. Directed by Henry Otto. Released June 16. Every lover of Universal moving pictures enjoys handsome Hobart Henley's every moment on the screen. Clean, wholesome, young, good-looking, with the frank, engaging manner that makes everyone like him he has made millions of friends among the fans. In this fine picture his friends will get something of a shock. They will realize that Hobart Henley is an emotional and character actor of fine ability as well as a handsome man well fitted for heroic parts. Here we see him as a dope fiend deprived of the drug, and in one of the weirdest situations, where in a dream he fights with himself, is acting of the highest order. The thrills in this will hold 'em on the edge of their seats. The double exposure work of Mr. Henley has rarely been equalled.

"A Railroad Bandit." Two Reel Railroad Drama. With Lee Hill and Marie Walcamp. Directed by Henry McRae. Released June 17. Judged by their plays you would think that Director McRae lived on railroad wrecks; that Lee Hill would rather risk his life than eat, and that life held nothing for Marie Walcamp unless there were a few death defying stunts served to her every so often. This ralistic portrayal of a Western hold-up, love rivalry, and the ensuing complications is a great picture. No living man, woman or child could sit through this marvelous film without being moved to their depths. A picture that will please everyone and that will stand a lot of boosting—in fact, all that you can give it. Don't fail to book this if you are not showing the regular Universal Program.

Ben Wilson in "The Finer Metal." With Dorothy Phillips. Adapted for the screen from the play by E. E. Kidder. Produced by Raymond L. Schrock. Two Reel Rex Emotional Drama. Released June 18. Pure drama of the most intense and emotional sort marks this photoplay which was originally written and produced for the Actor's Fund Benefit with Henry Kolker in the lead. Among others the unusual situation is presented of a husband coming to the room of his wife's lover to save him from arrest on a charge of embezzlement while the guilty wife learns of his magnanimity while hiding behind a curtain. Big in theme, in acting and in production, this is a big offering which fittingly closes the Universal Program for the week.

BLUEBIRD Photoplays (inc)

"LOIS WEBER directed the marvelous photo-drama—"The Eye of God," announced on the preceding page as the latest BLUEBIRD release.

To those familiar with the work of this remarkable woman, the statement is big with promise. Producer of the wonderful spectacles, "Hypocrites," Pavlowa in "The Dumb Girl of Portici," "Scandal," "Jewel" and "Where Are My Children?" —to mention only her most recent work, Lois Weber today outranks any and every other director in the moving picture field.

Her breadth of vision; her innate humanity; her sense of the dramatic; the scope of her artistry unified by her long experience as both actress and producer, are shown in every script which finds its way to the screen through her hands.

"The Eye of God," in which Miss Weber plays opposite that eminent American actor, Tyrone Power, was written by her, staged, and directed by her, and is the strongest possible evidence of the new and higher standard set by BLUEBIRD Photoplays.

Such dramas are giving to moving pictures their rightful place in the field of entertainment—that of dignified, worthy and thoughtful presentations of subjects of universal human interest, capably acted and lavishly produced.

FEATURING SALLY CRUTE, MIGNON ANDERSON AND AUGUSTUS PHILLIPS SUPPORTED BY AN ALL STAR CAST OF PRINCIPALS

¶ Undoubtedly, "the most original photodrama of the year" is what the consensus of opinions will be regarding "Her Husband's Wife."

¶ This newest Ivan feature pulsates with action, and the lip advertising it's due to receive from startled audiences will warrant any theatre playing it for a long run.

¶ Contracts as exclusive distributors of Ivan Productions are expiring in some territories.

¶ Bids from reliable exchange owners who are in a position to distribute Ivan Productions and enhance the value of our brand name will be considered and options on franchises given.

Dear Mr. MacManus:-

I have booked "THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA" for all my theatres because I believe that the International Film Service has solved a great problem.

This picture is the first real departure from the stereotyp that I have ever witnessed, and I feel that it will do a bi business.

Please remember also, that I consider your publicity of un surpassable value -- in fact, the greatest publicity in th world.

I will give you permission to reprint this unsolicited te timonial.

Dear Bill:

I've ben in New York three days now an' it's sure some big town. I seen the fight a few nights ago, but there wasn't much class. The big feller was too big an' the little feller was too small for him.

You tell John Tompkins he'd better keep his butcher shop and not take up prize fightin' for a business.

I've ben gettin' along fine since I've ben here, 'cept for the trains. They have 'em under the street and three or four stories high in the middle of the street and criss-cross an' every which way.

Last night I got a letter from Lucie and she sed to me that you had bought the Savoy pitcher theatre. An' speakin' of pitchers, I sure did see the funny man last night. His name is Daniels. I don't remember wether his name's Jim or Frank, but he sure is one funny fellow. His face looks like a cross between a sun burnt turnip an' a big ben alarm clock, an' the way he does act is grand. I just laughed until my left side hurt me an' I would be laughin' yet, but a girl next to me got hysterical and got choked on the gum she was chewin'. She was some pretty girl and I would liked to have helped her but I was laughin' so darn hard that I couldn't be of any use. Just as I did get ready to help her the feller she was with took her out.

You better see if you can't buy a pitcher with that feller in it. He's sure one funny guy.

I've order the cultivators and they're dandies.

Good luck.

Your friend,
JED HAWKINS.

Dear Sir:-

Notwithstanding the fact that "THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE" had ten days' play at Fox's Bedford Theatre, four days at Lowe's Fulton Theatre, four days at the Classique, three days at the Sumner, three days at the New Albany and before 12,000 people at the Thirteenth Regiment Armory, all these being within a radius of ten blocks from the Throop Theatre, we did a big business and had the S. Variety Adds Spice!

If you were giving a feast you would not offer just one huge dish. No matter how palatable, the appetite would be surfeited by too much of one thing.

So is the mind surfeited by a similarity of subjects. A high class short comedy or drama on your program gives variety and relieves monotony. Spices are needed for a program as well as a feast.

Essanay is making a specialty of short, snappy subjects with its stars in the lead, to add variety to your program.

BIG FOUR'S OPEN BOOKING POLICY OFFICIALLY COMMENDED BY EXHIBITORS

Brooklyn, N. Y., April 23rd, 1916.

V-L-S-E,
1600 Broadway,
New York City.

Dear Sirs:

At a meeting of "The Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn" the following resolution was unanimously passed.

"Whereas, The majority of feature film concerns are releasing their output on what is known as a program contract system, and

"Whereas, Some of these concerns bind the exhibitor by demanding a cash deposit as security on this contract, and

"Whereas, The exhibitor is forced against his will to take as part of these programs, film, that is good, bad and indifferent, and

"Whereas, The bad films the exhibitor has to show as part of these programs, not only do him incalculable harm, but have a tendency to hurt the entire industry, therefore,

"Be it resolved, that 'The Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn' in meeting assembled, go on record as emphatically endorsing the open booking policy of the V-L-S-E which eliminates contracts and cash deposits and permits an exhibitor to show what he pleases, indicating this policy as being a fair and liberal one,

"Be it further resolved, that, the members of this Association heartily commend this policy and pledge their moral support and cooperation to V-L-S-E and recommend that all other exhibitors do likewise,

"Be it further resolved that, a copy of this resolution be sent to the main office of V-L-S-E."

Yours very truly,

Tom Brandt.

I think your policy of allowing the exhibitor to pick his own program will please the exhibitor more than anything else, as the exhibitor knows his patrons, where the exchange does not.

WORLD FILM CORPORATION

WORLD PICTURES

I will give $5,000 in prizes for good stories to use in making scenarios for World Pictures.

William A. Brady

I invite the co-operation of the writers of the country—amateur and professional—in the work of producing better scenarios for picture plays.

As Director-General of World Pictures, it is my ambition to heighten the standards of the silent drama. Frankly, I am convinced that one of the first needs is much better scenarios. There has been too much trash!

So I have deposited $5000 at the Mutual Bank, New York City, to be awarded to those who present interesting stories, ideas or scenarios that I select for making photo plays. Contest closes at 6 P. M., Sept. 15, and the prizes awarded Jan. 1, 1917.

Of course, I am now receiving most of the choicest scenarios on the market, and they are being made into World Pictures. Included in them, I believe, are some of the greatest film dramas so far.

But I want to continue buying better-than-usual stories for every new World Picture. I cannot stand mediocrity.

Surely there are hundreds of people—yes, thousands—who have ideas which could be worked up into first-class photo plays, to meet the new standards set for World Pictures.

$1000 for the Best Story

For the best story, idea or scenario, I offer $1000; for the second best, $750; for the third best, $650. The stories taking fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh place, each will receive $500, $400, $300 and $200 respectively. The next twelve successful stories will be paid for at the rate of $100 each. We will therefore accept nineteen stories.

You need not submit a technically perfect scenario, such as are prepared by experts. You may submit merely the story in narrative form. Of course finished scenarios by professional writers will be welcomed.

To give you an idea of the kind of material we are seeking, I have prepared a chart showing what will please and what to avoid. If you wish a copy, write to me for it.

Let me suggest here, however, that the World Film Corporation is interested in unusual plays of present-day life, full of human interest and realism, with plenty of action and with tense, dramatic situations. People seem to like the love element and some comedy in each play.

Please avoid stories of the underworld and of war. Nor do I care to handle anything that is sordid or gruesome. I want clean, wholesome stories for the entire family to see and enjoy. Each story should make a five-reel picture.

What I Seek

Probably you have seen either House Peters in "The Closed Road" or Clara Kimball Young in "The Feast of Life" or Kitty Gordon in "Her Maternal Right." If not, see these pictures and you will get an idea of what we like. At present, thousands of people everywhere are enjoying and applauding the first of our new-day pictures.

Not long ago I stopped loaning my name to screen productions and entered personally into the supervision of World Pictures from start to finish. And now I am surrounded by the combined artistic and financial resources of two great organizations—World and Equitable.

These double resources, together with a reduced schedule of productions, permit me to carry out my most cherished ambitions. For thirty years I have been presenting stage plays to the people of eleven nations. Now I hope to win new friends in Filmland through greater triumphs.

See World Pictures

To further study what appeals to us, see some of the coming World Pictures which will be shown at first-class theatres everywhere. They include: Robt. Warwick in "Sudden Riches," Alice Brady in "Tangled Fates," Carlyle Blackwell and Ethel Clayton in "His Brother's Wife," Kitty Gordon in "The Crucial Test," Holbrook Blinn in "The Weakness of Man," Edna Wallace Hopper and Frank Sheridan in "The Perils of Divorce," Mollie King in "Fate's Boomerang" and Gail Kane in "The Other Sister."

Send your stories or scenarios to me personally. If you wish them returned, include postage. Your name and address should be plainly marked

Facts and Comments

MANY exhibitors complain as it seems to us with perfect justice about municipal shows that are conducted without a license. Whether an admission is charged for such shows or not it seems to us makes but little if any difference. The motion picture man who pays a license ought not to be compelled to compete with the very municipality which issues the license to him. We believe that if this matter was taken into court on an injunction the free and unlicensed municipal show might be stopped. Quite aside from the legal aspects of the case, however, the utter unfairness of such competition must be apparent to every person with any sense of justice or equity. There may be occasions when co-operation between the municipality and the exhibitor is necessary for the screen is a great factor in the promotion of civic welfare. When, however, rooms in the city halls or in state armories are used to hold motion picture shows in direct competition with men who have paid a license it is nothing less than a hardship and imposition on the exhibitor.

THE old complaint about long shows for little money is voiced once more and this time from the Bronx. A friend and reader of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD speaks of thirteen reels for a nickel as a common thing in some of the best and biggest houses. Must be something wrong here. It's a matter which might be taken up by the organized exhibitors of the place. The organization in the Bronx has the reputation of being strong and active.

CONSTRUCTIVE work is needed in the battle against censorship, THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD highly commends the action of the organized exhibitors in the state of Ohio, notably Cleveland, in this connection. These men led by Mr. Megown have secured the support of practically all the women in the state who are organized in the doing of important and useful social work. They have co-operated with the women for special "family programs" to be run on special days. The exhibitors also did splendid work in connection with the "Better Babies" crusade. It seems to us that work of this kind is deserving of hearty encouragement on the part of all the manufacturers who are opposed to censorship.

THE memorandum accompanying the Governor's veto of the foolish Cristman-Wheeler Bill is a statesmanlike document. The Governor does not take up the question of the constitutionality of the proposed law but withholds his approval because the bill is confiscatory in effect. He says that the motion picture has become the most popular entertainment and that the closing of motion picture theaters would work a hardship upon the public. These words will wake up an echo in the mind of every fair-minded man. Governor Whitman has always been credited with a keen political vision and he certainly has gauged public sentiment correctly when he decided to stand between the motion picture and the men who would wantonly and ignorantly destroy it.

IT IS but fair to acknowledge the hard work which was done by the entire industry against the signing of this bill. This morning's mail brings many congratulations to THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD for its share in the battle. One up-state exhibitor writes in to say that the work done on the suggestion and with the co-operation of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD had much to do with the final defeat of this unjust censorship bill. We could have done but little had it not been for the intelligent and persistent activities of the exhibitors. They were responsible for the presence of many disinterested persons at the hearing, such as the representatives of the Rochester Chamber of Commerce. They fought with slides, petitions and in many cases by direct personal appeal. Thousands of petitions were sent from the Capitol District alone. The victory over the forces of ignorance is due in equal proportion to every branch and to every friend of the screen. That the victory in Albany will dampen the ardor of censorship agitators in other states is morally certain.

Our American Girl

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT IS almost in vain that we look for her on the screen. A broad and deep characterology has depicted nearly every phase of the American makeup so far as males are concerned. They are shown in all their infinite variety, from men who take themselves seriously to those who are only mildly amusing, much to our edification, if not delight, but the ladies who appear, though they may be of the theatrical elite, are not the ones we meet in every-day society.

We have the artless little ingenue as regularly as eggs for breakfast, and she has all the innocent candor of a truly good egg, though the actress who plays the role may be as far removed from sweet simplicity as grease paint and late suppers can make her. She may be able to handle her "twin-six" like a speed demon and mount a stiff hill of Martinis at "high," but who really ever saw an ingenue such as she depicts? She has one good reason for existence if she is a rich little girl, or a poor little girl who grows rich in the last act, and that lies in the darling frocks she reproduces straight from the latest fashion papers.

She is also very sweet in a riding suit of black velvet, and she is simply killing when she dons overalls to crawl beneath a motor car and emerge with a becoming black smootch on one cheek, her lips pouting in a tempting moue. She may stay with us as long as she likes, an airy-fairy cornflake, but it might not be a bad idea to humanize her once in a while, let us get the natural flavor without so much sugar. Girls in real life may be just as innocent and sweet to the eye with an occasional dash of temper to relieve their insipidity and bring them within range of our sympathies.

There are debutantes who have to start life at so much a week in factory and office. They not only have to stand the hard knocks that men receive, but also a lot of hard knocks from women who are merely sponging on men, yet they manage to get along when they have courage. Thousands of them make their living honestly in New York City with neither money nor pull at the outset, merely plucky girls of independent spirit. Some of them save money and are swindled out of it by the real estate sharks only to try again until they have little homes of their own paid for by hard work and self denial.

Who ever saw one of these spirited bachelor girls wearing boys clothes, as they do in screen plays, and looking as much like a boy as chocolate fudge does a ham sandwich? Only on the stage and on the screen are they lured to the villain's room to become "his plaything until cast aside." Of all members of their sex they are really the keenest in judging men and the motives of men, though the men may not know it. Girls whose minds are kept sweet and wholesome by work are seldom among those who announce tearfully before a criminal court, "I am not bad—it was because I loved him so."

Old theatrical producers who have been long engaged in clearing the working girl "in the eyes of the world" by showing that "her whole happiness was at stake," or because "she was a mere child in knowledge of the world," probably never met a working girl of any account, one whose clean principles are founded on hard experience, whose proof of fine character lies in her voluntary choice of the right way to get along, who often contributes from her scant earnings to help mother and father, or the younger children.

Practically every young actress in this fair land of ours longs to play the role of an "adventuress," just as the child in pigtails longs to get out of short skirts—or did before the present fashions appeared. "The human vampire" was conceived in the mind of some poor fish who was disappointed in love. It is to laugh. What a persistent old remnant of crass theatricalism is the idea of woman as an institution for man's demoralization! He actually prays for demoralization from the moment he learns to tie his cravat.

The poor old adventuress is still with us. She wears a big black hat and clothes that are poured on, the eternal temptress of poor misguided man, the girl ordered by the villain to get the "papers" at any cost. She and wax figures were once popular with the uninitiated. She might not have survived them but for the meanest poem ever written in English. She was originated by Adam and revived by Rudyard Kipling. Both of these gentlemen are on record as saying, when speaking of original sin, that it was all her fault.

Is it not almost time that the stock adventuress should go, along with the lady who visits the villain's rooms at night in order to hear the "something important" he has to say? Why portray woman as an agent of corruption when no crooked deal was ever yet put through that was not of man's devising? Why picture a perfectly normal woman as an abnormal one, as weak as a devitalized subject of hypnotic suggestion, for the sake of a so-called "dramatic situation?" Why not give us an occasional, and non-theatrical, glimpse of the robust and clear-visioned American girl such as those of us who are not running soubrette studios know millions of them to be?

The stage has given some very bright men to the screen, —some of the brightest have found the new medium better suited to their ideas than the old—but it has also given us a lot of barnacles who hang on and wax fat in spite of cleansing criticism. The theater is benefited by their desertion to new fields and is fast becoming an instrument of social culture. Contemporary authorship is being encouraged; plays of vital theme are being sought, and patronage is being gradually diverted to dramas which portray the social life that exists among us rather than that of tradition.

While this is going on in the older art, progress in screen portrayals is delayed by repetition and imitation of what has been entirely discarded by the stage. The American Girl is depicted in the false terms of the Gallic playhouses. Most of the characterizations of her shown on the screen are, therefore anomalies and perversities. We rarely see our women pictured as they really are because it is the tendency of theatrical people, particularly in New York, where they are affected by European traditions, to impose upon our art forms, ideas and systems borrowed from old-world countries.

Our American Girl on the screen should spring from our social life, her spirit our spirit, her courage, her self-reliance, her independence of thought, her contempt for hypocrisy, her ability to take care of herself under trying conditions, that of the American people. It is our business to know her as she is and as she is at her best. It is our business to discover her traits, those of coming generations, and to place them on the screen as revelations of what is fine in our national life.

A Great Historic Document

Full Text of the Report Against Censorship Submitted to Congress by the Minority of the House Committee on Education—Congressman William W. Rucker, of Illinois, Caleb Powers, of Kentucky, Edmund Platt, of New York, and Frederick W. Dallinger, of Massachusetts, Give Their Reasons for Opposing Federal Censorship—Scathing Arraignment of the Film Men Who Joined Hands With the Fanatics of the Crafts Type

THE Moving Picture World prints herewith the full report of the minority members of the House Committee on Education. These members have delivered the most conclusive, the most telling and the most convincing plea against the injustice and the tyranny of the censor and the inquisitor. Around this splendid document the anti-censorship forces ought to rally at once. Exhibitors who want to help in the fight which must soon take place on the floor of the House will be provided with blanks for petitions to circulate among their patrons. There is no division of sentiment in regard to censorship among exhibitors; they at least are a unit in their opposition to film censorship. Among the film men who spoke for censorship at Washington there was not one single man directly or indirectly interested in the exhibition of motion pictures. Read this report and then send for blanks. Here is the report:

"This bill," (Smith-Hughes measure), "proposes to regulate by a Federal Commission the principal amusement agency and what is rapidly coming to be one of the chief educational agencies of the people of the United States. It is not proposed to censor the plays or operas produced at the high-priced theaters throughout the country, but it is proposed to give five men at Washington the absolute power to determine beforehand what the great mass of the American people shall be permitted to see depicted upon the motion picture screen. Before the National Government undertakes to thus exercise the local police power hitherto reserved to the States, and to regulate purely local amusements, thus stretching the implied power of the interstate commerce clause of the Federal constitution to the breaking point, it is incumbent upon the proponents of such legislation to show that a widespread evil exists with which the State and local authorities are unable to cope.

No Evidence for Need of Censorship.

"At the hearings before the committee practically no real evidence was introduced tending to show that any significant proportion of the moving picture films now being exhibited in the United States are objectionable. In the last analysis it appears that what the proponents of this legislation really desire is to prevent the exhibition through the agency of the motion picture film of any book or play which in any way depicts crime or immorality or paints the evil side of human life on the ground that such scenes tend to corrupt morals and incite to crime. It is obvious that any such test as this would prevent the great mass of the American people whose limited means will not permit them to patronize the high-priced theaters, from seeing depicted upon the motion picture screen practically all the great works of literature from the beginning of time. Judged by any such standard most of Shakespeare's plays and even many parts of the sacred Scriptures would be barred. That there are occasional indecent and obscene motion picture films exhibited here and there, is perfectly true, just as there are obscene and indecent plays produced in high-priced theaters and indecent and immoral books published. Such productions, however, are already prohibited by the laws of the several States, and their transportation from State to State is also prohibited by Federal statute under severe penalties. In our opinion, an amendment to the United States Penal Code including motion picture films in the list of objects barred from interstate transportation will answer every purpose and is as far as Federal legislation should go. Such an amendment is proposed in a bill introduced in the present Congress and now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary.

Police Power of State Is Ample.

"Moreover, there was no evidence whatever before the committee that local regulation of the exhibition of motion picture films has proved ineffective where it has been tried. It is entirely within the power of the several States to provide that the executive or police authorities of the local communities shall have absolute power to grant and revoke licenses for all places of amusement within their several jurisdictions, and in many communities this power is now being effectively exercised. Furthermore, most of the States already have laws making it a criminal offense, punishable by fine and imprisonment, to exhibit any obscene or indecent picture. Where the local police power is thus ample to effectively deal with whatever evils exist in the motion picture business, regulation by the National Government is manifestly uncalled for, unnecessary, and unjustifiable.

"The overwhelming weight of opinion amongst those producing motion pictures is against the proposed censorship bill. The opposition to the bill represents more than 85 per cent. of the total number of motion picture films produced. Those manufacturers who favor the bill represent a very insignificant proportion of the output. The attitude of this inconsiderable minority is naturally and frankly selfish and commercial. They believe that it would be less expensive and troublesome to deal with and perchance control a single Federal censorship commission than to deal with or to control the several State authorities acting under their already ample police powers. The notorious effectiveness of the prepublicity censorship of theatrical productions in England has undoubtedly influenced this minority of the moving picture manufacturers to believe that a like national prepublicity censorship as provided in this bill will have a similar effect in this country.

"In England the evidence produced before a special parliamentary committee which made a very exhaustive investigation and report in 1909 has established the following facts:

"(1) Prepublicity censorship 'tends to hinder the growth of a great and serious drama' by discouraging distinguished authors whose time is valuable from jeopardizing their time by writing plays which might be destroyed by the whimsical opinion of a censor.

"(2) It fails to prevent the production of immoral plays.

"(3) It atrophies the exercise of the local police power over local production of immoral plays because they have been licensed by the national censorship authority.

"(4) The censorship authority falls under the influence of the large theater interests and tends to exercise its censorial powers with undue consideration for box office receipts.

"(5) The large theater interests favor the continuance of the censorship bureau because it gives questionable productions immunity from prosecution by the local authorities.

"(6) The great literary lights of England are almost unanimous against prepublicity censorship.

"These considerations led the special parliamentary committee to recommend the abolition of prepublicity censorship in England.

Majority of Film Men Opposed to Federal Censorship.

"The great majority of the motion picture interests oppose this prepublicity censorship bill because it is in their judgment a bill that will tend to stunt the natural development of the usefulness of the moving picture art and will tend to confine it, as it has the English drama, to the lighter forms of mere amusement when its potential utility lies in the far wider field of information and propaganda. They believe that they are consulting an enlightened selfishness when they seek to keep the moving picture film from the stunting influence of arbitrary power, for this development of the potential utility of the art means a tremendous increase of business. They also frankly say that they are unwilling to enter into an inevitable political contest for the control of the censorship commission to be established by this bill. They fear the power of the censorship under a rival's influence, because it is a power over their business of life and death. The elaborate productions which are now being presented represent enormous outlays—sometimes more than a half a million dollars—before they can be exhibited to the proposed censors. A censorship commission under the influence of a rival could thus absolutely ruin a producer by exercising corruptly or even with unconscious partiality the arbitrary power vested in this commission to condemn the film.

"But we regard the balance of interests between those several small producers catering to high-priced houses who believe in censorship because it will relieve them of the necessity of deferring to local standards of decency on the one hand, and those large producers who want to leave the industry free to develop still greater fields of usefulness, on the other, as of little moment compared with another and very grave phase of this question.

"The most serious objection to this bill lies in the power it seeks to give an executive commission to trammel the moving-picture art, the propagandist power of which is already marvelously developed, and the potential power of which seems limitless.

The Motion Picture Has a Title to Freedom.

"It is in this rapidly-developing power and use for propaganda that the moving picture film has taken its place beside speech and press as a thing to be kept free from arbitrary control in the interest of free institutions. The essence of free speech and a free press is the power for propaganda as the media of intelligence. It was this power which reactionary authority in the old days sought to repress and which the guardians of free institutions struggled to keep free. In the beginning the attack was made upon free speech and upon free drama before the development of the printing press gave writing and printing also an effective power of propaganda. Before the influence of the press upon public opinion became effective, and before it was recognized as a possible aid to the discussion of political, economic and social questions, the drama was largely used as a propagandist instrumentality. Down even to the time of Walpole's ministry in England the drama was a very effective means of stirring public opinion, and the early laws providing for the censorship of the drama were political devices to muzzle it as an instrument which might be used against those in power. Walpole, whose government was the most corrupt England ever knew, found his power threatened by a popular play exposing the venality of his political followers and he learned that another play was about to be produced. It was to stop this second play that he caused to be enacted the present censorship law in England. It was effective. All attempts to arouse the people of England to the shame of Walpole's government through the medium of the theater ceased immediately.

"Thus, we see that the original and dominating purpose of the censorship of the drama in England was distinctly political, as was demonstrated by the parliamentary investigation of 1909. But the rapid development in the art of printing soon so overshadowed the drama in the effectiveness of its propagandist power that the struggle to free the drama from censorship was forgotten in the more important struggle to keep the new power—the power of the press—free. For the moment that place and privilege recognized the power of the product of the printing press to effect public opinion, they began to seek means to control it by the device of prepublicity censorship. The struggle to keep the media of intelligence free from the restraint of arbitrary power was thenceforward waged around the question of free speech and a free press until these institutions won their final victory and became firmly planted in the unwritten constitution of Great Britain and in all our own written instruments. Our Federal Constitution, in Article I of the amendments, says:

> "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

The Follies of Ohio and Pennsylvania.

"If we keep in mind the important fact that the vital thing in speech and press which was sought on the one hand to be restrained and trammeled, and on the other hand to be kept free, was the power of propaganda, we shall understand more clearly the importance of bringing the moving picture film within the constitutional guaranty of a free speech and a free press, because the analogy in principle and necessity is complete. Indeed, the history of the attempt to censor moving picture films bears a close analogy to the history of the attempt to abridge the freedom of speech and of the press.

"In Ohio, for instance, one of the four States which has a censorship board, it appeared in evidence before the committee that a motion picture play depicting a manufacturer bountiful in charities which advertised himself, but hard on his employees, was suppressed on the ground that it tended to excite class feeling.

"In Pennsylvania the power of the censor was invoked to suppress 'The Battle Cry of Peace' upon the ground that it tended toward a breach of neutrality and to incite military spirit.

"In Massachusetts an organization to ameliorate the conditions of child labor has been exhibiting moving pictures of actual conditions in certain manufacturing plants, and the representatives of these manufacturers attempted to stop these exhibitions. If Massachusetts had had a board of censors, who knows what its action would have been in this case?

"In Massachusetts also, moving pictures have been recently used to illustrate the workings of savings bank insurance, an institution very bitterly opposed by the old line insurance companies.

"In France the moving picture films were credited with the tremendous success of the recent French loan, the greatest the world has ever known.

"Do we dare to put in the control of an executive board such an extraordinary power—a power to suppress a medium of thought expression which in this country alone speaks to 20,000,000 people every day?

"In short, this bill violates the principle of the constitutional guaranty of a free press. It denies to the public the very utility in this wonderful new art which made it so necessary to keep the press free. It gives a few men despotic control over an art which the very threshold of its development has power to influence more than 20,000,000 people every day. It completes the vicious circle by making it inevitable that the powerful moving-picture industry, already the fourth greatest in the country, will be precipitated into politics and used for political purposes by the party in power.

"In our opinion every reasonable protection to the public morals can be secured by the proper exercise of the local police power supplemented by the amendment to the Federal Penal Code already sugested. The extraordinary power vested in the commission proposes to be created by this bill will not only prove ineffective to protect public morals, as experience has shown, but it is utterly un-American in its character and in the highest degree dangerous from every point of view.

WILLIAM W. RUCKER,
CALEB POWERS,
EDMUND PLATT,
FREDERICK W. DALLINGER."

Speaking of the foregoing report, Congressman Dallinger said to a representative of The Moving Picture World:

"There is nobody who is more bitterly opposed than I am to the exhibition of indecent and immoral pictures," declared Mr. Dallinger. "I believe, however, as is pointed out in the minority report, that the proper exercise of the existing police power of the several states supplemented by an amendment to the Federal Criminal Code prohibiting the interstate transportation of objectionable films, is more than adequate to remedy any evils that may exist. That the regulation of local amusements by national legislation is entirely unnecessary and unjustifiable is, in my opinion, too plain for argument.

"Having been engaged all my life in reform work, I cannot understand how the official representatives of organizations which are striving to remedy some of the evils in our American life can advocate this legislation. From the beginning of time the most effective weapon of reform has been the portrayal of the evils of existing conditions, whether that portrayal has been by word of mouth, as in the days of the phophets; through the printed page of poet and novelist, by means of the artist's canvas or upon the stage. The motion picture art affords the most effective means of propaganda yet devised and to cripple its usefulness as is proposed by this bill would be most unfortunate and dangerous.

"The effect of Harriet Beecher Stowe's 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' in bringing home to the American people the evils of human slavery is a matter of history. How much more quickly and more effectively the same result would have been accomplished if the moving picture art had been in existence at that time? And yet does anyone doubt if such had been the case and a Federal Censorship Board had been in existence with the slave power in control of the National Government, that the film depicting the scenes portrayed in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' would have been refused a license on the spacious ground that it was inhuman and intended to corrupt morals?

"I am firmly convinced that should this bill become a law it is not only possible, but extremely probable that under the same conditions motion picture films setting forth the need of national preparedness or portraying the evils of the white-slave traffic, of intemperance, and even of child-labor, might be refused a license. In my opinion, those who are interested in progress and reform are the very ones who should be most vitally interested in keeping absolutely free from arbitrary control this latest and most powerful instrument of free thought expression.

"The enactment of the Alien and Sedition Laws utterly destroyed the great Federalist party in the early days of the Republic. These laws, however, merely punished the author of objectionable written or spoken words after they were written or uttered and then only after a trial by jury. This bill seeks to set up in this country pre-publicity censorship, one of the most effective instruments of European military despotism and I cannot believe that any political party is willing to assume the responsibility for its enactment."

HUGHES BILL REPORTED FAVORABLY.

Full Text of Majority Report—Brief of Film Lawyers Favoring Federal Regulation Incorporated Into Report.

AT LAST the greatly amended Smith-Hughes Bill has been reported favorably to the lower house of Congress. The favorable report of the House Committee on Education is vigorously opposed by a strong and ably-written minority report, which places itself on record as utterly opposed to the principles contained in the Smith-Hughes measure. The text of the majority report follows:

The Committee on Education, to whom was referred H. R. 15462, have considered the same and submit the following report, with the recommendation of the committee that the bill do pass:

The necessity for regulation of motion pictures is apparent. It has been acknowledged by a large majority of the film manufacturers by their voluntary submission of their films to unofficial boards for approval. That the public demands this regulation is demonstrated by the scrupulous regularity with which the producers exhibit such approval at the end of each picture.

"The vicious picture brings the larger return to exhibitor and producer, because it gets the money of the regular customer and the sensation seeker also. This state of affairs constitutes a temptation hard to resist, and, in fact, the production of vicious pictures is constantly increasing just because they are more profitable. If the industry is to endure, if decent people are to stay in the business, this cancer must be cut out. A Federal regulatory commission should prove a fearless surgeon, and we therefore favor such a commission."

This statement of conditions is made in the brief filed with the committee by the legal representatives of four of the ten manufacturers who produce 90 per cent. of the motion pictures in the United States, and by the legal representatives of one of the largest distributors of motion pictures in this country. The brief in full accompanies this report.

This bill has the earnest support of the leading moral and religious organiziations of the nation. A similar bill was unanimously reported to the House from this committee in the last Congress.

With the acknowledgment of the need of regulation both by the motion picture interests and the public they serve, the question arises as to what shall be the regulation and who shall do the regulating. The National Board of Review at New York City is composed of representatives of various moral and civic organizations. The expenses of this board are paid by some of the leading motion picture interests, and it has no legal authority. At the request of the manufacturers this board passes upon the pictures. It is estimated that more than 95 per cent. of all pictures produced in this country are passed upon by this unofficial board.

In addition to this voluntary board there are numerous official censors, both State and municipal. The establishment of such large numbers of these local boards, which are rapidly increasing, clearly demonstrates the inadequacy of the so-called National Board of Review, which by its very unofficial character cannot exercise effective supervision. Though it were to exercise a careful and intelligent supervision over 95 per cent. of all pictures, still there would remain 5 per cent. which could be immoral and unfit to be shown. It is only fair to assume that those pictures which are most objectionable will not voluntarily be submitted for review.

An unofficial board which has not the right to examine 100 per cent. of the pictures is in reality not a board of regulation, but a board of recommendation and approval. As a matter of fact, evidence before the committee discloses that a very considerable percentage of the pictures approved by the unofficial board are declared by the local boards unfit for exhibition. The decision of the National Board of Review is not binding. Pictures which have been disapproved by it are shown to the public.

The character of the motion picture industry renders State and municipal regulation inadequate. Motion picture films are essentially articles of interstate commerce. They are not manufactured for use in any one State or municipality, but practically every picture is exhibited in all of the States of the Union. Innumerable inspections by local boards work great hardships on the industry. In the absence of any official Federal regulation the States and cities are finding it necessary to establish these local boards to prevent the exhibition of immoral, indecent and obscene pictures. The only adequate method of regulating motion pictures is to be had in Federal commission, and the establishment of such a commission is the one way to obviate the necessity for innumerable local boards.

The bill which this report accompanies provides for the appointment by the President of five commissioners, and a supplementary force of deputy commissioners to be appointed by the commission. The commission is required to license each film intended for interstate commerce unless it finds that such film, or part thereof, is obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman, or is a reproduction of an actual bullfight or prizefight, or is of such a character that its exhibition would tend to corrupt morals or incite crime.

The main offices of the commission are to be at Washington, but the commission is granted authority to establish branch offices where necessary. Each branch office is to be in charge of one of the commissioners or a deputy who is clothed with the power of a commissioner. Licenses may be issued by this commissioner or deputy commissioner at such branch office. Should he render an adverse decision on the film, the producer has the right to appeal to the full commission, and in all cases the producer can appeal from decisions of the commission to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

The commission is authorized to issue licenses for pictures which are to be shown only to people over 16 years of age.

It is further provided that a film not having been licensed by the commission shall not be transported in interstate commerce. The exhibition of unlicensed pictures at places of amusement for pay in the District of Columbia or in any of the Territories of the United States, or any place where the local police power is in the jurisdiction of the United States is prohibited.

The penalty for a violation of this act is a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not more than one year, or both, and the confiscation of the films illegally transported, exhibited or changed. Motion picture films meant for use by the learned professions and not for purposes of entertainment are excepted from the operation of this bill. Films known in the industry as "news films"—those depicting current events—may be granted a permit so that they can be shown immediately after manufacture, the commission having authority to withdraw the permit when this privilege is abused. All motion picture films which are in existence at the time this act is approved shall be granted a permit to enter interstate commerce without examination.

License fees of $2 for 1,000 feet of film for originals and 50 cents for each duplicate copy are provided in this bill. It is estimated that 200 original reels of 1,000 feet each are produced weekly in this country. The best figures obtainable indicate that an average of twenty-five duplicates are made of each original. The income from the originals would therefore be $400 per week or $20,800 per annum, and from the duplicates $2,500 per week or $130,000 per annum. The total income is therefore estimated at $150,800. The commission is given authority to revise these fees after six months so that only an amount sufficient to bear the expenses of the commission will be collected.

In the consideration of this measure your committee, after once determining that regulation of motion pictures was a pressing necessity for the protection of the public, and particularly the children, against vicious and immoral pictures, sought to frame a bill which would meet the needs of the public and not work unnecessary hardships on the industry. The measure which your committee reports has the indorsement of leading producers of motion picture films and others engaged in the industry.

The statement of Messrs. Meyers & Clark, attorneys for Paramount Pictures Corporation; E. J. Ludvigh, Ralph A. Kohn, attorneys for Famous Players Film Company; Arthur S. Friend, attorney for Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Inc., and Moritz Rosenthal, attorney for World Film Corporation and Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, follows:

"Hon. D. M. Hughes, Chairman Committee on Education, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

"Sir—The undersigned, representing substantial interests in the motion picture industry, viz., Paramount Pictures Corporation, Famous Players Films Company, Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Inc., World Film Corporation and Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, submit herewith for your consideration a revision of the Smith-Hughes bill (S. 2204; H. R. 456) which, while crude in form, covers practical points of great importance to the trade, and will, we trust, serve as a working basis for a bill to be reported by your committee.

"While the idea of censorship of motion pictures is distasteful to our clients, as well as to others in the business, our support of the principle of regulation embodied in the bill before you is due to our realization of unfavorable conditions in the industry which cannot be corrected by ordinary means nor by sporadic and occasional criminal prosecutions, procured by the better elements of the business or by individual or organized reformers. The motion picture business, now of vast financial importance, has had a mushroom growth and is not yet homogeneous and standardized. Too many persons engaged in the business look upon it as a temporary means of getting money instead of a permanent business, the continued profit of which is dependent upon the quality and character of the productions. They are like miners who quickly exhaust the high-grade ore and leave the low grade on the dump. They are get-rich-quick artists, looking for a quick 'clean-up and a get-away.' They find the opportunity for such methods in producing and exhibiting sensational productions which display scenes of lust and crime.

"Unfortunately, the public is not yet discriminating and goes to see both bad and good, which are usually to be found upon the weekly program of the same theater. Still more unfortunately, the vicious picture brings the larger return to exhibitor and producer, because it gets the money of the regular customer and the sensation seeker also. This state of affairs constitutes a temptation hard to resist and, in fact, the production of vicious pictures is constantly increasing just because they are more profitable. If the industry is to endure, if decent people are to stay in the business, this cancer must be cut out. A Federal regulatory commission should prove a fearless surgeon and we therefore favor such a commission.

"The motion picture business has three well-defined divisions—production, distribution and exhibition. The producer deals with authors and performers and makes the pictures. The distributor contracts with the producer for his product and through local offices, known as exchanges, places it in the hands of the exhibitor. The exhibitor deals directly with the public. All three divisions of the business would be affected adversely by an act providing for Federal regulation which overlooked the practical needs of the business. In order that those needs may be served, we urge you to include in any bill which you may report provisions as follows:

"(1) Local offices for the commission in New York and Los Angeles, so that the producers, most of whom operate in those cities or their vicinity, may have ready access to the supervising authority and prompt consideration of their product.

"(2) Authority to the commissioner or deputy in charge of a local office to grant or refuse a license. This is necessary to procure the prompt action on applications, which the producer requires in order to meet his engagements with the distributor, covering a constant and frequent supply of pictures, and which the distributor requires in order to enable the exchanges to supply to the exhibitor the daily and weekly changes covered by their contracts. Delay would certainly be costly and might be fatal to the organized business.

"(3) A provision for condemnation of specific parts of a film, which, when the same are eliminated, shall become entitled to license.

"(4) A provision for review by the commission when the examiner refuses a license. As the determination of the question whether a film is entitled to license is not based upon exact standards, but is a matter of opinion only, it should not be possible for one man, in his discretion, to destroy the large investment represented by a modern photoplay.

"(5) A provision for an appeal to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia from a refusal to license. As the determination by the commission would be really arbitrary because of the absence of legal tests or recognized standards, it is of the greatest importance that the commission should not be vested with supreme power. Where great property interests are involved, the citizen should always be afforded an opportunity for relief from the court, if he feels that he has been treated unjustly.

"(6) A provision permitting the producer to transport films prior to application for license. The producer should be free to transport a film from its place of manufacture to his home office or other place, where it will be cut and trimmed and otherwise prepared for exhibition.

"(7) A provision for substantial salaries for the commissioners, so that the President can secure the services of capable men, who will accept office as a career and not for the purpose of carrying out preconceived and perhaps prejudicial ideas as to reform of the film industry.

"(8) An examination from the operation of the act of (a) films exhibited in the public prior to its enactment, and (b) films which do not contain any dramatic or fictional element, such as pictures of current events, commonly known as news pictures and topical reviews, and pictures of places and peoples, geographical in nature, and commonly known as travel pictures.

"(9) A provision granting discretion to the commission te issue a permit under which films may be exhibited pending revocation of the permit and application for license. Such a provision would enable the commission to adjust the burden of temporary accumulated applications by granting permits (in effect, temporary licenses) to producers whose history and reputation entitle them to a presumption of complying with the law.

"As we are moved by the sincere purpose of co-operating with your committee in procuring a draft of an act which should prove effective and workable and at the same time fair to decent people in the motion picture business, we respectfully request that when a bill is ready for action by the committee a copy shall be sent to us, and we shall be given an opportunity to appear before the committee and make such suggestions and criticisms as may occur to us.

"Arthur S. Friend, attorney for Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Inc.
"Moritz Rosenthal, attorney for World Film Corporation and Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation.

Farewell Party to Lenore Ulrich

Trade Paper Men and Friends View Her Stage Characterization, and Are Dined at Wallick's.

MEMBERS of the various motion picture trade publications and their friends were afforded a special opportunity of viewing the talents of Lenore Ulrich as displayed on the speaking stage in "The Heart of Wetona," last Friday night, when the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company tendered her a farewell party. The occasion marked one of the closing performances of this play, which terminated a big season at the Lyceum theater on the following evening. Following her performance in "The Heart of Wetona," the guests were invited to dinner at the Hotel Wallick, where a sumptuous repast was served during the presentation of a midnight show, given by the restaurant management.

Miss Ulrich will prepare for her transcontinental trip to the Oliver Morosco studios immediately, and will leave before the end of next week. Those present at her farewell party were: Mr. and Mrs. John Semler, Mr. and Mrs. Harold F. Rendall, Margerie N. Seagrave, Dickson G. Watts, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Blank, Des Moines; Mr. and Mrs. "Wid" Gunning, Estelle J. Murphy, Charles Condon, Pete Milne, C. P. Smaney Bernard P. Fineman, Dave A. Levy, Margerie Ganss, Pete Schmid, Julian M. Solomon, Jr., Irene Page Solomon, Mr. and Mrs. James L. Hoff, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Edwards, Wallace Thompson, Charles E. Moyer, Mr. and Mrs. Carl H. Pierce.

DEFENSE COMMITTEE TO MAKE JAPANESE FILM.

To educate the people as to the great dangers of our unprotected Pacific Coast and a possible uprising of the Japanese in California, the Defense Reports Committee, with headquarters in the Woolworth Building, are making arrangements to take a series of moving pictures of the activities of the Japanese in California. Other films will be made at three strategic points along the Pacific Coast and will depict the lack of proper fortifications to resist an invading army. One reel will show an imaginary bombardment of San Francisco, including the landing of troops, the attack and destruction of buildings. Seven hundred people will be employed in making this picture, which will be exhibited under the direction of the Defense Reports Committee.

New Head for C. & S. S. S. Bureau

F. H. Decker Becomes Successor of Dr. William Carter—Society in Flourishing Condition.

AN IMPORTANT deal in the educational moving picture world was consummated last week when the Church and School Social Service Bureau, Inc., founded two years ago by the Rev. Dr. William Carter, took over the educational moving picture business of the F. H. Decker company and consolidated it with the Church and School Social Service Bureau. This has doubled the film stock of the latter, and also its business operations, as the F. H. Decker company has been serving churches, schools and social service organizations with moving pictures ever since the invention of the moving picture film. Mr. Decker was elected president of the Church and School Social Service Bureau, Dr. Carter declining re-election on account of increasing church duties. A vote of thanks was passed Dr. Carter for the admirable way in which the business had been developed throughout the two years that he had been with it. All of the old organization will be continued as before, with Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst as vice president, Charles G. Bond secretary and General E. A. McAlpin treasurer. The directorate contains in addition to these names those of Hamilton Holt, editor of the Independent; George T. Coxhead and Dr. Carter.

There is an advisory board of sixty-five members, taken from all the great institutions, churches, church boards and social service organizations all over the country. Among the names found there are those of Bishops Quayle and Hughes of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The affairs of the Church and School Company are in a very promising condition, it having established a business which has within the two years of Dr. Carter's development stretched across the continent.

Big Demand for Chaplins

One Hundred and Thirty Prints of "The Floorwalker" Being Shown in New York City.

Unprecedented in the annals of motion picture history are the bookings throughout this country and Canada for the first run releases of the new Chaplin-Mutual features released by the Mutual Film Corporation. One hundred and thirty prints of "The Floorwalker," first of the Chaplin-Mutual features released, approximating 260,000 feet of film, are being shown throughout Greater New York. Twice as many prints would have been necessary to supply the requests for the first run showings in the greater city alone.

It can be stated that, with but one or two exceptions, every representative theater throughout this country and Canada has secured bookings on the new Chaplin-Mutual features.

Up to this time a total of $1,300,000 in bookings on the Mutual-Chaplin comedies for the United States alone has been reached, establishing a new record for similar operations in the film trade.

In addition $175,000 in royalties, according to announcement from the office of John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, and president of the Lone Star Corporation, which holds the contract for Chaplin's year's services, was paid by Henry J. Brock, film exporter. Above and beyond this each Chaplin print will be sold for the Australian market at a price not given out by President Freuler.

BRANCH MANAGER NEWHALL DROWNED.

Geo. H. Newhall, manager for the General Film Company, at Bangor, Maine, was drowned there Wednesday, May 17. With a party of friends, all in canoes, Mr. Newhall and companions started on a fishing trip. They had bearly reached the middle of the stream on the way to fishing when Mr. Newhall's canoe capsized. He was a stout swimmer and appeared for a few moments as if he would succeed in reaching one of the other canoes that had started toward him when they saw his plight, but he was seized with cramps and sank.

Mr. Newhall was a valuable employee of the General Film Company, having entered its service in 1910, at the Boston office. He was transferred to Bangor in April, 1913, to assist in installing a new booking system. After this work was completed, he returned to Boston, where, in May, 1914, he was placed in charge of the booking department and the handling of all reels. He was appointed and assumed the managership of the Bangor branch December 15, 1915. Mr. Newhall was widely known in the motion picture industry and enjoyed the full confidence of every exhibitor with whom he did business.

Pictures at Woman's Convention

Interesting Program Arranged Gives Producers a Splendid Opportunity to Present Their Case to Big Meeting of Club Women.

POINTS IN THE CONVENTION OF INTEREST TO FILM MEN.

Tuesday, May 23.—10 to 11:30 A. M.—Model Motion Picture Performance. Rialto Theater.

Wednesday, May 24.—2:30 P. M.—Talk, "The Attitude of the National Board of Review Towards Censorship as a City Problem," by Dr. Cranston Brenton, president National Board of Review. Civics Conference, Laurel Annex, Hotel Astor.

Saturday, May 27.—4:00 P. M.—Motion Picture Conference, Upper Drill Hall, Seventh Regiment Armory, Park avenue at Sixty-sixth street. "Censorship," Mary Gray Peck; "The National Board of Review and the Child Problem," Orrin G. Cocks, secretary National Board of Review; "Picture Problems of the Producer," John R. Freuler, president Mutual Film Corporation; three-minute speeches by Miss Helen Duey, editor "Better Films" Department, Woman's Home Companion; Miss Mary Newell Eaton, of the Drama League of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Mrs. William Horton Foster, of the Community Service Motion Picture Company of Boston.

Every Day.—Exhibitions of motion pictures, model children's programs, short talks, and general information on motion pictures, in the Upper Drill Hall of the Seventh Regiment Armory.

"THE motion picture conference, to be held at the biennial convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs at the Seventh Regiment Armory, on Saturday, May 27, is the most significant expression of the desire of the public to learn some way in which to communicate to the producers of motion pictures their tastes in films and to let them know that there is a vast army of American citizens which stands back of their efforts to produce worthy pictures," said Mrs. Charles Cartwright, of Minneapolis, Minn., chairman of the sub-committee on drama of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and Miss Helen Varick Boswell, of New York City, chairman of the department of education of the federation, at an informal gathering of people interested in motion pictures at the Hotel Astor, Sunday night, May 20.

"It is to be a joint conference held by the educational, the civics and the drama departments that the motion picture and its relation to American children and life is to be considered on Saturday afternoon. Not only will every available means be taken to acquaint the thousands of women from all states in the Union with every phase of motion picture production and consumption, but a practical, sane and constructive working formula, which will make possible communication between the consumers and producers in the creation and satisfaction of demand, will be aimed for.

"Because we are aiming particularly at the problem of the picture play for children," said Mrs. Cartwright, "there will be naturally many phases of the censorship problem presented. A number of cities, such as Minneapolis, for instance, have worked out a means of local expression in boards of censorship, to which two members of all representative local organization are eligible, which are called upon by the mayor to judge in the case of pictures which have been reported to him as undesirable or harmful. Other women will present their views in the discussion pro and con censorship. But the fact of main importance is this: For the first time in the history of either the motion picture industry or the General Federation, producers of pictures and the women of the country have an opportunity to air their problems at the same time, and an opportunity to come to an understanding."

Miss Helen Varick Boswell, chairman of the educational department, who will open the conference on Saturday, is in opposition to censorship of any kind.

Although the children's film question is to be an all-absorbing one, since the greater percentage of the thirty thousand women who are in attendance at the biennial convention are mothers, the problem of the picture theater in the small town will be discussed thoroughly.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sears, editor of Film Fun, will discuss especially the problem of the women in the town where there is only one picture theater, in her three-minute speech from the floor.

Mary Gray Peck, whose talk at the conference will be on the subject of "Censorship," will discuss the magnitude and popularity of the motion pictures, objections to government censorship, and her ideas of the solution of the problem of gaining a middle ground for producers and theater patrons.

John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, will be the only producer to appear on the program, although all producers have been invited to be in attendance and to express their views in the discussion.

Miss Helen Duey, editor of the "Better Films" Department of the Woman's Home Companion; Miss Mary Newell Eaton, of the Drama League of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Mrs. William Horton Foster, of the Community Service Motion Picture Company of Boston, will all present various phases of successful program presentation, both for children and adults.

While the culmination of the interest of this biennial meeting of the General Federation of Women's Clubs will center in the conference, to be held in the upper drill hall at the Seventh Regiment Armory, on Saturday, there is to be a continuous presentation of motion picture interests during the convention.

On Wednesday, the opening day, at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon, at the civics conference, held under the chairmanship of Mrs. George Zimmermann, Dr. Cranston Brenton, president of the National Board of Review, will discuss the censorship problem from the civic standpoint, and the attitude of the National Board towards it.

All during the week, and until the middle of the next, the Motion Picture Board of Trade will maintain an information bureau in the upper drill hall in the armory. J. W. Binder and other members of the board and men interested in the industry, as well as Mrs. Elizabeth Sears, who is on the committee, will be present, and there is to be a continuous exhibition of picture plays. The board has consented to screen any picture requested. There are also presentations of model children's programs to be made, with suggestions as to how they may be successfully put on.

Motion pictures are being provided for any of the conferences of the convention at which motion pictures will aid in the discussion.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs has only met in New York City once before in its history. It will be many years before it will meet here again, and everyone interested in the motion picture industry is especially invited and urged by Mrs. Charles Cartwright, chairman of the sub-committee on drama, Miss Helen Varick Boswell, chairman of the educational department, and Mrs. George Zimmermann, chairman of the civics department, to be present at the motion picture conference at 4:00 P. M. on Saturday afternoon, next, in the upper drill room at the Seventh Regiment Armory, Park avenue and Sixty-sixth street.

Drugs and Tobacco Barred

Rumor that Theaters Built for the Accommodation of the New Vitagraph Company's Pictures Would Have Commercial Adjunct Denied.

STATEMENTS made in the daily press to the effect that in all houses built for the exhibition of the pictures of the New Vitagraph Company would have as a complement a Riker-Hegeman drug store and a United Cigar Store is denied by the promoters of the new company. Nothing further of a definite nature has been made public since the announcement in the Moving Picture World of May 20.

It is intimated that the board of directors of the greater Vitagraph Company will contain such financiers as C. J. Ryan, a son of Thomas J. Ryan, who is a large holder of American Tobacco Company stock, H. H. Vreeland, former New York traction magnate and B. B. Hampton one of the vice-presidents of the American Tobacco Company. Others named for directors are J. Stuart Blackton, Albert E. Smith and W. W. Irwin, that latter general manager of the V-L-S-E.

Governor Vetoes Censor Bill

In Strong Memorandum Whitman Denounces and Disapproves Cristman-Wheeler Bill—A Blow at the People's Amusement.

GOVERNOR WHITMAN has vetoed the Cristman-Wheeler Censorship Bill, as repeatedly foreshadowed in the columns of the Moving Picture World. The bill came under the thirty-day clause, and would have died automatically if the Governor had merely failed to append his signature. Governor Whitman chose to go on record with a formal and well-reasoned message of disapproval.

In this memorandum the Governor avoids all discussion as to the principle of censorship, but bases his veto on two grounds: He says the bill is badly put together, denying to the film men the right of appeal from the decision of the censors. The second ground is even stronger. He draws attention to the confiscatory amount of the proposed fee of inspection. Comparing it with fees in other censorship states, he denounces it as unjust and highly injurious to the industry. Keen political observer that he is, he comments upon the popularity of the picture, and says that the proposed legislation would close many a theater in this state, depriving the masses of the people of their favorite amusement. The Governor, throughout the memorandum, makes it plain by repeated references that he was much impressed by the showing and the arguments of the film interests at the recent hearing in the Executive Chamber. The full text of the veto reads as follows:

"The framers of this bill seem to me to have disregarded two very important considerations: First, where a tax is imposed upon an industry in which our people are engaged, under ordinary conditions such as prevail to-day, great care should be taken in determining the amount of the tax, to the end that the industry itself shall not be crippled or its development hampered, or that those who use or enjoy the product of the industry shall not be deprived of such use and enjoyment as a result of excessive taxation. Second, that in all legislative acts imposing a tax, the right of redress or appeal in all cases should be preserved to those who will be affected and who may be aggrieved.

"The first objection noted, namely, that it appears to place an unnecessary and onerous tax upon the activity which it proposes to regulate, results in part from apparent carelessness in drafting. The bill requires that films be submitted for examination of the censors, and by making them a part of the censors' official report transmitted to the Regents, precludes their return to the owners. The films after examination would be of absolutely no value to the State, would occupy costly space in preservation, and would impose an expense upon the industry, as stated to me at the hearing, of over a million dollars during the first year of the act if it becomes a law, and over $400,000 annually thereafter.

"To remove any doubt that the bill in its present form would require the retention of films submitted for examination, and in reply to the declaration of one of the speakers at the hearing that the bill could not be so interpreted, I quote the following from an opinion of the Attorney General submitted to me on the measure:

" 'Contention was made at the hearing that a copy of the film must accompany the report to the Regents and that there was no provision made for the return thereof to its owner. My reading of the staute leads me to believe this would be the necessary interpretation of the statute.'

"Before the actual examination of the films the applicants are required to pay the equivalent in trade measurement of ten dollars apiece for original films, and five dollars apiece for duplicate films examined. Based on the number of films examined annually by the Board of Review, and on the estimate that twice the annual number of films examined are in use in the State at any one time, the tax for the examination for the first year is estimated at over a million dollars in addition to the loss by failure of the law to permit the return of the films after examination. The estimated annual tax for examination after the first year is approximately three hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

"As compared with the proposed fees for examination under this bill of $10 for original films and $5 for duplicates, my attention has been called to the censor fees in other States of the union where a moving picture censorship exists. The fees are as follows:

"Pennsylvania—One dollar for each 1,200 feet of original film, one dollar for each 1,200 feet of duplicate prints.

"Ohio—One dollar for each 1,000 feet, whether original or duplicate.

"Kansas—Two dollars for each reel or picture (length not specified).

"Maryland—Two dollars for each 1,000 feet of original film, one dollar for each 1,000 feet of duplicate print.

"The Hughes bill for the Federal censorship of motion pictures which was favorably reported in Congress during the present week, provides a license fee of two dollars for one thousand feet of original film, and fifty cents a thousand feet for each duplicate copy.

"As there are approximately sixteen hundred places for the exhibition of moving pictures in the State (I am dependent for all these statistics upon statements made at the hearing, and not there disputed) the amount of financial burden imposed the first year by the bill under consideration would represent an average actual cost upon each owner of these places of exhibition of between thirteen and fourteen dollars.

"The moving picture theatre, because of the nominal admission fee of from 5 to 10 cents, has become the principal form of entertainment which can generally be enjoyed by persons of very limited means. It is stated by the representatives of the industry—and I believe it to be a fact—that the burden imposed by this bill in respect to the tax on the producers and lessors of these films would be so great as to close up many of these places of exhibition in communities where the expenditure of more than 5 or 10 cents would be prohibitve and increase the admission charges generally to these entertainments.

"My second and most important objection to the form of the bill is to that provision which permits the State Board of Regents to review the acts of the Board of Censors when the latter approve a film, but does not permit a review by the Regents when the censors reject a film. The language of the bill relating to the powers of the Regents in this matter is as follows:

" 'The Regents may, in their discretion, by majority vote, revoke such approval of any such film or reel at any time. Such revocation shall be complete upon personal service of notice of such application upon the proprietor of such film or reel or upon any agent of such proprietor having charge of the leasing, sale or exhibition of any such film or reel.'

"This provision would give the Regents, acting on their own initiative, or upon appeal to them by a patron of any exhibition, the right to disapprove a film previously approved by the censors. But there is no opportunity for appeal to the Regents by an owner who might feel aggrieved by the censors' disapproval of a film, the action of disapproval by the censors being final under the bill as drawn.

"It has been urged that in this end and other respects the bill, if it became a law, would be unconstitutional. I do not think that we need to go even so far as a discussion of constitutionality to satisfy a provision such as this upon the statute books.

"It was stated at the hearing that it was not the intention of the makers of the law either to put an onerous tax upon the industry, or to deny to those who believed themselves aggrieved the right of appeal, and that if the bill should become a law I might be sure that the objectionable features would be eliminated by amendment next year. A practical answer to this objection, so far as the question of an unjust burden on the industry is concerned, is in the fact that the failure to provide for a return of the films would impose a wasteful and unnecessary expense, and one of no value to the State, upon the industry, of the greater part of a million dollars before any amendment could be obtained.

"In addition to this fact I deem it neither wise nor courageous to accept a badly constructed bill in the hope that future legislation may correct its admittedly objectionable features.

"I have found such fundamental objections to the form of this bill, and the procedure under it, that the necessity for censorship has been eliminated as a factor in its consideration.

"If we must have such censorship, it should not be established hurriedly or by an imperfect statute and one which is open to such serious and sound objections as are urged against this measure which I am asked to approve.

"In this connection, however, the fact should not be overlooked that the Hughes bill in Congress, to which I have referred, being now favorably reported out of committee, may be assumed to have an excellent chance of becoming a law at this session. The establishment of a national censorship of moving picture films would undoubtedly make any special legislation in this State for the same purpose unnecessary."

Alice Joyce Joins Vitagraph

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the Vitagraph Company of America that the famous screen star, Alice Joyce, has signed with the company. Since Miss Joyce's statement of a few weeks ago, announcing her intention of returning to the screen, after a year of private life, much interest has surrounded her, and those who have watched her excellent work on the screen for years will welcome her return.

Alice Joyce.

The Vitagraph Company says that this famous player will be starred in the leading female role of their new film masterpiece, "The Battle Cry of War," which is a sequel to the world-renowned "The Battle Cry of Peace." This role will afford Miss Joyce excellent opportunities in which to display the talents which endeared her to the public before her retirement.

Extensive preparations are under way for the filming of this production, and it promises to rival "The Battle Cry of Peace," in every phase of excellence. Miss Joyce began work at the Vitagraph studios on Monday, May 29.

MISS PURVIANCE STILL IN CHAPLIN COMPANY.

Reports circulated throughout the country to the effect that Edna Purviance, Charles Chaplin's leading woman, had left or was about to leave the Chaplin-Mutual Company, are denied both by the Lone Star Corporation, which holds Chaplin's $670,000 contract for his service for the next year, and by the Mutual Film Corporation. Miss Purviance is now at work with Chaplin and the other members of the Chaplin-Mutual Company at the Los Angeles studios, on the second of the Chaplin features, which will be released by Mutual June 12 under the title of "The Fireman."

Thomas Dixon Lauds the Cinema

Author of Many Novels and Plays Finds the Screen to Be the Greatest Medium for Epic Drama.

By Lynde Denig.

PERHAPS Thomas Dixon's "The Fall of a Nation" will grip the public as has "The Birth of a Nation," but whether it succeeds or fails the author's faith in the unparalleled power of the cinema (he prefers the word to motion pictures) for the expression of epic ideas will remain unshaken.

To talk with Mr. Dixon for five minutes is to realize the strength and to feel the inspiration of his conviction. Never for a moment could he be mistaken for a manufacturer of photoplays, the maker of celluloid goods to meet the demand of the market. Just at present he is in the atmosphere of the trade, but not of it; he is a creative artist who has won renown through three mediums—the novel, the stage and the screen, and he will tell you, with a ring of sincerity in his voice and a flash of idealism in his eyes, that the cinema can be made to give the strongest interpretation of great world movements. And the natural ally of the motion picture is music.

Thomas Dixon.

The business of making films does not interest Mr. Dixon in the least; but the art of using the screen to stir the emotions of men and women as they cannot be stirred through other means concerns him vitally. "Six pictures of the quality of 'The Birth of a Nation' might be displayed in New York at the same time and there would be an audience for every one of them," he said. "There is not the slightest danger of overproduction of dramas with a big idea handled in a big way. We only need to conceive them.

"No one questions for a moment the superiority of the cinema for the presentation of spectacles, but spectacular effects are not the end and aim of a producer who understands the psychology of an audience and strives to interest the mind and reach the emotions. If a stage play, or a screen play, or a novel misses the human note it is a failure in the larger sense. I really believe that the biggest things in 'The Fall of a Nation' are the smallest things, the scenes in which a smile and a tear are combined. I would sacrifice any part of the picture rather than three minutes of heart-gripping action that should make an audience weep. One must be made to feel personal griefs and joys before he can be held by a story of epic scope."

Mr. Dixon drew from his pocket the letterhead of the National Drama Corporation, of which he is director general, with a contract calling for his literary output during the next five years. Pointing to a design giving equal prominence to a camera and a lyre, he continued: "That expresses my idea of the importance of music in a cinema production. The first time I saw 'The Birth of a Nation' it was unaccompanied; the second time there was a full orchestra and I realized from that moment how indispensable music is in bringing out the full value of a cinema drama.

"In writing for the screen I bear in mind the need for visualizing ideas in physical action. Always there must be action, but it is action with a mental motive behind it and the function of music is to assist in interpreting this motive to the audience. America boasts of no more gifted composer than Victor Herbert and none more certain of catching the American spirit. When I had written my scenario for the second time I sent him a copy that he might begin work on the score, the aim being to express through music the varying moods of the picture. Mr. Herbert, following out this plan, and with only the scenario for a guide, wrote exactly 1,285 pieces of music, and since that time the most effective of his compositions have been synchronized with the completed drama."

While having the highest regard for the technical efficiency of the best of our directors and admitting that some players possess a God-given gift, an almost telepathic quality by which they are able to communicate emotion, Mr. Dixon is convinced that the great demand is not for skilled directors, or exceptional actors; rather it is for writers with ideas and the power to visualize them. He is not in sympathy with those who contend that the cinema is by its very nature more akin to the novel than the drama. He finds that the fundamental rules applied to dramatic construction for the stage hold good in the new medium; but what is suitable material for one is not necessarily adaptable to the other.

"It is not surprising that many good stage plays make poor pictures," he went on, "because the action they contain is inseparable from the dialogue, and robbed of the dialogue we have an unconvincing plot without adequate motivation. The screen is not the place for the presentation of a drama arising out of complex personalities demanding verbal explanation; but it is the best of all places for the display of the great social forces that have moved and are moving the world.

"Had I prepared 'The Fall of a Nation' for the stage, the scope of my story must have been seriously curtailed and I figure that the chances of success would have been about one in ten. A prologue such as you will see in the picture would have been out of the question, yet it is absolutely vital in placing the subsequent story in the correct perspective. It might be compared to glasses designed to bring the dramatic action into focus.

"How many Americans really know the cardinal principles on which this republic is founded; the causes that led their ancestors to flee from Europe and establish a home in the new world? Vaguely they understand that this country must be defended from invasion, but the danger may appear far distant and impersonal. They talk glibly of the Monroe Doctrine without knowing what inspired it. Perhaps they are patriotic, yet ignorant of what patriotism means to them and their families.

"The prologue in 'The Fall of a Nation,' in scenes so swift, varied and pictorial that they cannot become wearisome, shows just why the United States came into being and why every man and woman is concerned in their preservation. Here is a valuable background that could not be supplied on the stage. In fifteen minutes the audience is given a book full of reasons for preparedness.

"Then the story opens. We are unprepared. The nation, recruited from many sources, having in common a desire for life, liberty and happiness, is rent by sedition and treason. An invading force lands on Long Island and we are conquered; the descendants of the people who escaped tyranny in Europe are oppressed by the conqueror until they arise, a united nation, to regain their independence."

Mr. Dixon chose to write on preparedness, not because it happens to be a much discussed subject, but because he regards it as the most vital issue of the day. Of the appeal of the theme there can be no question and he is equally confident of other appeals. "There is a strong feminist element," he explained; "there is accurate characterization, and I believe we have succeeded in expressing great national problems in intimate personal terms. We have tried above all else to make audiences recognize their own part in the drama being enacted before their eyes.

"The battle scene, staged at a cost of $31,000, is the greatest ever made, bar none. Adjoining the field used for 'The Birth of a Nation' is a still larger tract, which a number of western directors pronounced impracticable for photographic purposes; nevertheless we used this land with results that I think will fully justify our choice."

Finally, the author-director paid a high tribute to the four players interpreting the leading characters. They are not recognized stars—not yet, at least—but in each he found that indefinable quality through which the picture on the screen may become a mirror of the mind.

THEATER CLUB ENTERTAINS FANNIE WARD.

The Theater Club of New York, a society organization interested in the drama, entertained Miss Fannie Ward of the Lasky company as the guest of honor at its meeting in New York at the Hotel Astor ball room on May 16. Miss Ward is spending a few weeks' vacation in New York City after seven months of constant acting before the camera at Hollywood, Cal.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS BACK CLUBWOMEN.

Eight Weeks' Trial of "Better Films" Ideas so Successful That Plans Are Made for Continuation.

THE "better films" movement is to be a permanent institution in Cleveland. This was determined at a mass meeting in the library of the Chamber of Commerce May 10, when the civics committee of the Cleveland Federation of Woman's Clubs submitted a report on the trial of the "better films" programs shown for eight weeks in various Cleveland theaters and submitted a plan to perpetuate their movement.

The statement of Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, that "The exhibitors will back these women to the end," is an index of the success of the trial of the selected programs.

The mass meeting was called by Miss Genevieve Cline, president of the Federation of Women's Clubs, to discuss the plan to make permanent the work which has been accomplished by the civics committee of the federation in conducting the "better films" campaign. The permanent plan was presented by Miss Bertelle M. Lyttle, chairman of the civics committee.

It provides that the films desired on the special programs be taken out of the regular service; that the exchanges be guaranteed payment for such films; that no picture theater be asked to show a selected program without a guarantee from the club women that a definite number of tickets will be sold; that a way of advertising be devised in which the name "better films" will not be used by reason of prejudice which has arisen against the movement in the minds of persons unfamiliar with the objects of the movement; that three committees handle the programs, namely, a committee on films, a committee on distribution and a committee on publicity.

The clubwomen admitted that while the exhibitors had done their part in the eight-weeks test of the "better films" programs, the clubwomen as a body and the theater patrons as a whole had not responded as readily as was desired. This was held to be due to the impression in the public mind that the "better films" campaign was a reform movement and therefor to be shunned.

Cleveland, Lakewood and East Cleveland are to be included in the activities of the clubwomen and August 1 has been tentatively selected as the date for the permanent work to begin.

The permanent plan as outlined by the clubwomen is to have the three committees on films, distribution and publicity organized under one chairman and an assistant. It also provides: That the film or program division be intrusted with the duty of selecting films to meet certain standards, to group them suitably and furnish the material for advertising; that the committee on distribution or contracts arrange for use of the films desired and for their exclusive control in certain territory if possible. The publicity committee will supervise all advertising and arrange all bookings with theater owners in accordance with the work of the contract committee.

At the meeting where this plan was outlined, club women of Lakewood through Mrs. H. A. Worman, reported that their efforts to have special programs for children shown on specified days had met with unusual success and would be continued.

Miss Lyttle in submitting her report, outlined the reasons which led the club women to undertake a study of moving picture problems.

"An investigation as to why the censorship of motion pictures is being criticised by both its friends and foes," she said, "led to a study of the general motion picture difficulty. One phase, the health and morality problems resulting from theaters improperly ventilated, lighted or otherwise carelessly managed, has received much attention and has become now a matter of police supervision and public efficiency.

"The grave problems now are how to minimize the harm of motion pictures and how the public may know the character of the show and thus select and enjoy the good. These are problems for the adult as well as for the child, although the public conscience is feeling it most acutely for the child."

GREAT ZEAL OF CHICAGO EXHIBITORS.

Widespread Special Advertising of the Sixth Annual National Convention and Exposition—Many Attractive and Original Events Promised.

THE various committees in charge of the preparation for the Sixth Annual Convention and Exposition of the M. P. E. L. of America in Chicago, at the Coliseum, from July 10 to 18, inclusive, are making every effort to surpass all events of the kind hitherto held.

Two thousand slides of attractive and beautiful design will soon be in readiness to be sent to different theaters throughout the country, calling for hearty support and to aid in advertising the convention and exposition far and wide.

Every moving picture theater owner or manager who receives these slides, will please consider it his duty to see that they are shown at his presentations, and do all in his or her power to boost the convention and exposition.

A "Beauty Contest" will be held at the exposition, and, although an announcement to this effect was made only a week ago, inquiries regarding the rules and regulations of the contest are coming in rapidly.

One moving picture beauty who resides in the south, has written a very plaintive appeal asking the committee in charge not to draw the color line, as she believes she has a good chance of cutting out even Mary Pickford. She states that with the use of grease paint she could pass as a white lady in the picture. This plan was suggested to her by her "man," who is sure if the scheme can be worked out his "gal" will carry off the plum.

Aspiring photoplay writers, who thus far have been unable to market any of their scenarios, will also be given an opportunity to make good. A prize of $100 will be offered for the best scenario, and a prize scenario committee has been appointed to select the winner. Full information regarding this contest can be obtained by writing to the Scenario Committee, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, 1413 Masonic Temple, Chicago.

Wm. J. Sweeney, Louis H. Frank, Fred W. Hartmann and Fred Schaefer, the committee appointed to attend the two recent expositions in New York City, have reported very favorably regarding the sale of space in the Coliseum, for the exposition. Some very valuable contracts have been secured, and the committee will return to Chicago about Monday, May 22.

All indications, even thus early, point to a record-breaking attendance of exhibitors, manufacturers, and all connected with the trade at the coming exposition and convention. The members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Illinois already feel that the demands upon them are becoming very heavy, and they are sending out signal calls for help to all brother exhibitors in the surrounding territory.

It is the desire of those who have charge of the event to inform all visitors that no effort will be spared to make them feel at home just as soon as they arrive in Chicago. It would be a fine thing, many of the members think, if about one hundred exhibitors of the city and state would volunteer their services to the convention and exposition committees as a reception committee, and pay special attention to the entertainment and comfort of guests during their stay. This, no doubt, will be done, and visitors may rest assured that in addition to the necessary work of the convention there will be sufficient time devoted to introducing visitors to the beauty spots of Chicago, including our beaches, parks, museums, art institutes, universities, etc., etc. Entertainments of various kinds will be furnished and every pains taken to show a hospitality worthy the name of Chicago.

PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION.

Arrangements Being Rapidly Completed for Big Meeting of Exhibitors in Pittsburgh.

ARRANGEMENTS are progressing rapidly for the Pennsylvania State Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, to be held in Pittsburgh June 27, 28 and 29. For the meetings and the exposition one of the largest and finest buildings in the city has been secured, the new Moose Temple. A beautiful auditorium seating over 1,000, beside numerous parlors, and 6,000 square feet of floor space will be available.

Many applications for exhbit space have already been received by Secretary James Delves, who advises manufacturers to secure their space as far in advance as possible, communicating with him at the league headquarters, Penn avenue and Ninth street, Pittsburgh. It is pointed out that Pittsburgh is located in the center of two-thirds of the motion picture exhibitors of the United States, and that within one night's ride from any direction there is over two-thirds of the population of the country, or 70,000,000 people. Pittsburgh is, therefore, considered the city most favorably located for a convention of the industry. From all advance indications the convention will far surpass any yet undertaken by the Pennsylvania League, and will be outrivaled only by the national gatherings. Many exhibitors from Virginia, West Virginia, eastern Ohio and western Maryland have signified their intention of being present.

Within the next week or ten days representatives of the league will go to New York city to confer with the producers and the Motion Picture Board of Trade to arrange for some of the leading stars to attend the convention. Co-operation has been promised by the municipal authorities, Mayor Armstrong having agreed to deliver the address of welcome and other state and city officials will speak. It is needless to say, "Depend upon it, heavy guns will be trained upon censorship at this convention!"

KENTUCKY EXHIBITORS HOLD FIFTH CONVENTION.

At One-Day Session of State League, Louis J. Dittmar Re-elected President.

At the fifth annual convention of the Kentucky Branch No. 7, Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, held at the Seelbach hotel, Louisville, on Friday, May 12, the following officers were re-elected: President, Louis J. Dittmar, Louisville; vice-president, J. H. Stamper, Jr., Lexington; treasurer, H. B. Strube, Louisville, and secretary, Fred J. Dolle, Louisville.

The session lasted from 2 o'clock until 5 o'clock in the afternoon and was given over to general discussions of local, state and national conditions. The meeting was of an executive nature with no one present except members.

In spite of the fact that the meeting was held the day previously to the running of the forty-second Kentucky Derby there was a very small attendence from out in the state, although the local attendence was good. No sessions were held on Saturday, the business all being rushed through at the one session.

SCHENECTADY EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

A meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Schenectady was held on Tuesday, May 16, for the purpose of organizing an exhibitors' association. The following officers were elected. John F. Mynderse, president; Gunner Bergstrom, vice-president; Jacob M. Freed, secretary and treasurer. The association has been joined by the following exhibitors outside of the officers just named: W. A. Zeiser, Grand and Central Park theaters; Frank X. Shap, Pearl theater; Morris I. Silverman, Happy Hour theater; Vincent G. Bergstrom, Majestic theater; Fred A. Blumer, Jr., Lincoln theater; John F. Walker, of the same theater; Frank X. Breymaier, Orpheum theater; G. H. Roberts, Temple theater. This means that ten out of sixteen exhibitors have joined. Secretary Freed writes to The Moving Picture World: "With the spirit shown by those present, it is bound to be a success." A committee for securing more members was appointed and is actively at work. Application for a charter has been made to the state president, Lee A. Ochs.

EXHIBITORS TO SEE "MARIA ROSA."

When the exhibitors of Iowa meet at Des Moines for the annual convention from May 22 to 25, the principal photoplay feature that will be shown to them will be the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company production of Geraldine Farrar in "Maria Rosa." At the offices of the Lasky Company in New York word was received this week from A. D. Flintom of Kansas City, distributor of Paramount Program, in a territory of considerable size in the Middle West, that he had completed arrangements also for the exhibiting of "Maria Rosa" at the Omaha Convention of Nebraska exhibitors as well.

MICHIGAN CONVENTION DATE NAMED.

Peter J. Jeup, treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, has issued a strong appeal to the exhibitors of the State of Michigan to attend the state convention which will be held at Bay City on June 13 and 14. Mr. Jeup points out the present necessity for a strong organization of exhibitors, intimating that it was never greater than now.

Plans of Bureau of Standards

New Board of Trade Committee Outlines What It Intends to Accomplish.

THE Board of Trade is addressing itself to the task of standardization. A bureau of standards has been duly organized. The proposed plans of this bureau have been set forth by C. Francis Jenkins, its chairman.

"The purpose of the bureau is to bring about such a unification of processes, mechanisms and practices as will insure to the beginner as well as the masters of business in our industry a larger net return than now prevails," he said.

"Its edicts may not be mandatory, but rather express the composite thought of the business at large, a sort of clearing house for trade expression.

"In the course there will be published a descriptive list of adopted standards and approved ideas, methods and processes, but we will condemn nobody's device or idea at any time. Our first work will be the establishment of mechanical standards, some to take effect immediately, others later from time to time as will cause the least possible disturbance in the business.

"Every concern known to the bureau is or will be asked to designate an expert to become a member of the sub-committee relating to that branch of the industry. The sub-committee will select a representative to become a member of the general committee, and report thereto the recommendations of the sub-committee.

"The general committee will consist for the present of representatives of the following general divisions of the industry; raw material, production, projection, exhibitors, machine manufacturers, electrical goods makers, exchanges, lens manufacturers, camera manufacturers, reel manufacturers, fire underwriters, storage and containers, transportation, theater construction and arrangement and miscellaneous.

F. H. Richardson was elected secretary of the committee.

H. H. BUXBAUM AND C. C. KNAPP WIN PROMOTIONS.

The latest beneficiary of the General Film merit policy is H. H. Buxbaum, who has just been placed in charge of the company's New York exchange. Mr. Buxbaum's affiliation with the General Film Company dates back several years. He has been steadily advanced to positions of trust, and this last advancement will doubtless lead to something still better. A few years ago Mr. Buxbaum was manager of the General Film Company's Fourth avenue branch and was transferred from there to Minneapolis, where he was in charge of the office, and was then called East to take charge of the Philadelphia branch. When it was decided to consolidate the two branch exchanges in New York, it was Mr. Kleine's opportunity to reward Mr. Buxbaum and at the same time fill the position with an employee who had demonstrated exceptional ability.

Another promotion that is worthy of mention is announced in the assignment of C. C. Knapp as manager of the General Film Company's office at Minneapolis, succeeding J. T. Van Meter, resigned. Mr. Knapp has a splendid record as a salesman, stands well with the exhibitors in his territory, and appears to be slated for advancement.

Detroit Entertains Players

First Annual Ball of Wolverine Screen Club Is Successful—Visitors Attend Early Morning Banquet.

WHEN the members of the Detroit Screen Club decided to give a dance at the Arcadia on May 15 something was said about inviting screen stars. The following week Harry I. Garson, secretary of the organization, on his own initiative, jumped on to New York and spent three days making the rounds of the different producing companies and requesting stars for the affair. Nearly all of the companies promised to send some one.

The ball took place as scheduled. The screen stars consisted of Clara Kimball Young, Alice Brady, Claire Whitey and Gertrude McCoy. Others in the special party were Mr. and Mrs. Lewis J. Selznick, Harry I. Garson, John H. Kunsky, George W. Trendle, George Weeks, Abe Shapiro, F. Richard Schayer, publicity manager for Miss Young, and Harry Reichenbach, publicity manager for Alice Brady. The party was met at the station with motor cars and taken to breakfast. Publicity Managers Schayer and Reichenbach got busy immediately with the local newspapers, each boosting his particular screen star. The afternoon papers printed columns about the players—all of them—and ball that evening. The whole town had gone "screen" crazy before the end of the day. The players were entertained during the day with luncheon parties and automobile rides.

The ball at the Arcadia was attended by about 2,500 persons which included all the film exchange men and leading exhibitors. The women looked their prettiest in evening gowns of the latest materials and fashions. There were two orchestras—one of forty and one of twenty pieces. They were stationed at each end of the hall so that there was continuous music for dancing. Admission was $2 per couple —and everybody said it wasn't enough. All of the boxes were taken by members of the Screen Club and accomodated six to the box. The hall was attractively decorated for the occasion with American flags and red, white and blue bunting.

Oil paintings of several dozen screen players were hung around the hall and were draped with flags—all of which gave the atmosphere of a screen event. Dancing started at 8:30 and lasted until 4 o'clock in the morning. The executive committee, comprising Harry I. Garson, chairman; G. Spencer Trask, A. J. Gilligham, president of the club; James Kent, George Weeks, M. S. Bailey and others were in the foyer entrance and greeted their many friends as they passed into the hall. At 10:30 the players arrived and were ushered to a private waiting room. One by one they were escorted by members of the Screen Club to their respective places in the "Screen Stars' Box," the band playing an appropriate march. As the players reached the center of the hall they were announced by A. J. Gilligham, president of the club. The Players remained until the last piece was played by the orchestra. The dance was a great success.

The members of the Screen Club and the film visitors went to the Hotel Pontchartrain at 1:30 in the morning and sat down to a banquet. The green room on the convention hall floor was engaged. The hotel management did itself proud in the arrangement of the tables and the entire handling of the affair. The main course was guinea hen with mushrooms under glass. During the serving of the courses there was vaudeville and cabaret entertainment. There was something doing every minute—about thirty entertainers being on the program. It was about 3 o'clock before the conclusion of the banquet, and for the ensuing two hours the guests danced. It was well toward 5 o'clock before the last person had left the hall.

So successful were the dance and the banquet that already members of the Screen Club are talking about the second annual dance in 1917. An extra word of praise is justly due to Harry I. Garson—who was responsible for the coming of the screen stars to Detroit. The other members of the entertainment committee also worked untiringly to make both affairs a success.

On Monday and Tuesday, Clara Kimball Young appeared personally twice each day on the stage of the Broadway-Strand theater. General Manager Garson announced her appearance in the daily newspapers with the result that the house was packed to overflowing at each performance. She was enthusiastically greeted each time.

Tuesday was spent by the screen stars in sightseeing and visiting the various local playhouses. The entire out-of-town delegation departed for New York Tuesday evening on the 7:10 train.

Producers Out of Touch With Public

Grace Valentine Declares Manufacturing Authorities Fail to Appreciate the Progressiveness of Smaller Communities.

GRACE VALENTINE, who is starred with Lionel Barrymore in "Dorian's Divorce," a forthcoming Metro-Rolfe wonderplay, and who has achieved marvelous success on both the speaking stage and the screen, declares motion pictures are going to stride ahead when directors, producers and manufacturers get the correct angle on the public's intelligence. Many of them, she asserts, "point their cameras too low," so to speak, fearing they will shoot over the heads of the common people.

"It is the most natural thing in the world that the makers of motion pictures should make this mistake and place a false estimate upon the public," Miss Valentine said. "A great many of those responsible for making pictures have lost their perspective for the simple reason that they have not rubbed shoulders with the real people for many years. Like myself, they are from 'there,' as I used to hear a man express any distant point when I was a girl. In other words, they came from either a small place in the west, south or New England, from a provincial neighborhood in New York City, or from some small community on the other side of the Atlantic.

"This is the only reason I can explain why we are not keeping up with the country at large in the matter of offering better and greater pictures. They can be made, but the producer is afraid to make them. It makes my heart ache when I hear someone suggest something good around a studio, and I have worked around several of the representative studios and they are all alike, and then hear a corking good idea crabbed with the rubber-stamped trite remark:

"'That's dandy, but it will go over their heads. You must remember we are appealing to the masses, and the "hicks" won't get that. You have to spell everything out and give them a blue print, otherwise they will not understand.'

"Every word of that is based on fallacy. I know, for I have just come back from a visit among my relatives and friends in Indiana. And I want to tell the truth, they made me feel ashamed of myself, for my downright ignorance. The motion picture men are mostly from 'there,' they do not understand, unless they have been back in recent years, how conditions have changed. They measure everything as it was when they were young and left to make their way in the great unknown world. To their minds the women back there are holding quilting parties, and corn huskings and watermelon frolics are their only dissipation. Nothing of the kind. I thought so, too, but I got an awful bump.

"The same crowd of girls that I grew up with are so far ahead of me that I bow my head in shame. They have their clubs that study Ibsen, Shaw, Maeterlinck, Goethe, Schopenhauer, and loads of others I never heard of. In addition to this I found many of them as blase as the average New York girl. If we only stop to reason, we can account for this change of affairs, in a way. We must remember the recent inventions that have been such valuable educational factors in this country.

"Do you think the plow boy plods his way across the fields nowadays, whistling 'The Arkansaw Traveler?' Not on your life. The chances are ten to one that he will be whistling 'In the Hall of the Mountain King,' by Grieg, from 'Peer Gynt,' or doing a good imitation of Caruso.

"The old gray mare has been relegated to the boneyard for a modern car, and circulating libraries are within easy access, what with the rural free delivery. And last, but not least, they have motion pictures, the very best and lots of them. There are few things in the truly rural district to detract from the regular motion picture entertainment. As a result, the residents there are authorities on the subject.

"It is fatal to underestimate the public's taste and intelligence. It offends and it never entertains. Success awaits the company or companies that drops the plumb and gets the right angle on the so-called common or garden variety of folk."

GYPSY O'BRIEN JOINS VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

Miss Gypsy O'Brien, who created an enviable reputation for herself in "Devil's Garden," a recent metropolitan production at the Harris theater at West Forty-second street, New York, has joined the Vitagraph Company under the direction of Wally Van. The acquisition of Miss Gypsy O'Brien makes another step forward in the Vitagraph policy of continually perfecting and improving its productions.

Gaumont Has Rare Indian Subjects

In "See America First" It Will Show Official Pictures of the United States Government.

THE value of the motion picture as an ethnological record has again been demonstrated, this time by the United States Department of the Interior in filming the very last ceremony of the Medicine Elk as performed by the Blackfeet Indians. The Department of the Interior has been actively engaged for some time in making motion pictures of parks, forest reserves, reclamation projects and other interests it protects. It was a piece of rare good fortune that H. T. Cowling, cameraman for the government, happened to be taking pictures in Glacier Park at the time Many Tail-Feathers smoked the Medicine Elk pipe for the last time. These pictures have been turned over to the Gaumont Company, and have been released with the authorization of the government. They form a historical record of great importance.

The Medicine Elk ceremony makes a most interesting release in the new series of Mutual pictures called "Reel Life," manufactured by the Gaumont Company. It is sacred to the Blackfeet Indians, being performed on behalf of all those in the tribe who are sick. Until it was caught by a government camera the ceremony had not been performed for ten years, both because the tribe is disintegrating and because only one medicine man, Many Tail-Feathers, was authorized to perform it. As the medicine man died in January, leaving no successor in the art, the weird incantation has passed into history.

These pictures of Indian customs are only one of many releases the government is making through the Gaumont Company. The Blackfeet Indians are shown in the "Reel Life" series. The majority of the government pictures, however, will be released in the Gaumont scenic series, "See America First." Among the pictures already on the screen are the notable views of Yosemite Valley. These pictures have been chosen for prominent places on the programs of such metropolitan theaters as the Strand and the Rialto.

The next United States government release through Gaumont will be "Yellowstone National Park." This is a highly entertaining feature of such length that it has been divided into two parts. There are pictures of all the beauties of nature in this wonderland and also of the great hotels maintained for the convenience of the thousands of visitors who throng the park each season.

The government pictures are being used with great success by exhibitors who make up special programs. They have a particular appeal to children. The Decatur theater, Brooklyn, reports that it always turns patrons away when these pictures are specially advertised for matinees.

MISS WIRTH IN THANHOUSER FILM.

Unknown but to a few of her intimate friends, Miss Louise Daniel Wirth, niece of Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, and prominently connected with social and diplomatic life of Washington, has become a motion picture player. Miss Wirth, who was engaged by the Thanhouser studio several months ago, will make her first appearance in "For Uncle Sam's Navy," a two-part drama to be released by the Mutual Film Corporation the latter part of this month.

New Kalem Player Reaches New York

Ivy Close Will Rest Until June 1, While Supporting Cast Is Being Chosen.

IVY CLOSE, the English actress who is to take up work for Kalem, is here. After an exciting time escaping from Ireland during the recent rebellion, and a disappointingly uneventful trip across the ocean, the player has arrived to take up her screen work under the Kalem standard.

Miss Close has planned a few weeks of combined rest and sight-seeing before taking up her screen work, probably making her debut before a Kalem camera about June 1. Meanwhile plans are being perfected for the one-reel comedy vehicles in which she will be seen and the selection of the supporting cast is being pushed.

When asked as to the supporting cast, Mr. Wright of the Kalem Company declared: "We are not yet ready to announce the names, but when we do you will find that we have continued the policy that insured the success of the Sis Hopkins Comedies, and that is the placing of a real player, a capable fun-maker, in every part. Kalem does not believe in the policy of making large expenditures for a star and then spoiling that star's work by inferior support."

BROCK GETS AUSTRALIA FOR CHAPLINS.

The sum of $175,000 has been paid in royalties for the right to release the new Mutual Chaplin comedies in Australia, according to announcement from the offices of John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, and president of the Lone Star Corporation, which holds the $670,000 contract for Chaplin's year's services. The figure is presented as an index of the big earning power of the Chaplin product. The royalty was paid by Henry J. Brock, film exporter. Above and beyond this each Chaplin comedy print will be sold for the Australian market at a price not given out by Mr. Freuler. A total of $1,300,000 in bookings on Chaplin Mutual comedies for the United States has been reached. This is said to esablish a record for similar operations in the film trade.

During the San Francisco engagement of "The Cock of the Walk" Otis Skinner has given several mornings and early afternoons at the studio of the California Motion Picture Corporation to acquainting himself with the technical requirements of motion picture craft. This is in preparation for his forthcoming appearance in the big film dramatization of "Kismet."

In discussing his observations Mr. Skinner said: "I consider it a bit of genuinely good fortune to have reached San Francisco while the California firm was still busied with Otis Skinner, Beatriz Michelena and Andrew Robson.

Beatriz Michelena in "The Woman Who Dared." From the evidence of the few scenes I saw the production is one of real magnitude. Miss Michelena is a delightful actress and her work before the camera is nothing short of a revelation. I gleamed a lot of information that will stand me in good stead when I begin my work in "Kismet."

In the accompanying picture may be seen Mr. Skinner, Beatriz Michelena and Andrew Robson.

Variety in Pathe Program

Serials, Comedies, Educational, Scenic and News Subjects Abound in List for First Half of June.

WITH eight reels of "serials that pay," as Pathe calls them, two reels of slapstick comedy, a Goldberg animated cartoon comedy, four issues of the Pathe News, and five split-reel scenic and educational pictures, the House of Pathe shows its hand to the exhibitor for the two weeks to June 17.

In the week beginning June 5, "The Double Resurrection," an episode of "The Iron Claw," will be released. The same week will see the release of the fifth drama in the "Who's Guilty?" series—"Sold Out." In all of these two-reel dramas Anna Nilsson is featured with Tom Moore. The rest of the casts keep changing, among the supporting artists' names appearing such well-known ones as Octavia Handworth, Alan Hale, etc.

"Luke Laughs Last" is the title of a slapstick one-reeler. It features Harold Lloyd, the well-known "Lonesome Luke" of the comedies produced by the Rolin Film Company for Pathe. "The Fatal Pie" is a Goldberg Animated Cartoon Comedy. "The Fatal Pie," to use Goldberg's own ludicrous description (which, by the way, appears as titles in the film) tells, for instance, of "Lotta Mincemeat," admired for her charm and refinement, who eats soup without waking the baby and does not look for gold-fish in the finger-bowl. Attached to the cartoon is a part-reel entitled "Some Fresh Water Fishes," an educational film.

On this same program is another split reel. "The Zinc Mines of Lang Hit," an educational film of French Indo-China, showing the methods employed in taking zinc from the mines is interesting because of the difference of Oriental method from ours. This is on the same reel with "Around Mount Fuji," a scenic picture of picturesque Japan.

Two issues of the Pathe News, No. 46, on Wednesday, June 7, and No. 47, on Saturday, June 10, round out the week.

For release in the week beginning Monday, June 12, Pathe offers "The Unmasking of Davy," another episode of "The Iron Claw." Next follows "Sowing the Wind," a drama of the "Who's Guilty?" series. "An Awful Romance" is the title of a one-reel slapstick comedy produced by the Mittenthal Film Company for Pathe, and featuring James Aubrey, the ludicrous and lovable "Heinie" of old "Heinie and Louie" fame.

There is also a split-reel educational and scenic, "France's Canine Allies" and "The Gorges of Colorado."

Wednesday, June 14, brings with it the release of Pathe News No. 48, and Saturday, June 17, the release of Pathe News No. 49.

WARNING AGAINST A SWINDLER.

Complaints come from various parts in the east of the operations of a young man who is victimizing motion picture exhibitors with an attractive program proposition. The alleged swindler, who is described as a young man of medium height and dark complexion, approaches exhibitors with an offer to supply 8,000 printed programs with artistic cuts for $6.50 a week. When the exhibitor expresses surprise at this extraordinary bargain the glib young man says that national advertisers patronize his program, which makes it possible to get them so cheaply. The man claims to represent the "Kings Program Service," 11 Chapin Building, Buffalo, N. Y. To Alfred Murray, of the Montauk theater, at Passaic, N. J., the swindler said his name was William R. Danford. Mr. Murray says he wrote to the "Kings Program Service" when no programs were forthcoming and never received any answer. There was a New York address on the blank order to be signed by the exhibitor. This address was 402 Fifth avenue. Inquiries at the New York address developed the fact that such a man had desk room in the building some time before the swindling.

RIALTO'S FIRST PICTURE NEARLY READY.

"The House of Mirrors," the first picture to be released by the Popular Pictures Corporation, will be ready for showing within a few days. This picture is the first to be produced by the Rialto Film Corporation. Marshall Farnum, the director, was given a free hand in its making.: Work has been begun on the second picture. The cast of the latest production contains several well known film favorites.

REMOVAL NOTICE.

The American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., producer of "The Battles of a Nation," announces its removal to new offices at the Godfrey Building, Seventh avenue and 49th street.

Thanhouser's June Program

List of Subjects to Be Released by New Rochelle Organization the Coming Month.

THERE will be two Thanhouser classics in June, the first releases of the new feature edition. The first of these is "The Fugitive," on June 15. This shows Florence La Badie in a new role, supported by Ethyle Cooke, Hector Dion, George Marlo and Robert Vaughn. In this title role Director Frederick Sullivan has woven Miss La Badie's art with a tense series of incidents from the pen of Philip Lonergan.

The second comes at the end of the month, on the 29th. This is "Hidden Valley," written by Emmet Mix, who recently joined the New Rochelle organization. It is an entirely different production from "The Fugitive" and indicates the scope of variety that may be expected from the classics. The Baroness Dewitz, known to the screen as Valkyrien, is featured, with Boyd Marshall her main support. Made in Florida, the interior of Africa is treated with unusual realism by Ernest Warde, who directed the production.

Another five-reel release is "Other People's Money," on June 1. This is by Lloyd Lonergan, inspired by Emile Gaboriau's story. Directed by William Parke, Gladys Hulette does another piece of work that explains her rapid rise. Mr. Parke's experience in the legitimate has helped him notably in this, his first five-reel effort. He shows the result of the application of stage methods to screen art. Fraunie Fraunholtz, J. H. Gilmour, Yale Benner and Kathryn Adams are in the supporting cast.

The shorter releases from New Rochelle introduce "A Flaw in the Evidence," "Brothers Equal," "John Brewster's Wife," and "The Window of Dreams," all two-reelers, except the last, which is in three.

In the comedies Riley Chamberlin's series, where he stars as "Conductor 786," will begin to issue on June 17. The Oscar and Conrad edition, in which Claude Cooper and Frank E. McNish cut up, will be released as "Real Estaters," "Musickers" and "Romeoers."

SELIG PLAYERS GO TO VICKSBURG.

Director Colin Campbell, of the Selig Company, has closed his work at the Selig Chicago studios and on Wednesday, May 17, left with his company for Vicksburg, Miss., where on or before May 23 Mr. Campbell expects to start work on production of battle scenes in "The Crisis." The interior scenes in the film dramatization of Winston Churchill's great novel have all been completed. It is planned to complete the work at Vicksburg by June 1 when the company will visit St. Louis for special work.

A staff of scenic artists, stage carpenters, etc., left in advance of the Selig Director and stars for Vicksburg where special properties were prepared in anticipation of the arrival of the players. From St. Louis it is the present plan to return to the Pacific Coast.

It is not known when final work on "The Crisis" is to be completed. The production is so spectacular it may be some months before the film is finally ready for presentation. It can be conservatively stated that "The Crisis" is to be the greatest production released by the Selig Company.

INTERNATIONAL CONTEST WINNERS.

Announcement has been made by the International Film Service, Inc., of the winners of the new talent contest at the Madison Square Garden Exposition. This contest is a radical departure in the motion picture field, as it offers a short cut to stardom for six young women who have not had previous motion picture or dramatic experience. The winners will receive positions with the International. The following is the list of the winners in this unique contest: Miss Mary Cranston, Miss Helene Montrose, Miss Helen Raferty, Miss Frieda Peterson, Miss Julia Lorland and Miss May Brown, all of New York.

YONKERS SEES "WHO'S GUILTY?" PLAYERS.

The population of Yonkers crowded into Proctor's Palace theater recently to see Manager Waldron make good his promise to have Miss Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore, co-stars of Pathe's "Who's Guilty?" series, appear on the stage of the Palace in person. Then "The Tight Rein," the second of the "Who's Guilty?" series was shown and warmly appreciated, if applause is any indication. Proctor's Palace theater has contracted to show the entire "Who's Guilty?" series of fourteen dramas of two reels each.

Buffalo Film Ball a Winner

First Big Affair of the Buffalo Screen Club Makes Brilliant Mark—Film Stars and Many Prominent Picture Folk Present.

THE recently formed Buffalo Screen Club was ambitious to screen a film ball that would be second to none that had been given anywhere. The evening set was May 15 and the club committees and members worked to some purpose. The Elmwood music hall, with the biggest dancing floor in Buffalo, was chosen and was artistically decorated for the occasion. From the time the guests began to arrive till the wee sma' hours it was the scene of animation and beauty, and smiling faces showed that all were having a time that was fourteen karat gold.

When Daniel J. Savage, president of the club, was asked his opinion of the ball, he said, "A success? Believe me, it was, if attendance, enthusiasm, and other features, including box office receipts, are considered." Mr. Savage paid a tribute to the untiring efforts of the other officers and members of the club who spent many hours to make the affair a success. The names of the officers, board of governors and committees in charge of the ball were recently printed in the Moving Picture World.

The Seventy-fourth Regiment Band of fifty pieces played a lively air, "The Hippodrome March," when the screen stars, the guests of the evening, entered and were escorted by the Screen Club members about the ballroom. These were Roscoe Arbuckle, Ethel Crute, Earl Metcalf, Mignon Anderson and Helen Green. The paraders also included A. C. Smith, a director of the Vitagraph, Corrine Farren Parquette, who won a Triangle beauty contest at the Victoria theater, Rochester, and Miss Bonstelle and her stock company now playing an engagement at the Star theater, Buffalo. The crowd cheered and the visitors bowed their acknowledgement during the procession.

Everybody present seemed to be craving for comedy, and it was up to "Fatty" Arbuckle to do stunts which equaled everything ever seen on the screen. For instance at the end of a dance, he was invited to act as director of the orchestra. He accepted and hauled his prosperous figure over several chairs to the stage. Willing hands helped the comedian to the platform. Then with the motions of a regular orchestra leader, exaggerated just enough to win bursts of applause and laughter from the dancers, Mr. Arbuckle proceeded to lead the musicians.

John W. Bolton, who conducted the band of fifty pieces, and Herman E. Schultz, who led an orchestra of the same number of men, had charge of the music. These conductors arranged a program de luxe for the dancing. Mr. Arbuckle and Mignon Anderson headed the grand march at midnight.

Elmwood Music Hall was transformed into a veritable fairyland, with decorations in gold and white, the screen club's emblems, and hundreds of brilliant lights. More than 2,000 person either watched the movements of the screen stars or enjoyed the delightful programme of music and dancing. Above the stage was a large electric sign bearing the words: "Screen Club of Buffalo, First Annual Ball."

Holders of tickets for the boxes were the screen stars, Bonstelle stock company's players; Mutual, Victor, Triangle, World, General, Paramount, Pathe, Metro, Unicorn and Popular Film Exchanges; J. A. Schuchert; Norman E. Mack, proprietor of the Buffalo Times and party; Mayor Fuhrmann, Councilman Malone, Councilman Kreinheder, Palace Theater Company, James Savage of the Como theater; Matthew J. Vallely of Lackawanna; Maxine theater; Miss Mittlestad and party, and Peter Hofmeister.

Among the New York City visitors were I. J. Schmertz, Variety Film Corporation; Harry A. Samwick, Ivan Film Corporation; Joseph Lee, New York State booking agent of the Merit Film Corporation, and Joseph M. Goldstein, Exclusive Features, Inc.

Other visitors were George A. Hickey of the Unicorn office, Syracuse; A. Wolfe, Colonial theater, Rochester; E. Wolfe, Palace theater, Rochester; Tom Brakey, Bradford; J. W. Barnes, Olean; W. Van Croix, Jamestown; A. Berg, Port Allegany; E. Nickum, Olean; Fred Keller, Lockport; Daniel Buss, Tonawanda and F. Watters, Corry, Pa.

A continuous round of entertainment was carried out by the club members for the visiting stars. An auto trip to Niagara Falls, luncheons and a theater party were a feature of the program. Part of the proceeds of the ball will go to the Actors' Fund of America.

The Screen Club will entertain the Friars who will visit Buffalo next month. The next big event will be an outing at a Niagara River resort. The club is only six weeks old, but despite its infancy it has the life and enthusiasm of a regular grown-up institution.

Two Three-Part Gaumonts for June

"Flames of Vengeance" and "The Spatulate Thumb," With Single Reelers, Make Program of Variety.

THE promised output of the Gaumont company for June is practically a program in itself, since the Mutual Pictures it will release provide that variety and interest exhibitors find best suited for an evening's entertainment. The first in quantity are the new three-reel dramas which begun so auspiciously with the release of the film version of Wilkie Collins' "Armadale" on May 25.

Two three-part photoplays have been announced by Gaumont for June. The first is "Flames of Vengeance," by Paul M. Bryan. It stars Miss Gertrude Robinson, with Miss Iva Shepard in her support. The photoplay has been directed by Edwin Middleton. In the cast are John Reinhard, John Mackin, Birsha Shepard, Albert Mackin and James Levering.

The second three-reel release is "The Spatulate Thumb," released June 22. This is an unusual story, written by Lionel Barrymore and Wright Huntington. The identity of the mysterious criminal in this play is established by the fact that his thumbs differ, one is conic, the other is the spatulate thumb of a murderer.

Interest naturally attaches to the new Gaumont single-reel, "Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine. The subjects for these pictures in June have not been announced. The Gaumont company has its own cameraman at work and until he has been some time in the field there will be no authoritative statement of what this film will contain. The character of the pictures may be gathered from the release of May 28. "Reel Life" on this date will show a terrapin farm in operation, life in the Florida Everglades, and the humane treatment of animals as undertaken by the Animal Rescue League of Boston, and the Angell Memorial Hospital in the same city.

"See America First," manufactured by the Gaumont company, has been selected by the United States Government as a medium for informing Americans concerning some of the wonderspots of this continent. The Department of the Interior has given the Gaumont company permission to release its views of government parks, forest reserves and other tracts under its direction. Those for June will include two releases devoted to Yellowstone National Park. This great playground of the nation is so large that it cannot be compressed into one reel. As it is the custom to vary these "See America First" releases, between the two there will be a release featuring some Southern city.

On th same reel with "See America First," the Gaumont animated cartoonist, Harry Palmer, releases his laughable Kartoon Komics. "Nosey Ned" and "Escapades of Estelle" will alternate as they have been doing for some time.

COMPANY GOING TO ORIENT.

On May 17 Helen Holmes, J. P. McGowan and their company of Signal feature players will leave the Los Angeles studios for an extended trip to the Orient for the purpose of securing proper atmosphere in their production of an original story by Mr. McGowan entitled, "The Diamond Runners." It was the intention of the company originally to remain in this country while staging the story, but as the story was developed and its unusual possibilities realized, it was decided to carry the work to the Hawaiian Islands that better effects might be secured.

MISS MUNSON IN "FLYING A" ALLEGORY.

The "Flying A" forces have about completed the filming of an allegorical art masterpiece featuring Audrey Munson. The name and release date will soon be announced by the Mutual Film Corporation. Notable poses in which Miss Munson will be seen in this allegorical masterpiece will be that of "Descending Night," posed on the lawn of another handsome Montecito country home. The piece of statuary, "Descending Night," posed for by Miss Munson, attracted wide attention at the San Francisco Exposition. In this picture she is seen posing for the same statue in life.

WOMAN PRESS CLUB WANTS CLEAN PICTURES.

At a recent special session of the Women's Press Club Jane Stannard Johnson, known in film circles through her former connection with the Paramount organization, presented resolutions urging producers of motion pictures to make clean pictures of high quality and pledging the support of the club to such producers as will heed the resolutions, which were passed, and copies sent to all the principal producers.

Universal's June Openers

Comedies, Straight, Slapstick and Animal, and Dramas and News Reels Give Variety to Program.

THE Red Feather feature of the week of May 29 will be "The Iron Hand," released on that date with Hobart Bosworth and Jane Novak in the principal roles. The picture runs five reels and tells a most fascinating story of a gangster who later becomes a power in the political world. On the same date, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Betty Compson disport themselves in "All Over a Stocking," a Nestor comedy.

On May 30 the feature of the day will be Bob Leonard and Ella Hall in the Gold Seal two-reel mountain drama, "The Silent Man of Timber Gulch." This will be followed by the Laemmle drama, "The Fur Trimmed Coat," in which Rupert Julian, Elsie J. Wilson and Francelia Billington play the leads, and by "A Double Fire Deception," an Imp comedy in which Matt Moore and Jane Gail share honors.

"The Attic Princess," a Big U drama featuring Thomas Jefferson with little Zoe Bech, opens the program on May 31, and is followed by "Tough Luck on a Rough Sea," a two-reel L-KO comedy featuring Dan Russell. Animated Weekly No. 22 will be released on the same day.

On Thursday, June 1, the feature will be "Two Mothers," a two-reel Laemmle society drama in which Emory Johnston and Dorothy Davenport play the leading roles. The Big U drama, "Brother Jim," follows with Thomas Jefferson and his little co-star again appearing in the principal roles. The Powers comedy, "It Can't Be True," with Ernie Shields and Marcia Moore, closes the day's program.

King Baggot in "Jim Slocum No. 46393," a two-reel heart interest drama, will be released under the Imp brand on June 2. Edna Hunter supports Mr. Baggot. On the same day Neal Burns and Billie Rhodes will disport in the Nestor howler, "Good Night Nurse."

On June 3 "Tammany's Tiger," a two-reel Bison animal comedy, quite the funniest animal laughmaker yet released from Universal City, leads off the day's program with Marie Walcamp and Lee Heel in the principal funmaking roles. On the same day Ben Wilson appears with Dorothy Phillips in the Rex drama, "A Cad," and William Franey and Gale Henry split the fun between them in the Joker comedy, "A Dark Suspicion."

"As in a Dream," an unusually strong three-reel human interest drama featuring Sidney Ayres, Olive Golden and Doris Pawn will be released on June 4 under the Rex Brand. It will be followed on the same day by Herbert Rawlinson in the Laemmle comedy "The Wire Pullers," in which Mr. Rawlinson is supported by charming Agnes Vernon.

The fifth episode of "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring," entitled "The House of Mystery," will also be released during the week of May 29. Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, despite all reports to the contrary, will play the leading roles in "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring" to the end of the serial.

Dixon Film Opens at Liberty

"The Fall of a Nation" Premiere Is Officially Announced for June 6.

THE National Drama Corporation will present Thomas Dixon and Victor Herbert's musical film spectacle, "The Fall of a Nation," for the first time on any stage Tuesday evening, June 6, at the Liberty theater, New York. The playhouse is the same at which the Griffith-Dixon spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," was first presented March 3, 1915. Mr. Dixon has described the new offering as a sequel to the earlier work.

The alterations now making at the Liberty by the new management will include some striking changes in the technique of picture presentation. Original costumes for the attaches will be in keeping with the atmosphere of the play. The complete grand orchestra for Victor Herbert's musical score is now being drilled by its conductor, Harold Sanford, under the personal supervision of Mr. Herbert himself.

About two weeks later than the New York opening, namely, on Monday, June 19, "The Fall of a Nation" will be presented in Los Angeles. Clune's Auditorium has been leased for the summer, and a production rivaling the one in New York will be made. The Los Angeles orchestra will be directed by Harold A. Levy, one of the most valued members of the Victor Herbert musical staff. Mr. Levy has directed "The Only Girl" and many other Herbert operettas. He was extremely popular as the conductor of the big band at Brighton Beach last summer.

While continuing to occupy its offices at 720 Longacre Building for promotion and booking purposes, the National Drama Corporation has taken a large executive suite in the Subway Central Building on the south side of Times Square. Here the offices of the president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer will be situated. The Subway Central (formerly the Heidelberg) building with its tall tower is one of the landmarks of Broadway.

The Corporation expects to utilize the exterior for a great electrical display.

Merit Film Corporation Expands

Extends Its Activities to New England and Buffalo—Personnel of the Exchanges.

ONE of the largest independent film exchanges is the Merit Film Corporation, under the management of Harry Samwick. As the exclusive distributors of Ivan Productions in the Empire State the Merit Film Corporation has progressed to the point where its business necessitates the opening of an office in Buffalo to take care of the large up-state clients. F. J. Willis has been placed in charge of the new Merit office in Buffalo, at 39 Erie street. Frank Wykoff has been transferred from the New York office as his assistant. All Ivan features will be handled from this base for the northern part of New York state.

The Merit Film Corporation has also acquired the exclusive franchise as distributors of Ivan productions for New England, and Mr. Samwick left New York for Boston to open an office there from which point exhibitors desiring Ivan features will be supplied.

Alexander Gaden to Be Gaumont Lead

HAVING definitely arranged a series of three-reel releases, the Gaumont Company now announces that one of the special organizations making these photodramas for Mutual will be headed by Alexander Gaden. Mr. Gaden will be welcomed by exhibitors and their patrons as the male star in these productions, since he has won for himself great popularity as a Gaumont player. The intention of Gaumont to have its three-reel release the same as its five-reel features in everything but length is seen in the decision to put this popular star at the head of one of these companies. Miss Gertrude Robinson will co-star with him whenever the scenario provides a part suitable for her.

Alexander Gaden.

Before appearing upon the screen Alexander Gaden had a varied stage experience. As a motion picture actor he has played with Universal and Vitagraph West Coast companies. He also supported Mary Pickford in "Fanchon the Cricket." He has been noted for his many narrow escapes from death, once having been hurled from the roof of a train while it was in motion. His life was saved by his good fortune in falling into a snow bank.

Mr. Gaden signalized his appearance as a Gaumont star by his impressive portrayal of the reform mayor in "As a Woman Sows." He followed this with the divinity student who was a victim of the gambling mania in "The Drifter." He next appeared in "I Accuse!" following this with the ministerial role in "The Quality of Faith." This is his latest Mutual Masterpicture release. The first three-reel picture starring Mr. Gaden is "Armadale," a screen version of Wilkie Collins' novel of the same name.

GOLDFRAP JOINS UNITY.

John H. Goldfrap, formerly with the Fox and the Equitable Companies, has become advertising and publicity manager for the Unity Sales Corporation at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

OBSERVATIONS
BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THE women—God bless 'em!—are with us. The very people whom the self-appointed reformers claim to champion and protect have put a negative stamp upon the foremost of the claimants' pet measures—official censorship. The reformers have endeavored to convince the people that what they have been trying to put over on the moving picture industry was inspired and encouraged by the women of the land and that those opposed to the measures were sinful, grasping, evil spreading men who had no respect for the law-abiding and unprotected. It is indeed gratifying to find that at this momentous period in the history of moving pictures no less an organization than the Federation of Women's Clubs should come to the front as a defender of the fourth great industry of the country. The convention of the Federation of Women's Clubs was held in the Hotel Astor, this city, on the 12th inst., with an attendance of 839 delegates and alternates. It was a most auspicious gathering of representative and brainy women, and many topics of deep importance to the general welfare of the country at large were discussed and voted upon. Liberality of thought was a distinguishing feature of the sessions and the results cannot fail to command sincere attention and respect in all quarters where the keynote is rationalism, justice and good will. Moving pictures became a subject of consideration through the introduction of a resolution urging that a Federal commission be appointed to censor all moving pictures. It is significant that the resolution was the offspring of a Brooklyn organization. All supposed true reforms have their birth in Brooklyn—once called "the city of churches," now known as the hotbed of furnished room houses, and the butt of an old-time joke that reads "No, I do not live in Brooklyn. I sleep there." Among the most prominent and vigorous opponents of the conspirator-inspired resolution was Mrs. Helen Varick Boswell. This lady declared that moving pictures should not be made a matter of politics and censorship should come from the people as a whole. The sentiment was by no means unopposed, but when a vote was taken upon the resolution it was tabled indefinitely. "Other papers please copy." The convention that took this action was made up of representatives coming from all the boroughs of Greater New York, who, in behalf of the 253 clubs they represented, made child welfare one of the chief subjects of consideration. Canon Chase, of Brooklyn, and Rev. Crafts, of Washington, please take notice; also Governor Whitman, of Albany, as well as Senators Smith, Hughes and others, of Washington, D. C.

N. B.—The Motion Picture Board of Trade was holding its exposition in Madison Square Garden at the same time the Federation of Women's Clubs was in session at the Hotel Astor, but it had no delegates at the convention, nor did it have official knowledge that the convention was being held.

Secondary in thought to the success of its exposition to the Motion Picture Board of Trade was the Cristman-Wheeler moving picture censorship bill in the hands of Governor Whitman. The attention of the Board was riveted upon Albany. At each session of the exposition the moving picture people labored unceasingly in procuring signatures to a protest against the bill, and on the sixth day of the exposition an army of picture people carried the protest to Albany for consideration by the Governor. True to their crafty nature, the Brooklyn camp of so-called reformers and guardians against vice conducted a quiet campaign to offset that of the moving picture people, and on the same day the latter were presenting their gigantic petition to Governor Whitman they made their unsuccessful attempt to carry the Federation of Women's Clubs by storm. Its success could not have failed to make an impression upon the Executive and give joy to the supporters of the Cristman-Wheeler bill. Its failure should carry equal weight to the reverse.

Mrs. Boswell's remarks at the Federation convention that "moving pictures should not be made a matter of politics" carry with them the sentiments of all who favor a square deal to all legitimate commercial enterprises. Such is the manufacture of motion picture films. From a financial and operative point of view the business has progressed so that it now stands fourth in importance in this country. It has advanced solely upon its merits and has at no time been dependent for its success upon any political manipulation. Anything savoring of politics has been inspired and provoked by the people who found their ground based upon the claims of immorality untenable. In their blind, mad fight against moving pictures and their pernicious schemes to secure legislation in its behalf they have threatened to wreak vengeance at the polls upon those who did not do their bidding. In this direction their work became so brazen that the moving picture people were compelled to resort to like methods for self-protection. It was a difficult task to arouse the moving picture people to a realization of the true circumstances. For several years they humbly complied with law after law imposed to regulate the business without the slightest suspicion that a warfare for their extermination was being secretly conducted by a combination of crafty manipulators operating under the cloak of fidelity to religious principles. During all this time their humility was being secretly flaunted as evidence of fear and guilt and unconsciously the moving picture people were drifting into a state of bondage. Gradually the spider weaved his web and the picture people, unsuspecting his advance until the blood-sucking animal threw out his censorship cord. That capped the climax.

The moving picture people are too busy to bother with politics more than is necessary to exercise their duties as citizens and none of them have aspired to step beyond those bounds. But they do not intend to longer stand idly by and let the combination of church and state have full sway without determined protest. They feel that their constitutional rights have been trampled upon, that many of the fundamental principles upon which the great government of the United States stands have been ignored, and they are preparing to put up a fight that will challenge every sinew and muscle the enemy can command. If they cannot protect themselves and secure their rights in the halls of the legislature they will carry the battle through the courts. The cost must necessarily be great. It will fall heavily upon the shoulders of all except the true instigators of the unjust campaign. They have taken care to do their work through and under the cover of official acts and have nothing financially to lose through either defeat or success. Few of these so-called reformers have anything financially to lose, because they haven't anything to risk. If any money is spent on their side it is that which they have persuaded others to contribute in support of their so-called reform movements. All their spending is in lobbying, and they are the cheapest—in every sense of the term—of all lobbyists. Their chief expenses are self-pay, railroad fares and hotel bills. Those who serve them do not get money. They would be afraid to take it. The hirelings would not trust the hirers. What they do is almost invariably forced by threats to cut off political careers. These are the kind of people who have forced politics into the moving picture business. Their threat to the politicians is "Do as we tell you or you will be retired to private life." The moving picture people tell them, "Do what is right and just or answer to the people at the polls." An Assemblyman of this city laughed at the moving picture people last fall when they told him he would answer at the polls for monkeying with a pernicious censorship bill, but he is no longer an Assemblyman. The moving picture simply followed an example set by a clergyman of an Ohio town. He was not content to depend upon the decision of the courts. When the Aldermen of his town declined to enact an ordinance against the operation of Sunday moving picture shows, he declared, "I'll make them toe the mark," and proceeded to convince the Aldermen opposed as to the strength of the vote he could throw against them at the next election.

There is considerable discussion over the law recently enacted in this state prohibiting any children from taking part in moving pictures unless under permit from the head of the respective municipalities. This bill did not receive the attention of the moving picture people during its introduction or consideration. There are two reasons for this: First, the moving picture people favored all reasonable protection to children; secondly, the multiplicity of censorship measures detracted their attention from the details of the bill. They now find confronting them a bunch of red tape that makes the law appear almost ridiculous. The moving picture people concede that enactment of the law was provoked by people living upon the earnings of their children. In justice to some parents it may be stated that they have bank books which show deposits of the earnings in trust for the children, and these children are players in the moving pictures. How about that for child protection, Mr. So-Called Reformer?

MILT HOFFMAN LIKES THE COAST.

M. E. Hoffman, who went to Los Angeles as manager of the Lasky Studios, writes that he has arrived safely, is on the job and likes the work in his new position. Incidentally he declares that conditions there are far ahead of those in the East.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Practical Poster Pointers.

WRITING from Brooklyn, M. S. Hankins, who is a practical poster lithographer, offers some suggestions on how to get good stuff for the boards, replying to a comment in this department some weeks ago. From his wholly practical point of view he confirms our own statement that flash paper cannot build a stable business and adds:

> I would suggest that the manufacturer get several photographs of the scenes he wants lithographed and submit these to the lithographer, or rather to the artist in charge, to arrange the composition. To make paper effective, do not use too many figures. Should the scene be a mob or even a large group, eliminate a majority of these figures or let them melt into the background, as it were, making them hardly distinguishable that the central figures may stand out prominently. The lettering should be largely a plain block letter, dark on a white ground or light against dark, the color to be in contrast to the general color scheme of the bill as a whole. Should this plan be followed, a one-sheet should be readable and distinct across the average street and a six at some distance, greatly increasing the percentage of display efficiency. It would seem, from an economic angle, that the studio should have its lithographic department where the copy could be prepared with the least possible delay, saving time and money while standardizing the poster style.

This is all foundation stuff; the knowledge that all manufacturers should have. Common sense should dictate that mob scenes should be faded so that the central figures could be given proper prominence, and still more elemental is the dictum that the lettering should be plain and readable at as great a distance as possible. Probably most manufacturers do know these facts. The trouble is that they do not apply them. They know what they should have, but they get the foolish idea that they want something "out of the ordinary." If it is attractive in the water color sketch, they do not stop to consider that it may be a pretty picture and yet not an effective advertisement for board display.

We take it that by "several prints of scenes" Mr. Hankins means several stills of the same scene. This is an excellent suggestion, because three or four stills may be combined into one good pose where a single still may be weak and ineffective. One great trouble is that the director simply will not take the trouble to get good lithographic stills. The only use a director seems to have for stills is to paste them in his scrap book. He will not stop to consider composition—many of them do not even know what composition means—and he rather resents the necessity for stopping his work to make the stills. Seven years ago this writer used to handle all of the stills prepared for one of the licensed companies. Only one out of four directors even tried to get decent stuff, though the head of the establishment himself begged and commanded. Last summer we watched the output of stills by the same company. Their average had not improved, though for seven years the company had been laboring to get its paid employees to turn in stuff that would help the sale of the films they made, and a poster artist was right on the ground to give suggestions and advice. As many as thirty and forty stills have been made for some five reel productions, not one of which was really suitable for poster work, though the play may have offered many interesting possibilities. The reform must start with the director, and continue through the various heads to the manufacturer himself, who must demand good work from those below and then be guided to some extent by the practical lithographer who will make the bill. The Lubin company has even tried the experiment of sending a man along with a graflex to get real action instead of posed pictures, but even this has not always worked well though it was about the most successful effort. It will take some time to train the directors, but at least the manufacturer can insist upon legible lettering and compliance with the elemental rules of display and composition. Take the ordinary black and white tiled flooring. No tile stands out above another. No one thing is distinct. Spill some red paint on one tile and every passerby will see that particular tile. It is the same with posters. Make them stand out.

A News Stock Folder.

O. B. Browen, of Putnam, Conn., sends in a folder for the Empire and asks us to "pull it to pieces." It is a six page folder pages three by five on cheap news stock. Evidently it is the best the local printer can do, but he can at least get a good quality of news. It will cost a few cents a pound more, but it will be worth the difference. Another fifty cents would make a lot of difference in the feel and looks of the sheet. Paper is high, but not yet prohibitive. The first page carries the house name and staff. The staff should be reversed, the names appearing at the left and the offices at the right hand margin. There is a time table and a price card, but the display is crude, even for a country printer. The back page is an underline with cut and the third page on this side carries some clipped matter used as house talk. Inside the program runs to days to a page for the three pages. The days should be dated. The feature is played up with a couple of lines, but the films added to make the full program are treated very casually, sometimes only the title being announced with no hint as to brand or character. Even "A Vitagraph comedy" or "A Selig Western drama" would be better than the bare title. Much cannot be done with a poor printer, but these changes can and should be made. Mr. Bowen writes that he gets much good material from the department.

More Dates Needed.

The Lomo and Dixie theaters, McComb City, Miss., share a four page program that is well laid out, but one stingy little twelve point date line that is just off Old English is made to cover the week for the two houses. The programs proper carry no sign of date, even though the printer had to run in an ornamental square to break the blank space.

With this change the program arrangement works nicely as is shown in the cut. The two parts deleted refer to lottery schemes and are cut out in accordance with the post office rulings. It may interest fans to note that the program claims Pearl White as "our home actress."

Busy Again.

It has been several weeks since the Third street, Easton, Pa., came across with a new idea, but they are at it again and the new one is a winner. They were one of the very first houses to own a taking camera, and they have put it to good use, but never better than the stunt that is explained in this paragraph.

WANTED.

Twenty-five Healthy, Cute Babies—Six Months to One Year Old.

MOTHERS! Have you a baby you think is the cutest in the world? Does the baby do cute things? Has it a cunning laugh? How would you like to see this same baby in Motion Pictures years after it has grown up? Here's a chance to have a Motion Picture made of your baby free of charge. We want to photograph twenty-five babies and have the mothers enter them in a contest. The baby best liked by our patrons will receive a five dollar gold piece and a motion picture of itself. All the rest of the babies will receive only the pictures. The pictures alone cost to make about $5.00 for each baby. Years after the babies grow up you can show these pictures. Just drop us a line asking to have your baby entered in the contest, we will take care of the rest. But bear in mind that our audience will decide which baby they like best.

This tears holes in the usual slide contest, and it is worth several times the extra cost. Incidentally it will make twenty-five mothers supremely happy.

Better Still.

The second issue of the Empress Theater Weekly, Flagstaff, Ariz., is better than the first. It doesn't give a lot of space to films, but it gives the program and then lets loose some editorial matter on good roads that is better than telling that this film or that is a good one. The reader will carry the paper about with him and cannot help see the program. This sort of thing works only when the general matter is genuinely good and not flatulent, but the editor is a real writer in this case and speaks through his pen with force. This clip is a suggestion to others, though we beat Mr. Costigan to it in Picture Theater Advertising.

Played Fatal Cards.

Raymond Robbins, of the Orpheum, Malta, Mont., sends in an interesting letter and wants data as to bound volumes as he wants to get back numbers for a reference library. These volumes run thirteen issues each, are strongly bound and cost about what the local binder would charge to bind your own loose copies and they have the advantage of not being cut until bound, which gives a better margin to the page. They can be had for three or four years back and such departments as this and Brother Richardson's form a most valuable encycolpedia, not to mention the rest of the material. Mr. Robbins writes:

> This is a small town of about one thousand population, but we are now showing an all-feature program with daily change. We run Paramount two nights with World, Pathe, Mutual Masterpictures and Metro and hold one night open for miscellaneous features which are from twenty to sixty days old. I think this speaks very well for a town of this size—and we have an opposition at that.

All features is going some in a thousand town. Mr. Robbins sends in a card printed up for The Fatal Card, using the plaid back that takes print well and yet is not expensive. If we remember correctly, the company had some of these for the early run. The card made a lot of talk, for the play was not well known, and it built business. As a rule an oddity will always attract more attention than straight matter and is worth the additional cost. We would like to hear from Mr. Robbins on some other advertising stunts.

A Model.

Here is a model form of program that is even better than the style originally devised by the house, the Auditorium, Coatesville, Pa., which has supplied much good stuff to this department. The double page is eleven by seven and a half inches and the middle column is the regulation thirteen em width, enabling the matter to be set on the machine. This house is run by the local Y. M. C. A., but it is run as a theater should be. The back page is house talk and chat. Try this program form some time.

Say Where.

The Crystal theater, Little Rock, Ark., has started a twelve page house organ, but only a paragraph by chance states the name of the town. The town should appear in the heading of the sheet along with the date. The issue is a monthly, carrying the program for that period in full on a single page and giving the rest to house talk and notes of coming productions. Evidently Rothapfel got their goat for their editorial remarks:

An Invitation.

We are glad at this time to inform the business men of our city that the Empress theater is at their disposal day time or any evening after the show gratis for meetings, etc.

We believe it might be to the best interests of us all if our business men would get together, say once each week, having for their object a discussion of local conditions; local needs etc. It will be a pleasure for us to be of service to you at any time.

Make your house a real center of things and they will naturally turn to it when they seek amusement. Be something more than the fellow who runs the picture house. Be a citizen and a prominent one.

Guessed Part.

In sending in a folder program of the Broadway, Philadelphia, Harry H. Rush writes:

> There is one thing which I know you are going to criticize and that is the size. I agree with you that it is a little large for a railroad folder style and that it would look much better if it were stitched, but that would add to the cost and already I am at the limit of my appropriation.

This is a six page, six by nine inch page, which is rather awkward to handle, but another page of advertising could pay for an eight page, stitched program and allow another page for reading matter.

As the program is laid the front shows the house title and a cut. The back carries nine advertisements. The third page on this side shows when the front is turned, and gives the Friday and Saturday program. Turning this back opens up the reverse side. Here the arrangement is a reader to go with the cut and the Monday program. Then comes another page of advertisement and the third page carries three days' program. It would be a better arrangement to throw that advertising page to the other side so that, when open, the three program pages appear side by side, in their proper order. The advertisers should not care since they get the benefit of the first flash as the page is turned, and it will work better for the house. The days are dated and well separated and the titles are properly played up. The arrangement should be changed, however, to get the fullest effect. With seventeen trade advertisements, the program should cost nothing, instead of costing the limit. Possibly the advertising rates are too small. Better make a decent price even if it does take a couple of weeks to fill the space.

See the Difference.

If you have late copies by you, look up the reproduction of the program of the Crescent, Bronx, and compare it with this cut.

A NEWSPAPER IN PICTURES
EVERY DAY NEW COMEDIES ARE SHOWN
Thursday Is Daniels's Day

This is the same program but with changes made as suggested. By making a few minor alterations Joe Vion gets a better program for the same price, and makes it work harder by playing up the important facts. Mr. Vion is an old showman and a good one, because he knows that he does not know it all and is willing to take any suggestions that will lead to betterment.

He is the first manager in New York to take the locally produced play for a business getter. He will produce a one reel story with local talent and with the aid of one of the locality papers he will hold the usual voting contest for the lead. It is not a new scheme out of town and not always a safe scheme, for sometimes very doubtful ladies will buy up the lead, but we'll bet that Vion gets away with it.

Defends the Printer.

L. F. Guimond, of the Lyceum, Monticello, N. Y., has come in again after a silence of more than a year. Old friends will remember him as the manager who ran his house to kill opposition off before it came instead of waiting until it happened. We do not know whether he yet has opposition, but he is in the field with a bi-weekly program, eight pages 6 by 8½, white paper and black ink. He puts in a plea for the printer "who only had twenty-four hours for the job." We would like to know how long the printer does want for an eight page job. The cuts, with the exception of the house cut, are badly brought out. Apparently they were not locked up on their feet. This is particularly noticeable with the Triangle cuts, which are all on the cant. The program form is rather unusual, for with eight pages to use, of which seven are taken by the house, the two weekly programs take only about three inches, double column, each. This merely lists the titles, the players and the brand, and the rest of the space is given to reader, much of it concerning the attractions listed. This is a good plan. Let the patron see what is coming, and let him see it with the least expenditure of effort. Then add what you want in the reading columns and it will be read. There are three pages of reading notices, including some gossip and this works better in most instances than an overwritten formal program. Mr. Guimond writes that he is not sending in the program as a model but as something to be beaten by later issues, and that is the right way to go at it. When he sends the next in, we would like a good photograph of the house, which is oddly located, being some distance back from the street with a lawn in front, and a fence that gives reason for the catchline "Behind the cobble wall."

Both Sides, Please.

Will the Orpheum, Nampa, Idaho, please make certain that our copy of the Reel-ism is printed both sides. We like best the editorials on page two and the last issue to hand is printed only pages one and four. If the printer is careless he should be checked up, but a blank is bound to happen now and then in spite of the most careful feeding.

Once More.

Once more it is shown that there is something new under the sun. The program for Wassman's theater, Nashville, Tenn., is it. It is an eight pager. The outside sheet is 4 by 5½. The inside sheet is less than three by four, and it is bound so that the bottom edges of both the sheets are aligned. For a moment you wonder why the inside sheet is stingy and then it dawns upon you that the sheet is so planned, as regards size and type placement that the inserted four does not cut off the titles and dates on the larger four. In other words, with the program opened in the middle the Monday and Tuesday and Friday and Saturday announcements show above the inserted Wednesday and Thursday announcement, so that you get the full bill at one glance. In the reproduction the inner page is outlined, that the idea may be more clearly shown. Until you figure it out, it looks like sloppy work and we think it might be a good idea to put small "fists" on the inner page pointing to the other part of the program. We have marked these in to give the idea.

In studying this cut it should be remembered that four and not merely two pages are shown, these pages being two and seven and four and five. Back of the latter is some house advertisement. The use of a colored border for the larger sheet and a straight rule border for the inside sheet does not look well, but it probably serves a purpose in marking the change. Perhaps a better idea would be to use two sheets of the same stock and of the same width, but with one sheet about an inch shorter than the other instead of having the inside sheet smaller in both dimensions. In any event it is the much desired something new. The envelope in which the program is mailed has a blue question mark to the left of the address, a rather old, but generally effective device.

All But the Stock.

V. M. Trainor, of the Superba, Ramsey, N. J., sends in a four pager on which he asks for comment. The pages are 3½ by 5½ and the stock is a yellowish green ribbed paper. The color is as mournful as some of those Jersey suburbs, and to make it easy, the type is printed in a dark blue. This is not so bad with the larger faces, but the small stuff on the back page, and this is a strong house talk in an eight point, is faded out because there is a lack of contrast in color between ink and stock. If the stock had to be used, a black would have been the only permissible color, but even with a black a good impression of a small face cannot be made on paper with embossing unless the impression is too heavy to permit printing on both sides. The stock, regarded merely as stock, is good, but it is not good for the purpose for which it is used. Both the surface and the color are against it. That sick looking sage green should never be used for printing for an amusement enterprise. Printed on other stock the program would be a good example. The house talk is particularly good, a modest brag without exaggeration.

On Courtesy.

Nearly every motion picture tradespaper one picks up nowadays contains a lot of superfluous advice from manufacturers and their press agents on the subject of "Courtesy."

One prominent New York city exhibitor, nationally known, makes the statement that he heard the words, "Thank you" less than five times from motion picture theater cashiers during a recent coast-to-coast trip. This exhibitor is clever, highly successful and knows what he is talking about. But like the negro's characterization of Senator Joe Bailey of Texas, "He sho do recommen' hisself highly." Nevertheless the fact remains that during his trip he did not visit the Crystal theater in Little Rock, or he not only would have received a cheery "Thank You," from our cashier, Miss Anna Bono, but would have heard the same, accompanied by a welcoming smile, from Jack Hudgens at the door. The Crystal, however, goes further than the mere outward forms of courtesy, and endeavors to make all its patrons really "feel at home," the test of true hospitality.

One wonders whether the same space in the trade journals might not be better utilized in conducting a school for certain directors and also some so-called "publicity men," in order that the latter may learn to prepare synopses of pictures which do not have to be rewritten before they are presentable to the public.

We are sure that exhibitors throughout the country extend a great deal more courtesy than they are given credit for. At least we know a number who are successful enough not to require a group of film manufacturers to finance them.

We think there are many other exhibitors who feel that the visitor from New York went to more dinners than theaters.

A Note to Steve.

Steve—Next time you send in some Eldorado throwaways, please send just one on white paper and maybe we'll reproduce it, but we cannot do much on yellow stock.

Steve Farrar is getting out some nice throwaways, but evidently he has soured on features, for the stuff is mostly comedy, with Syd and Charlie Chaplin and Billy Ritchie on one bill.

Just a Little Credit.

The Owl, the O-Row-Nay organ, keeps up to date and William Lord Wright's column in Selig's Scissors and Paste seems to help a lot. If you don't know about it and do want program stuff to clip, get the Selig sheet weekly and you'll find a whole column most of which is really readable stuff without any special Selig tinge. Not wanting to swell William up too much, it is about the best "pure reading" that goes into any manufacturer's press sheet, because it is the most available. But the best thing in the Owl for house purposes is an editorial column that tells things simply and honestly. There should not be so much surprise over the latter, but some editors of house programs make Annanias look like an incompetent amateur. For example the Owl does not announce first runs. It tells what first runs are, tells why it cannot afford good first runs and tells why the subjects they run are still fresh if not brand new. That sort of talk is better for spiking guns than a lot of misstatement, and as a matter of fact, first run is no better than an older service if the reels have been carefully handled, except to the man who is afraid that a competitor will get the release first.

Archie Winning, the Princess, Percy, Ill., sends in a card ticket with an interesting explanatory letter in which he says:

> I am anclosing a coupon or ticket I got out for "The Battle Cry of Peace." We worked it in this way: First, we called up the exchange to see on what date we could get the picture and then got them to hold it open for us for five days. Then we got busy with the tickets and in three days we had sold enough to assure the success of the engagement and sent the exchange the O. K. The idea of the coupon was that in case the sale was short we could give up the idea and permit the tickets to be cashed at the bank. This was the only way we could think of to swing the matter, as this is a mining town of 1,092 according to the 1910 census, and work is very poor just now. Have been a constant reader of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD since we have been in business (about three years), and the first thing I turn to each week is the Advertising for Exhibitors department. We have gotten so many helps from it we feel as though we could not do without it.

That is the way many others feel about it, for this paper gives REAL service in all departments of management.

The ticket states that the holder is entitled to one admission to the performance of the "Battle Cry" on a stated date and that in the event the picture is not shown on that date the card will be redeemed at the bank for twenty-five cents.

It seems to us that others could do well with this provisional booking scheme. It is as unique as the old scheme of the exhibitor in the State Right days who used to sell advance tickets at a discount and get the rental money in before the day of showing to guard against bad business due to the weather. It takes the small town managers to get these real ideas. They have to be resourceful if they would make money.

Mr. Winning makes an excellent suggestion that we are passing higher up. He suggests that we put the page number on the back of each issue, that those who are looking for back material can tell what issue to find without taking down and examining a lot of copies. A simple binding would obviate this difficulty. Our own scheme is to punch a couple of three-sixteenth inch holes in the issue close to the back, using a common drive punch and a hammer and gauging from the last previous issue. Then we make a binding with a shoestring. This serves until the bound volume comes out, but there is no time limit on the life of the binding. At the same time the paging on the ridge would help and will be done if it is practicable.

Took a Prize.

The Rex Theater, Colvis, Cal., entered a float in a recent festival and was awarded first prize for the best advertising float. We do not think that any prize should go to the photographer who made the post card that conveys this information, as the picture will not reproduce. It is an oblong frame work mounted on a bicycle with an arch of paper, streamers and flowers. On the side was lettered:

House shows were advertised in the ends, but the sides were given to this excellent propaganda statement.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Merwin Turns Producer.

BANNISTER MERWIN, former Edison star writer and for some time past the Editor for the London Film Co., has gone in for production. It was not a shift of his own seeking, but was due to changes in the staff that required a director in a hurry and, in default of an eligible director Mr. Merwin had to step in. He writes:

> At the back of my mind there has for some time been a suspicion that a man will never get for his own work a production satisfactory to himself unless he makes it himself. The obvious reason is that a man who produces his own play recognizes the fact that on the production side he is not a creator but an interpreter. His production work consists chiefly in making his actors get his story over for him. He has the additional advantage of knowing what his characters and his sets ought to look like.
> Another fact has been strongly borne in upon me during the last year or so. It is that no man can become a real photoplaywright unless he can get close to production. Books like yours are helpful, but their chief value is in teaching the tyro to understand the practical thing when he gets the opportunity of seeing it. That's why I have always given sincere tyros full access to our floor. Plimpton used to do the same thing at the Edison studio.

We believe with Mr. Merwin that practical knowledge makes the best man, but we do not believe that actual studio experience is absolutely an essential to success. On the question of books we believe that no book can teach an aspirant to write plays. It can only tell him how the work should be done and put him in possession of information valuable to the extent of the author's own knowledge, but we believe that good and practical scripts can be written without personal knowledge of the studios, if the playwright has done a proper amount of study and practice work.

But Mr. Merwin's letter is less interesting from this point than from his new point of view as a director. Even with his own stories to handle he realizes that as a director he is an interpreter and not a creator. This is what directors must realize before they are really competent. If they work with the stories of others they are not creators but interpreters. Paderewski is both a pianist and composer, but when he plays the works of other composers, he does not seek to create new compositions on the old theme. He does not make radical changes in tempi and notation. He does give to the rendition of the composition the best of his musical intelligence and because his intelligence is more fully developed than the parlor entertainer, his interpretation is more musicianly, but he interprets, he does not re-create; therefore he is master and not a faker. This is a point that most directors cannot grasp. They do not study the script in an effort to interpret the author's ideas in intelligent fashion. They read it, if at all, with a view to making the changes that will force the story to match their own narrow viewpoints. Mr. Merwin will win as great a success as a director as he has as an author because, being an author, he realizes the vital importance of presenting an idea as a whole and not in part the idea of the author and in part his own.

How, Please?

Says a Mr. White:

> You quote William Lord Wright—"That an incompetent may hit upon a good idea, etc. In other words an incompetent gets a big idea, develops it poorly. Submits it to a producing company and gets it back with the usual rejection slip. Now Mr. Staffwriter appreciating the value of the big idea, goes to work and turns out a great story. His story is not like the incompetent but the big idea is there and YOU DON'T CALL THIS STEALING. I DO and this is the best argument in the world for the copyright law.

Will Mr. White please write again and explain to an interested world how in hades a copyright law will help things any? Does Mr. White know anything about the copyright, or is he one of those who thinks that "Copyright, 1915," will throw a scare into a thief? Under the efficient administration of Mr. Thorvald Solberg the copyright law has never been more efficiently administered than at this moment, but copyright is still merely a registration and not a preventive. Copyright is merely the recording of the fact that you claim protection for certain published material. It is a legal notice that you intend to protect your rights, but it is up to you and your lawyers to enforce that protection.

The incompetent may hit upon a good idea. Sometimes he does. If he does and the idea is stolen we call it stealing along with Mr. White, but it is only about one time in a thousand that the incompetent does hit upon a decent idea, and it is only once in a thousand times that he does not think his stuff is stolen because he sees on the screen the idea that he and perhaps thousands of others have written in the last few centuries. It is not a "great idea" to tell of a mismated pair who are about to break up the partnership but who quit when they find they cannot divide the grave of their dead kiddie. It's still a reliable idea, but the novelty has been rubbed off. Quite recently a man swore us to secrecy before he would divulge his plot, and we got out a carbon and showed him we had written the same thing three years ago. Had it not been for the carbon, he would have been positive we were stealing.

There is a serious angle to this boob wail of theft. It is becoming more and more difficult for the beginner to obtain any help at all. The latest to hold up his right hand and solemnly swear never again to help man, woman or child with his script writing is Harry Chandlee, who has just written:

> The other day I had a letter from Lubin enclosing one form an embryonic author of picture plays congratulating them on a certain production and stating that in his opinion he had supplied the original idea for the story and that it had been appropriated without his consent and without compensation to him. He laid the blame on me and the following is the sad tale of why he did it:
> Nearly two years ago this individual whom, I had known for about 20 years, sent a story to me personally at Lubins asking if I would read it and give him a criticism. He had already submitted it to Lubin but it had bumped up against the shock absorbers and bounced back. I read the script and wrote him saying that it was not heavy enough for two reels and that we were making very few one reel pictures. It dealt with the plans of an aerial torpedo which were in the care of the male lead and, as usual, were stolen by the heavy. The heavy simply came in, ripped open the desk "and stole the papers." As I remember it the rest of the story was about as novel as this incident.
> About 15 months after I returned his script and had forgotten all about it George Terwilliger handed me the synopsis of a story that he had been doping out and asked me if I would supply a means for electrocuting a man which would be technically correct and also if I would put the story into scenes. The picture was afterwards released as "The Nations Peril." This story involved the idea of an aerial torpedo, invented by the male lead, the plans of which are stolen by the female lead, who is tricked into doing so by the heavy. The rest of the story deals with the invasion of the United States by a foreign power with a multitude of detail concerning it.
> Now, this author, still in the egg, gets the idea that his little one reel script submitted 15 months before anyone thought of the "Nations Peril" supplied the basis for the 5 reel feature, and thinks that he should have been paid, and also that his name should have been given as co-author. Not only this, but without saying anything to me, he writes to Lubin and accuses me of stealing his story. As a matter of fact, Terwilliger had never even sniffed the atmosphere surrounding his script and the idea of the torpedo and stealing the plans was in the synopsis which he handed me. The complaining individual loses sight of the fact that the idea of stealing plans probably originated with Noah when he started to build the ark. He also fails to take into consideration if I had not shown him the kindness of reading and criticising his story, the circumstance could never have arisen. He jumps in and yells "Thief!" the first crack out of the box without taking the trouble of looking into matters or to consider that he might possibly be wrong.

It might be interesting to add that seven or eight years ago, criticising films for the old Film Index we commented upon a Lubin release and wrote that this particular company had within a short period used enough stolen plan stories to last them for a year.

Here you have the two sides of the question, and here you have the reason for the gradual withdrawal of help from the novice. It is hard on the man who plays the game fairly, but he must suffer for the sins of his class.

More Than That.

A real photoplay is something more than a few sheets of paper covered with typewriting in a certain form.

OF EPES WINTHROP SARGENT'S
Technique of the Photoplay
Will come from the press some time in June. This is not a reprint of the second edition, but a new work of seventy-two chapters and appendix.
Watch for announcement.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two or three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps, (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 139.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Suppose you were running a film which you knew to be perfect, and there was an up and down movement in the picture on the screen; where would you look for the trouble? Enumerate the various things which might cause it. Suppose the movement was sidewise? Suppose the sprocket holes showed on one side?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 132.

Some of the names on the Roll of Honor this week are only there by some stretching, but none got by unless they answered at least two-thirds correctly. Where a man had gone to the trouble of answering and only fell down on one of three points in a question of this character I thought it only fair that his name be included in the Roll of Honor.

On the Roll of Honor are Jos. H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Elmer Paterson, Tama, Iowa; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; M. Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; C. E. Linstructh, Carthage, N. Y.; L. Pagenhardt, Westernport, Md.; V. M. Kidd, Victoria, B. C.; E. N. Crain, Fort Worth, Texas; G. S. Yager, Anadarko, Okla.; C. W. Tuthill, West Orange, N. J.; F. E. Record, Jr., Mineral Wells, Texas, and W. D. Cady, Mt. Pleasant, Mich.

I have selected the reply of Brother Paterson as best suited to the purposes of publication. The ideas set forth with regard to that part of the question dealing with a man jumping off a wall were in some instances rather weird. Of course the understanding of those things has nothing to do with competency in operating, but broadly speaking I hold a man ought to look into the mysteries of everything connected with the things he is handling every day, his mind is broadened, and he is at least to some extent made a better man by understanding all about every phase of the profession with which he is connected.

Reply to Question No. 132.

By Elmer Paterson, Tama, Iowa.

The Question:

In a projected picture it often occurs that the wheels of a moving wagon will either appear to stand still or to revolve backwards. How do you explain this? In some films the figures move at impossible speed; men and women jump to the top of impossible high walls with slight effort. How is this accomplished? Objects and inanimate figures are often made to seemingly move of themselves. How is this done?

The Answer:

In regard to the first part of the question about why the wheels of a moving wagon often appear to be moving backwards or standing still, I offer the following solution. Let us suppose that the wagon wheel has sixteen spokes and that the wagon is moving at such speed that the wheel makes one revolution every second, and that the camera taking the picture is being turned at the proper speed of sixteen pictures per second. We thus see that after the camera has taken one picture, and is ready to take the next, which will be in one-sixteenth of a second later, the wagon wheel will have made one-sixteenth of a revolution (remember it was revolving once every second), hence each adjacent spoke will occupy very nearly the position of the first. When the picture is projected, the eye cannot tell the difference between the two spokes, therefore the spokes appear to be stationary and the wheel sliding along. When the spokes do not advance more than one-half the distance between any two of the spokes, the wheel appears to be going forward, but if it advances more than this, up to the point where the adjacent spoke formerly was, the wheel will appear to go backward.

With regard to the first half of the second part, the speed at which figures move is governed by the camera man and the operator. If the camera is turned slow and the people move at the ordinary speed, when the picture is projected at the ordinary speed the action will be very greatly increased. The way most commonly used, as I understand it, in making the men and women take an impossible jump, say over a wall, is, a strip of film of the proper length for the scene is turned through with the lens capped. The man or woman takes his position on the top of the wall with his or her back toward the direction in which he or she is to jump. The cameraman then cranks his camera backwards. The actor or actress then makes the jump backwards. Of course, when the picture is projected in the proper direction, the direction in which the people jump is reversed and they appear to be making a high jump.

When pictures of inanimate things are made to appear to move the simple "stop picture" is used. Take for example a box of matches. The camera being focused on the box is opened a trifle and one picture is taken. Then the box is opened a trifle more and another picture is taken. Then a match may be made to appear and light itself in the manner above explained. In this manner pictures of plants growing may be made, one or two pictures being taken every day until the plant has the desired growth. When the picture is projected at the correct speed the plant appears to have grown to normal size from a seed in a few minutes.

Madison Square Garden.

From the standpoint of the projection department there is not so very much to tell about the Exposition at Madison Square Garden; also the various exhibits have already been described in another department of a previous issue of the paper. The only projection machine exhibitor was the Nicholas Power Company, which, following its usual course, was there, in the vernacular, with bells on. The Power Company had a large, beautifully decorated space, which was one of the centers of attraction in the Exposition, particularly when our old friend, Power, was present.

J. H. Hallberg, supply dealer, and manufacturer of the Hallberg Economizer, had a large and quite attractive exhibit. The National Carbon Company, and the Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Company were both on deck, the former proudly displaying to the assembled multitude their carbons, particularly the new negative metal coated solid carbon designed for use on D. C., which was not only shown but also demonstrated in action. The diameters for 40, 55 and 65 amperes are 5/16, 11/22 and ¾ of an inch respectively. The Westinghouse Company had, in their booth, one of their Mercury Arc Rectifiers in operation. Mr. Speer, manufacturer of the Speer Carbon was "among those present," and exhibited his carbons, giving away two sample carbons to each exhibitor and operator, the same being encased in a neat pasteboard box. The Pierson Film Cleaning Machine, a new mechanism designed to thoroughly clean film, was on exhibition in the balcony, where it attracted considerable attention. J. H. Genter, manufacturer of the Mirroroid Screen, put in his appearance for one day, though he did not have an exhibit. The Photoscope had a booth in charge of W. J. Patterson. The machine attracted much attention, and Brother Patterson was kept busy explaining its good points. The Carroll Non-Rewinding Magazine was displayed and demonstrated by its inventor, E. W. Harris. The Carroll has some excellent points, and is a thoroughly practical device which is designed to eliminate the rewinding of film. The Automatic Film Rewinding Company of Harrisburg, Pa., exhibited and demonstrated their rewinding machine, which is designed for use in operating rooms. This device will be described and illustrated in a future issue. It is a good stunt, and one which can be recommended to the favorable consideration of theater managers and operators.

There were various screen surfaces on exhibition, one of which was a new transparent screen surface, the Trans-Lux, which attracted much attention due to the fact that a minature picture was projected constantly to its surface. This kept the screen surrounded by a crowd most of the time, and was a mighty good advertising stunt. Max Berner, of Local 306, was at the machine.

The Novelty Slide Company had an elaborate and a very attractive display, and the Film Fire Prevention Company attracted much attention with their fire prevention device which automatically closes the ports, and does various other things in case of danger. This device will be described, as will the Pierson Film Cleaning Machine, in some future issue.

Aside from these things I do not remember any exhibits of more than passing interest from the projection point of view.

On "Projection Day" the editor had the pleasure of addressing a gathering of operators and theater managers on his favorite topic, namely: projection, particularly with regard to the tremendous loss due directly to incompetency in the operating room and theater managerial positions. The hour was set for 2.30 in the afternoon, and this meant that the crowd was comparatively small, since practically all New York exhibitors were busy raking in the coin in that hour, and the operators were equally strenuously engaged in bombarding something like six hundred New York screens with snap shot photographs at the rate of from sixteen to twenty-five a minute. Practically every New York operator who was idle or could get off was there, however, as well as some out of town men, among them Peter Benard, business agent of Local No. 227, Bridgeport, Conn., and two representatives of the Trenton, N. J. Local, whose cards have unfortunately turned up missing now that I need them. There were also a scattering of exchange men and exhibitors present, and I am told, some of the big producers were either there or represented.

The editor talked for nearly two hours, only to find at the end of that time there were still very much to say. He was nevertheless obliged to "cut it short" because there were other speakers to follow. Mr. Nicholas Power, vice-president of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, presided at the meeting. Brother Power has the faculty of doing the right thing at the right time and in the right way, therefore he is popular. At the end of the editor's address Mr. Power introduced Mr. Hilles, the inventor, not of motion, but moving pictures in 1870. Mr. Hilles gave us a short but very interesting talk on the methods employed to produce the effect of moving pictures in those days. J. H. Hallberg then followed with a short talk which was well received.

Banquet in Hoboken.

Some time ago, following out the plans already formed, I communicated with the Hudson County Local Union No. 384 and was promptly informed that arrangements would be made as soon as possible. I did not at that time, however, except that the aforesaid arrangements would be so elaborate, though I have always known Local 384, and its president, Brother Ira G. Sherman, to be the livest kind of live wires.

The affair turned out to be a banquet, held in Hoboken at midnight May 6th. At the guest table were I. G. Sherman, toastmaster, Nicholas Power, who needs no introduction, W. Stephen Bush of The Moving Picture World, Robert J. Emory, manufacturer of the Baird projector, Edward Earl, treasurer of the Nicholas Power Company, J. H. Hallberg, the economizer man (that was the way it appeared on the menu, but he was introduced as the Swedish Electrical Engineer), F. H. Richardson, editor projection department of The Moving Picture World, William C. Smith, assistant general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, Mr. Wrede, superintendent repair department of the Nicholas Power Company, and H. B. Coles, president, Coles Motion Picture Company.

And now let me tell you how Local 384 does things. Each member of the local, in addition to paying for his own plate, paid for a plate for his manager. Oh, yes, of course, this costs money, but it was worth money. You cannot get good results cheaply. A few dollars expended this way is apt to have considerable more effect, and better effect, than an equal amount spent on a strike.

Dr. H. Charles Hespe, president, and John E. Moody, vice-president, of the Moving Picture Exhibitors League of Hudson County, were present. In speaking Dr. Hespe said, in part: "In the early days of organization, when I was approached and asked that my operator join the local I was distinctly opposed to any such action on his part, because I did not believe the men were of the type which would render such action on their part anything else than a breeder of trouble. I must say, however, that I am more agreeably surprised, and I am very glad indeed that I have attended this gathering, because in looking at the men before me I see that I was in error in this matter." (I don't pretend that this is a literal quoting of the Doctor's word, but it contains the meaning all right.)

LOVING CUP.

Presented to Ira G. Sherman, President of Local Union No. 384.

The banquet was held in a high class, beautiful cafe. The democratic nominee for governor of New Jersey was to have been present, but sent his private secretary with regrets. The aforesaid secretary made a short well received talk. Our old friend, Nicholas Power, was called upon and gave a brief entertaining history of the early days of operating. He was introduced as the oldest moving picture machine operator, and addressed the gathering as "brothers and fellow operators," winding up his speech by presenting to President I. G. Sherman, on behalf of Local 384, a beautiful silver loving cup.

Messers Earl, Stephen Bush, Emory, Hallberg, Smith and Wrede, spoke briefly, and the editor wound up the proceedings with a talk on projection, illustrated by drawings and photographs, which lasted until 4 a. m.

I was rather proud of one thing though. Naturally, the hour being so late, I had to curtail my address to some extent, and said so. After it was all over several of the exhibitors and some of the operators remarked to me that they would have been very glad, late (or rather early) as it was, to have listened for another hour, and certainly the lecture must be interesting when they were willing to do that at 4 a. m.

Banquet of Hudson County Local Union 384.

1. Edward Earl, treasurer Nicholas Power Company. 2. W. Stephen Bush, Moving Picture World. 3. Nicholas Power. 4. I. G. Sherman, president Local Union 384. 5. F. H. Richardson, editor Projection Department Moving Picture World. 6. J. H. Hallberg, supply dealer and manufacturer. 7. H. B. Coles, president Coles Motion Picture Corporation. 8. Robert Emory, president Baird Motion Picture Machine Company. 9. William C. Smith, assistant general manager Nicholas Power Company. 10. Mr. Wrede, superintendent Repair Department Nicholas Power Company. 11. Dr. H. C. Hespe, president Moving Picture Exhibitors League of Hudson County.

New York Projection.

John Simons, Wellville, Pa., writes:

Am going to be in New York before long. Can you tell me where I will see the best projection?

That is rather a big order. There are about six hundred moving pictures theaters in Greater New York, and of course I do not see by any means all of them. So far as my personal knowledge goes, however, the best projection, everything considered, is at the Strand, Broadway and 48th street, and the Triangle Theater in Brooklyn. The Strand projection is excellent, since the speed, to which I formally took strenuous objection, has been reduced. Manager Rolfe is a man who believes not only in properly staging the picture, but in projecting it in the best possible way.

Over in the Triangle Theater, Flatbush avenue and Fulton street, I have sat through many performances and have never seen a single thing to criticise except the item of speed. They do, as a general proposition, run 'em a little too fast, though I have succeeded in getting the speed materially reduced. There may be places in the city where the projection is better than at the Strand or Triangle, but if so I do not at this time know where they are.

He Disagrees.

H. G. Crose, Gary, Ind., says,

I have read your statements in issue of April 8th on the fusing of rectifier circuits in answer to your question No. 124 with much interest, and would like to disagree with you on one point. For some time I have noticed when fusing a rectifier circuit on a 110 volt circuit, if fuses of the same amperage be used on both the A. C. and the D. C. sides the ones on the A. C. side will, most likely, blow first. I have noticed this in three different operating rooms where the wiring was in perfect condition. I am now taking from 40 to 45 amperes from the D. C. side of a rectifier and have blown 75 ampere fuses on the A. C. side when there were four 60 ampere fuses (one on each side of the line in two different places) on the D. C. side of the circuit. I believe this to be due to wattless current surging on the A. C. side which, of course, does not exist on the D. C. side, and which, while it does not register on the wattmeter must be taken into account in fusing the A. C. side, and in figuring wire sizes. This condition exists with motor generator sets and with rotary converters to a certain extent also. I have never had an opportunity to measure the power factor, or the instruments with which to compute it, but it seems to me a logical explanation of the case, and I think of no other reason for the condition. Even though the rectifier had a unity power factor the ratio of transformation is not sufficient to allow an A. C. fuse of half the amperage of the D. C. fuse. A 40 ampere D. C. arc would require a pressure of about 55 volts, and as the resistance of the tube must be overcome in the secondary circuits, the pressure necessary to do this (10 to 15 volts) must be added to the arc voltage and numerous other losses then would make the A. C. amperage considerably more than half the D. C. amperage. As a matter of fact, however, considerable of the excessive voltage is overcome by reactance instead of being transformed. This giving a ballast effect similar to a rheostat, preventing excessive current when the carbons are brought together and making the arc handle easier by keeping the amperage nearer constant with different distances between carbons. This reactance produces the before named condition, wattless current. The amount of wattless current depending to a certain extent upon the amount of regulating reactance in circuit. If the rectifier is operated on 220 volts then, of course, there is more transformation.

You also stated that the resistance of the tube was constant. I have seen it written by unquestionable authorities on the subject that the drop in the tube is constant under all voltages and amperages. It should be so as far as the voltage is concerned, but the latter part does not seem to conform to ohms law. The explanation is that the conductivity of the mercury vapor increases, or its resistance decreases with increase in the amperage. There are electro-chemical theories explaining this which are, however, of little interest to most operators.

By decreasing the D. C. voltage of the rectifier, the drop in the tube may be made practically nothing as compared to the voltage delivered, and the rectifier may be made to have practically the same efficiency as the auto transformer, which may be quite high, and it is on such circuits (high voltage and comparatively low amperage, like a number of street arc lights in series) that the rectifier belongs where it not only effects a considerable saving in percentage over motor generator sets and converters (even if they could communicate the voltage required), but they also affect this saving over such a large amount of power that when a tube burns out it could be replaced many times over and still money could be saved.

In motion picture work, however, the drop in the tube is such a large part of the D. C. voltage that it cannot effect any large saving over a motor generator, and has the objection of the undesirable tube besides.

To me, the easiest way of remembering the construction and operation of a rectifier is to remember it as an auto transformer with a regulating choke coil, or reactance in the primary circuit, and with two secondary circuits, the current flowing in one of the secondary circuits through one-half of the tube, and the arc on one-half cycle, and through the other secondary, the other half of the tube, and the arc on the other one-half cycle; each cycle overlapping the other, because of the reactance, so that the mercury vapor does not condense. Bearing in mind, of coure, that in an auto transformer part of the secondary current is received by direct electrical connection with the primary and part being induced by the agency of magnetic flux.

If the tube of a rectifier flashes and goes out, the operator should be sure it is a burned-out reactance before connecting up his reactance to operate it as a choke coil in A. C. When the reactance burns out the tube will flash very brightly for a one-half cycle and go out, due to lack of reactance to maintain the mercury in vapor form through the zero voltage period.

A simple and effective way to locate an open circuit when the rectifier fails to start, or the tube fails to shake, is to shunt the starting circuit with a test lamp and shake the tube by hand. If the rectifier then starts, the fault lies in the starting circuit, and it may be located and repaired at leisure. If it fails to start, then the fault lies in the D. C. side, provided, of course, there is voltage on the A. C. side.

After cogitating on this matter for some time, I finally sent Friend Crose's letter to the General Electric Company, Schenectady, with request for their opinion. In due time came the following reply:

Replying to your letter of April 11, attaching a copy of letter from an operator at Gary, Ind., would say that there is no reason why the Gary operator should have trouble by blowing 75 ampere fuses on the A. C. side of the rectifier which is delivering 40 to 45 amperes D. C., unless it is due entirely to the fact that he is feeding the carbons so closely as to draw more than 45 amperes from the rectifier. Don't think he should blow 75 ampere primary fuses even though carbons be frozen.—Ed.) Our tests show that a rectifier when operated from 110 volts, 60 cycles, delivering 40 amperes at 50 volts, will have a power factor of about 77 per cent; and, figuring efficiency even as low as 65 per cent., this would show about 36 amperes A. C. drawn by the rectifier when the line voltage is 110. The operator's argument regarding wattless current is taken care of when you consider the power factor of the outfit involved.

The following formula will serve in computing A. C. current:

$$\text{AC. line current} = \frac{\text{DC amps. x DC volts}}{\text{Eff. x P. F. x AC voltage.}}$$

For example, the figures above, note that the $$\text{AC. line current} = \frac{\text{40 A. DC x 50 V. DC}}{\text{65\% Eff. x 77\% P.F. x 110 A.C. V.}} = 36.3\text{A.}$$

As stated above, the blowing of the fuse may have been due to holding the carbons together too long. When carbons are held together the A. C. current is increased considerably more than the D. C. output. This is due to the fact that the efficiency of the outfit falls off as well as the lowering of the power factor, which means the increasing of the wattless current.

I do not know where the operator gets the information that we claim that the A. C. current is only one-half of the D. C. current. This is not a claim made by the General Electric Company, because the input current of the rectifier does not bear any definite relation to the D. C. current; it depends on the D. C. output of the rectifier and also on the A. C. line voltage.

If the statement has been made that the resistance of the tube is constant, this should be corrected. Since, within certain ranges, the resistance of the tube varies inversely with the current flowing; that is to say, the drop across the arc remains constant for any current within the working range of the rectifier tube. It would be almost an impossibility to reduce the drop of the rectifier tube as suggested by the operator from Gary. The actual drop of the rectifier tube is due to the resistance of the spot of contact of the cathode and the resistance of the spot of contact of the anode, and not so much to the length of the arc or conducting vapor, which same holds true within the working range for which the rectifier is designed. If, however, the current was increased considerably, so that the density of the ionized vapor be increased beyond the limit for which the tube is designed, then the drop across the arc (tube, you mean, don't you? Ed.) would become appreciable.

The operator's statement regarding the rectifier when used on series street lighting is correct. The drop in the rectifier tube is proportionally so small as compared to the D. C. output, that the loss in the tube would reduce the efficiency of the system, as a whole, very little, but it must be understood that for low voltage work, such as that required for moving picture machines, the drop in the rectifier tube is appreciable, and the efficiency of the outfit is much lower, the exact percentage depending on the D. C. voltage at which it is operated. Some operators operate as low as 45 volts, while others operate as high as 60 volts D. C. The rectifier efficiency is, however, considerably better than that of the motor-generator set, because, while the motor-generator set with this capacity will have an efficiency of about 65 per cent, when run at full load, and as it also requires resistance, the loss of this resistance should be taken into consideration in comparing the efficiency of the two outfits.

I find myself unable to agree with either Brother Crose or the General Electric so far as the blowing of the 75 ampere fuses be concerned. Even with the resistance of the arc entirely eliminated it seems to me there would not be 75 amperes taken from an A. C. lens, and in order to blow a 75 ampere fuse at least an 80 ampere flow would have to be maintained for a period of one minute or more.

I am wondering if it does not happen that Friend Crose's A. C. fuses are located in a very warm place, whereas the D. C. fuses are located in a comparatively cool place. This would make a lot of difference, and might explain the whole business. I would like to hear from operators, who are running rectifiers, and who have same fused on both A. C. and D. C., as to their experience.

Lens Combination.

I. F. Taylor, Newberry, S. C., says:

Have a 1.5 inch diameter objective. When the picture is in focus on the screen the distance from the aperture to the back surface of the lens is 3.5 inches. Will you kindly advise what combination of condensers are needed, and what distance to place them from the aperture? At present I am using a 6½-7½ condenser combination, with 18 inches from the aperture to the front condenser. I am afraid, however, I am losing light in the objective. Have been using National carbons, pulling 60 amperes, 65 volt A. C. through a Fort Wayne compensarc. Recently bought a new supply of carbons, and find they are not marked as Nationals have been in the past. In fact there is no mark on them at all. They give a good light, in fact better than the other carbons did, but they have one fault for which I cannot account, viz.: there is a small flame which periodically runs around the carbons just once. In other respects they are fine, and produce a brilliant white light.

Turn to Table 1, page 141 of the Handbook, and look down the left hand column until you come to 1½, the diameter of your objective; then following over to the right we do not find 3.5, or anything near to it; in fact we have to go down two horizontal columns in order to get 3.53 in the second column from the right, and 3.58 in the right hand column, opposite which, in the left hand column, we find 1⅝. Even if you can get 21 inches between the apex of the front lens and the film you would have to have a lens 1⅝ inches in diameter in order to avoid light loss. If, however, you have a machine with which you can only get 18 inches between the apex of the front condenser and the film, then you would have to have a lens 1 13-16 inches in diameter, using one 6½ and one 7½ condenser spaced so that their apexes are not more than 1-32 of an inch apart. This whole matter, Brother Taylor, hinges on your understanding how to use Table 1, page 141 of the Handbook. If you can only get 16 inches between the apex of the front lens and the film, then following down the column under 16 until you come to 3.580, which is practically 3½, and then running out to the left hand column you see that your objective would have to be 1 15-16 inches in diameter in order to avoid light loss.

Those asking questions of this kind will do well to advise me as to the extreme distance it is possible to get with their machine between the apex of the front lens and the film. Without this piece of information I am hampered in my reply, but owners of the Handbook will be able to match up their own optical system by means of Table 1, page 141, without asking any questions of any one.

As to the carbon fault, why I smiled at your description: "The flame runs around the carbon just once." The only reason I could advance for that is it wants to see if the back door is closed. Seriously, however, Brother Taylor, you will have to go into a detailed description before I could think of even attempting to diagnose the flame case. Presumably you mean that your arc is operating at 65 volts.

Closing the Books.

The editor is in receipt of complaints from a great many operators who have attempted to join the union, only to find the books closed. Now it seems to me that, granting the proposition that it may in some instances be not only advisable but necessary to "close the books" and refuse more members, still here is a thing which can be very easily overdone. The privilege of "closing the books" is one which is highly susceptible of abuse, nor can any union possibly justify the closing of its books unless it is in position to supply a thoroughly competent man for every job within its jurisdiction. I don't like to go into matters of this kind, because I fully recognize the fact that legitimate arguments can be advanced both for and against the practice; also I am willing to concede the proposition that it is highly inadvisable to take in new members in a town or a city where there are already sufficient COMPETENT operators to meet the requirements. Please take note, however, that this hinges upon the word competent, and of my own knowledge books have been closed in some cities when there was not one really competent operator to every five jobs. In my humble opinion the closing of books under these conditions cannot be, by the wildest stretch of imagination, justified.

It is a pretty tough proposition to keep a competent man out, in favor of an incompetent, and, mind you, competency means something more than mere ability to project a reasonably good picture. I take the position that it is up to the union to see that its members DO project that kind of picture. In other words I believe, as I have always believed, that it is a part of the duty of the union to check up the work of its members, and penalize those who fail to deliver the best screen result possible under the conditions the man works under.

I do not wish to go into this matter any further at this time. In fact I did not want to mention it at all, but feel that it is the duty of this department to warn operators that the wholesale closing of union books might easily breed a condition which would be intolerable. As I see the matter now, the real solution of this proposition is an extended term of apprenticeship, and I believe there is no one thing will more thoroughly justify active work on the part of operators' organizations than the endeavor to force an adequate operators' apprenticeship, and I for one am going to quit talking one year and make it two in future. TWO YEARS APPRENTICESHIP IS LITTLE ENOUGH TIME FOR A MAN TO BECOME A THOROUGHLY COMPETENT MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATOR.

Mr. Dirt in the Aperture.

Raymond Brown, St. Louis, Mo., writes:

I guess you think St. Louis is rather slow, as I have seen nothing in the department from our city, though I have been reading the same for quite some time. Well, I am going to start them going, or at least try to do so by sending a description of a little device for removing Mr. Dirt from the aperture. This is designed specially for Power's projectors, but will work on any make of machine. I know there are many operators who don't mind dirt on the aperture, but this device is intended for particular men who don't care to have their picture framed with brickbats. The illustration will show how it works, and the whole thing costs but a few cents.

A is the front plate of the machine; B the lens jacket; C the slip tube or lens; D a small brass tube which is tapped at the end so as to accommodate two nuts, fitted one on either side of plate A to hold the tube in position. E is a small spray which may be obtained from any ten-cent store. It is attached to the end of tube D, and is bent to strike the aperture at an angle. F is an ordinary camera bulb, attached to the outside of tube D. Squeeze the bulb and bluey! away flies Brother Dirt.

As I understand this device the tube is designed to run along the side of the lens barrel and set back a little distance from the aperture, so that the air blast will strike the whole aperture and clean all sides of it.

I would suggest, however, that whereas this scheme ought to be practical, and while we appreciate Brother Brown's good intent in sending it in, the plan adopted by operators in large New York theaters is even better. They get a glass tube, similar to a medicine dropper, only larger and longer, and affix thereto a small bicycle or automobile horn bulb. This instrument is inserted either in an opening specially made in the casing of the machine or, in the case of the Power's Six, elsewhere, and you can take it from me that it is a pretty tough piece of dirt that will stand the resultant blast.

If any considerable number of operators would like to get a glass tube of this kind I will see what I can supply them to you for—without any profit of course.

The advantage of the glass is that if you happen to get it in the light ray it does not show appreciably on the screen.

The Making of a Direct Positive.

The production of a positive image instead of the usual negative on the moving picture film has been the subject of considerable investigation by photographers and chemists.

Various formulas have been tried with greater or less success, but the use of Thiocarbamide (Sulphorurea, Thiourea), has probably been used less than any of the others.

The Editor has conducted some experiments along these lines and with the co-operation of Mr. Samuel Wein, Photo-Chemist has been able to make an exceedingly good positive direct.

The literature on this subject is not extensive as all investigators did not publish or speak of their results. However, Col. Waterhouse (Eder: Jahrbuch fur Photo. Volume 16, page 170; 1892), first described the use of thiocarbamide (sulphorurea, thiourea), and having its chemical formula as follows C. S. (NH_2). His work seems to have attracted little attention, however, and apparently the results obtained with thiocarbamide by others (Nipher: Trans—and Science, St. Louis Volume 10 page 210, 1900 quoted in Journal Physical Chemistry, Volume 13, page 237; 1909), were unsatisfactory.

The formula Col. Waterhouse made use of was:

Lithium carbonate	50 grs.
Sodium sulphite	50 grs.
Eikonogen	50 grs.
Thiocarbamide (saturated solution) few drops water	10 ozs.

Develop the film in the usual manner and fix.

Recent Perley (Journal Physical Chemistry Volumn 13, page 649, 1909), has worked with thiocarbamide and has had better results with a hydroquinone developer instead of eikonogen as suggested by Col. Waterhouse, Herewith is the formula Perley used.

A.

Water	1000 grs.
Sodium Sulphite	126 "
Hydroquinone	21 "

B.

Water	1000 grs.
Sodium carbonate	126 "

Add 20 c. c. of a thiocarbamide solution to 25 c. c. of solution A and 25 c. c. to solution B.

All of Perley's work was done on lantern slides which are quite different from moving picture films, the writer having had the occasion to do some experimental research work along this line has concluded that his formula was unsatisfactory for the results were seldom successful and then only to a limited extent.

The predominant factors in the use of thiourea is the following:

1. The brand of film used.
2. The proportion of thiourea or its salts.
3. Developing agent.
4. Proportions of alkali.
5. Proportions of restrainer.
6. Character of thiourea salt used.
7. Temperature of solution.

Satisfactory positives were obtained with an adurol developer, containing a rather large amount of alkali, but with amidol the results were unsatisfactory. The effect of metol is very peculiar. A small amount of it added to the regular hydroquinone developer increases very much the density of the negative image. Hybrids generally result, although by decreasing the exposure very much and developing for a short time, some rather poor positives would be obtained.

The tetra-thiourea, ammonium bromide recommended by Col. Waterhouse, but apparently not tried by Perley or other investigators, was very much superior to the simple thiourea, giving clearer and better positives. The following is the formula made use of:

A.

Water	6¾ ozs.
Sodium Sulphite	390 grs.

B.

Water	6¾ ozs.
Sodium carbonate	830 grs.

C.

Water	34 ozs.
Tetra-thiourea-ammonium chloride	15.5 grs.

For use take one part A, one part B and two parts C.

With the exception of the temperature, the developement is the same for negatives. The temperature is absolutely essential to the successful working of the process. The limits are between 15 degrees and 18 degrees centigrade or 59 degrees and 64 degrees, Fahr; and they must be strictly adhered to.

The negative appears and then the film apparently fogs, and is then exposed to a diffused light, and then replaced in the developer, after three or four minutes the positive image is clearly seen.

The corresponding chloride salt, however, appears to be better still, and works without a restrainer (bromide). The iodide was not satisfactory. All these salts were prepared according to the directions of Reynolds (Journal Chemical Soc. Volume 59, page 384, 1891).

Has Static and Other Well Known Troubles.

L. C., Nashville, Tenn., writes:

> I am doing considerable amateur work in moving picture photography, but lately have had some difficulties to overcome about which I wish you would give me some advice. I am using an old model Prestwitch Camera in which the velvet track has been replaced by a metal one. The magazines are wood and also old.

Then I developed a strip of unexposed film and found static present before the exposure was made. This form of static appears principally at regular intervals along the perforations. Was it caused by the perforating machine?
> I also find my film slightly fogged along the edge. Is this due to leaky magazines, if so can I purchase aluminum or other metal ones and how expensive are they?
> I project my own pictures in a local theater and find quite some up and down motion on the screen. What causes the vibration?
> How expensive are Carl Zeiss F. 3.5—50 mm. lenses? Where is the best market for news pictures if I take any and how much do the News Companies pay?
> If you will favor me with these answers I shall be very grateful to you.

The static trouble that you are experiencing undoubtedly comes from the perforating machine, unfortunately the manufacturers of film do not guarantee stock against static. The fog on the edge of the film is caused by a light leak in the magazines and if you will cover up any cracks with lantern slide binding or the ordinary passe partout tape this leak may be stoped.

Metal Magazines for the Prestwitch Camera can be obtained at a cost of about $12.00 each. They are superior to the wooden ones as they will not warp or crack.

The vibration of the pictures on the screen is of course magnified many times and probably is caused by the tilt or panoram being loose. If you will tighten up these too wherever possible, the vibration should be lessened.

Carl Zeiss lens are not obtainable except at a premium due to the present European War. The prices range from $40.00 to $100.00 for the 50 mm. F. 3.5.

The best information regarding news pictures was given in a recent issue under the title "Hints to Newsfilm Cameramen."

The price paid for good negative which is accepted ranges from 60 cents to $1.00 per foot.

Correspondence Club.

Leonard A. Bayer, 1435 Avenue "A," New York, writes:

> Kindly add my name to this Correspondence Club that you mention in your column. Also please be so kind and send me full particulars pertaining to the principles of this club.

I am very glad, indeed, to note that each day or two brings a new member to this correspondence club. The object of this club is merely to develop the interest in Motion Picture Photography among photographers who are situated all over the country.

By correspondence you can take up with any of the men whose names we have published from time to time, any question or matters that you believe would interest them. For instance, if you have been particularly successful in making a certain class of pictures, such as out-door work, or if you have lent your energies toward photographing microscopical subjects, either of these things will interest other members of this club.

If you write them, perhaps in return they would tell you of some interesting experience that they have had.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by Clarence E. Sinn and S. M. Berg

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS concerning any phase of the work of the orchestral leader in a photoplay theater may be addressed to the Moving Picture World and the answers of Mr. Berg will appear in a Question and Answer Department, which will be a regular feature of our Music Page.

Musical Setting for "Fate's Boomerang."

Released May 29 by the World Film Corporation.

Suggestions prepared by S. M. Berg.

By special arrangement with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release, and a sufficient number should be secured to provide one for each member of the orchestra. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 61½ T "Two days later" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 65¾ D "When Rick takes drink" is a description of action.

George Castleman, engineer, is given charge of a railroad construction camp in the mountains of North Carolina. His wife Mildred, a society butterfly, refuses to leave New York, but remains in town, carrying on a flirtation with Arnold Morgan, a wealthy society man. In the mountains George meets and falls in love with Zell, a mountain girl. After a time Mildred wants a divorce and seeks evidence against her husband. She arrives at the camp and hires a rig to carry her to Zell's cabin. The driver, intoxicated, loses control of the horse and an accident ensues in which Mildred is killed. Zell and George are then united.

Care must be taken in scenes of dancing from 21¼ to 46½. They are mostly flashes only and music suggested must be stopped by the orchestra and piano only continued. Note particularly: Agitatos as suggested. Shot and Explosion, 34½; Auto effects, 58¼; Train effects, 61½.

The THEME selected is "My Memory Maid"—Hintze.

Time schedule: 67½ minutes (five reels—4,500 feet).

Time.		Sub-titles or descriptive cues.	Music
0	D	Opening.	Little Villagers .....Howgill (Allegro moderato)
1¼	T	Rick Lally, a degenerate.	Agitato No. 2.
2½	T	A fatal recklessness—	Repeat: Little Villagers.
4	T	John Shayne.	Petite Bijouterie .....Bohm (Valse intermezzo)
6½	T	"Oh forget your cards."
8	T	Arnold Morgan.	My Memory Maid.....Hintze (Moderato) (THEME)
11	T	"Give up the life."	Pastoral .....Howgill (Moderato)
14¼	T	"What are those men doing?"
15¼	T	"You say a railroad brings."	Darinee .....Howgill (Andante moderato)
17½	T	Great events must bud—
18	D	When Zell picks up her dog. (Water fall effect.)	Repeat: THEME
21¼	T	A week later. (Piano only.)	Doucement .....Robert (Valse lento)
23½	T	"This is for a rainy day, Zell."
25	T	"Why is it that the most."	Sparklets .....Miles (Moderato)
28	D	When Zell buys paper.	Agitato No. 1.
29	T	Two weeks later.	La Lisonjera .....Chaminade (Molto capriccioso)
34	D	When Rick picks up gun.
34½	T	A venomous friend. (Shot—Explosion.)	Agitato No. 3.
35¾	T	"Our best friends come."	Repeat: THEME.
37¼	T	Treachery masks itself.	La Gloria .....Densmore (Two-step)
39½	T	"I guess old rattler."	Repeat: THEME.
41¾	T	As the moon rose.
42½	T	"I hoped maybe you'd come."	Serenade .....Chaminade (Moderato)
45	T	Arnold Morgan gives a party.	Douce Caresse .....deFuentes (Valse)
46½	D	Dancing scene. (Piano only) (Flash)
48½	T	"I got an all night ride."	Serenade .....Karganoff (Moderato assai)
50	T	Morning brings home—
51½	T	"Good God Zell it won't do."	Repeat: THEME.
53¼	T	Four days later.	Clarice .....Loud (Valse intermezzo)
57¼	T	Night. A loneliness—
58¼	T	Zell completes a journey. (Auto effects)	Pulcinello .....Aletter (Allegretto)
61¼	T	"Quick we will follow her."
61½	T	Two days later. (Train effects)	Le Retour .....Bizet (Allegro vivace)
64	D	When Mildred gets into rig.
65¾	D	When Rick takes drink.	Agitato No. 4.
66¾	T	"I can't understand."	Repeat: THEME.
67½	T	The End.

Note: For the convenience of readers of the Moving Picture World, a price list of the numbers suggested in the above cue sheet is to be found in G. Schirmer's advertisement on page 1763.

Musical Publications and Their Adaptability to the Screen.

Reviewed by S. M. Berg.

IN ARCADY. NEVIN. BOSTON MUSIC.

1. A Shepherd's Tale. Characteristic 2-4 allegretto semplice. Melody for flute, strings and oboe.
2. Shepherds all and Maidens Fair. Allegro con moto, giocoso in 4.
3. Lullaby. Andante semplice. Melody for cello and strings.
4. Tournament. Allegro energico a la polonaise.

Although published in 1913 it is so appropriate for motion pictures that leaders will find this suite a valuable acquisition. It is sufficient to say that Ethelbert Nevin composed it and that Hugo Riesenfeld is responsible for the very excellent orchestration.

LONGING. PIETRO FLORIDIA. SCHIRMER.

A pleasing intermezzo in 2-4 andantino grazioso. Arranged for orchestra by Otto Langey.

INTERMEZZO. ARENSKY. SCHIRMER.

This composition will admirably depict impending disaster, allegro action or chasing. Tempo 2-4 presto and prestissimo. Arranged for orchestra by Ross Jungnickel.

YESTER-LOVE. BORCH. SCHIRMER.

As the name implies, Yester-Love is an intermezzo. An original composition arranged by the composer. Well suited for a theme or semi-pathetic situations.

SONGS FROM SHAKESPEARE'S TIME. SCHIRMER.

This is a necessary requirement of the theater orchestra. It is suited to be used at English educational, scenic weekly or light drama. Songs are transcribed and arranged by Gaston Borch and include "The British Grenadiers," "The Hunt is Up," "Come again sweet Love," "Gentlemen of England" and "The Knotting Song."

SCOTCH POEM. MacDOWELL. JUNGNICKEL.

This arrangement of Edward A. MacDowell's "Schottisches Gedicht" (Scotch Poem) by Ross Jungnickel will be found to be one of the most effective pieces of storm music published. It has been carefully edited and extended and is easily repeated without modulations. No picture player can be without this publication.

NIK-O-DE-MUS. RICHARDSON. SNYDER.

Don Richardson has given another of those melodious 2-4 numbers well suited for Western, comedy or allegro action.

INCIDENTAL AND DRAMATIC MUSIC. MIDDLETON. HAWKES.

No picture player can have too many Incidental and Dramatic Collections. This set, published by that well-known English house, contains 36 numbers including allegros, agitatos, marches, storms, burglary scenes, jigs and reels, death-bed scenes, comedy action, etc.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE. ROSSE. HAWKES.
INCIDENTAL MUSIC.

1. Prelude in 4, moderato. After introduction a cantabile movement for cello and bassoon with strings and harp accompaniment.
2. Intermezzo "Portia." Lento. Melody carried by wood-winds and strings.
3. Oriental march, tempo di marcia, poco a poco crescendo, later marcato closing maestoso.
4. Prelude, espressivo lento, later andante patbetique.
5. Doge's March. An excellent maestoso pageant march.

This suite within a very few months will be in every musician's library in the country. Nothing published is more appropriate for picture work than these very excellent compositions. They were originally written for the Shakespearian production of "The Merchant of Venice" as produced by Arthur Bourchier at the Garrick theater, London, England.

SACHEM ROSEY. ROSEY.

An Indian intermezzo in allegro 2-4 well suited for light Indian drama or bright Oriental scenes. A valuable addition to the picture library.

SESAME. KING. FEIST.

This is described by the composer as an intermezzo Arabian. The tempo is allegro moderato and it can well be described as a neutral Oriental. So little of this material is available that it will be welcomed.

Preparedness.

By S. M. Berg.

From California to Maine and from New Orleans to Lake Michigan, the main topic of conversation is Preparedness. It matters not what a man's calling is, or by what means he is obtaining his livelihood, Preparedness arises in his conversation. In New York City on May 13th a continuous stream of human beings heralded with bands and carrying the Stars and Stripes marched up Fifth avenue in an effort to convince the slackers that they were ready and willing to defend their country's honor when called upon.

These few words are published under a musical column so it is fitting that we deal with the word Preparedness from the musician's point of view, especially in the service of musical interpretation for the film. Preparedness means a preparing or fitting, to make ready, to qualify or to provide.

How many of those musicians who are expressing opinions today on Preparedness from a national standpoint are equipped to provide a musical interpretation for a picture on a moments notice? How many are there who have their libraries classified so that whatever character of music is needed they can lay their hands on it? How many have a library which contains the national characteristics such as English, French, German, Russian, Chinese, Indian, etc.? How many have a collection of what might be termed the standard classics? Unfortunately the greater number of musicians that are earning their living by playing the picture are totally unprepared for their positions. They give no thought to the problems which they may be called upon to solve and no preparation is made by them to provide themselves with material.

A few days ago a leader of a suburban vaudeville and picture house called on me. He said the management intended to discontinue vaudeville for the summer and were to run pictures only. He explained to me that he realized he would need a large library for this purpose and sought my advice. Immediately upon my asking a few questions I discovered he had no library as he had never bothered to play the pictures up to the present. His chief duty was to play the vaudeville while during the pictures he simply ran through some popular numbers and then left the pianist to improvise. I learned that he was drawing the Union scale for leaders which I believe is $56 a week, and pointed out that from such a salary he could well afford to spend a small sum for music every week. However, his concluding remark was "I've got enough to do with my money. I don't intend to buy music every week." Of course this appears to be an extreme case but it never-the-less is a true one.

A leader in a motion picture theater must possess a large library. He should be thoroughly acquainted with every composition and understand its interpretation and the character of action it will depict. His music should be classified so that whenever he needs a particular number he can lay his hands on it immediately. Thus musicians who desire to become leaders and secure a large share of this world's goods must assiduously apply the meaning of Preparedness as an individual. The old saying tells that charity begins at home. By the same thought Preparedness begins at home also, for you must be fitted and equipped to carry out the work you contract.

Opera Performance Nets $9,000

Actors' Fund Benefits by Entertainment at the Metropolitan —Rialto Week Next.

THE grand tribute performance of the motion picture campaign for the Actors' Fund, held on the afternoon of May 9 at the Metropolitan Opera House, was a huge success. It was the finest performance of its kind ever held anywhere and added substantially to the glory and the treasury of the great humanitarian undertaking of the heads of the film industry. Monday was National Motion Picture Tribute Day and was loyally observed in every state in the Union. The next event of importance in the canvass for the $500,000 endowment of the Actors' Fund will be another affair of large pretentions. It will comprise an entire "Actors' Fund Week" at the Rialto theater with elaborate special features, 25 per cent. of the proceeds to be donated to the campaign.

The mammoth metropolitan tribute netted $9,000 for the cause. Every seat in the vast house was occupied and many people stood at the rails in the orchestra and balconies. The great crowd was treated to a most exceptional program. Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the National Executive Committee of the Campaign, and Daniel Frohman, president of the Actors' Fund, who arranged the affair, covered themselves with glory.

The offerings ranged from Puccini to Berlin in the music and from Bernard Granville to Edna May in the specialties. Geraldine Farrar was the principal attraction and never appeared to better advantage. She sang in excellent voice and was given a most enthusiastic reception. After singing the second act of "Madame Butterfly," assisted by Antonio Scotti, Rita Fornia, Angelo Bada and Pietro Audisio, Miss Farrar appeared once more at the end of the program when Mr. Granville sang a song written especially for the occasion by Irving Berlin and dedicated to her. George Polacco, with the full Metropolitan Orchestra, accompanied all the operatic selections.

The event at the Rialto will last for five days commencing June 5. It had been originally announced that this series of special performances would start on May 22, but S. L. Rothapfel, director of the house, found that he had not sufficient time in which to prepare the Tribute on the scale he wished. The first two days will be Motion Picture Days, with appearances of the most prominent screen favorites in costumes of roles in which they are best known. Wednesday will be devoted to the appearance of leading actors and actresses of the stage. Thursday will be Musical Day, and Friday will be Allied Arts of the Theater Day.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of May 21 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Sweet Kitty Bellairs" at the Strand.

DURING the week beginning May 21st the Strand Theater presented Mae Murray in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," a photoplay produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company in association with David Belasco. The film drama is from the play of the same name written by David Belasco and Egerton Castle and presented by Mr. Belasco in New York some time ago.

Mae Murray, one of the newer recruits to the screen, in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" finds a part well suited to her beauty and winsomeness. The play is a romance of the days of powdered wigs, courtly gallants, fair ladies and swords quickly drawn. The action occurs in Bath, England, the famous watering place, the latter part of the eighteenth century. The meticulous care given to Belasco stage productions has been employed in the direction of the film version.

Rube Goldberg's "The Boob Weekly," a scenic and a cartoon comedy, were also on the program.

"Going Straight" at the Rialto.

The Rialto offered a double bill during the week—Norma Talmadge and the "Fine Arts Kiddies" in a Triangle photoplay offering "Going Straight," and Charlie Chaplin in his last Essanay production, "Police."

"Going Straight," the vehicle in which Norma Talmadge is seen, is a five-reel drama by Bernard McConville and has for its foundation the difficulties that beset the reformed crook endeavoring to "go straight." It is full of action and dramatic suspense, with just a touch of pathos and heart interest, aroused by the children. By a strange coincidence Chaplin's comedy, "Police," is the direct antithesis—almost a burlesque on the same story.

"In the Land of the Midnight Sun" and "Spain" and a musical program were included in the entertainment.

"Pasquale" at the Broadway.

The attraction at the Broadway theater was the latest Morosco-Paramount photoplay, "Pasquale," with George Beban and Myrtle Stedman in the leading roles. Mr. Beban plays the part of Pasquale. The story is a deft blending of laughter and tears, several of the scenes being laid on the Italian-Austrian battle front. The Broadway Weekly, colored scenics, short comedies and cartoons rounded out the bill.

W. J. GILMORE WITH MELIES.

W. J. Gilmore, former manager of the 23rd street branch of the General Film Company, has been appointed eastern representative of Melies Manufacturing Company and will make a tour of the eastern states in behalf of Knickerbocker Star Features and Vim comedies. Mr. Gilmore left New York on Friday, carrying with him sample prints of several forthcoming productions. He is one of the most popular men in the film industry and has a high reputation as a judge of a picture's merits.

Mr. Gilmore's experience in film marketing extends over fourteen years. Graduating into the General Film Company from successful management of a chain of theaters, he entered the Twenty-third street branch and worked his way up until he became assistant manager. His assumption of the management of the branch was marked by a large increase in the volume of business done. He confesses that he has always leaned toward the representation of some brand to which he can devote all his energies.

The Laugh Is On Louis Mann.

SOME time ago, in an address before the Altoona, Pa., Chamber of Commerce, Louis Mann was credited by the press with the following statement: "Over every moving picture house I would place the sign, 'The home of non-intellectuals.'"

We are indebted to Mr. Mann, because he has made the world laugh by his inimitable stage impersonations. In this instance he evokes another laugh, but the laugh is on himself.

Do I recollect aright? Did not Louis Mann and his amiable and talented wife, Clara Lipman, make an essay in feature pictures, a little over three years ago? Were not the productions made in New York? Did they not turn out to be a fizzle, financially, because the camera did not take kindly to Mr. Mann, and because Mr. Mann on the screen failed to make the appeal that he did on the stage?

That was not Mr. Mann's fault; it was his misfortune. But why blame the innocent moving picture for it?

Tut! Tut! Tut! Mr. Mann. Just as many (and then as many times more) intellectuals go to the moving picture houses as flocked to see you on your successful tours. Don't take any man's word for it. Attend the moving picture houses and prove it for yourself.

A Storm Raised by Illinois Vice Film.

"The Little Girl Next Door" (the Illinois vice film), which is now showing at the La Salle theater, this city, is raising a big storm among the reform forces.

The City Council Committee on Judiciary is at the point (at the time of writing) of recommending an order directing Chief of Police Healey to revoke the permit for the subject, for the reason that it is improper. It is well understood, however, that the Chief need not follow the order.

The reform forces are urging the committee to go ahead. A letter from Samuel P. Thrasher, superintendent of the Committee of Fifteen, which denounces the vice film, will be read before the committee. In this letter Mr. Thrasher says, in part:

"Why the law which applies to obscene books and pictures should not apply to a motion picture like this one I cannot comprehend.

"No one can view even the expurgated edition of this noxious effusion without being convinced that the intent and matter therein displayed could not be reduced to print without making the book so lewd, lascivious and obscene as to compel its exclusion from the United States mails and render its publishers liable to prosecution.

"I think the film should never have been released to the public. Now that it has been, it should be more thoroughly revised, by the elimination of additional features, or its exhibition prohibited."

Thomas Santschi a Victim of the Muse.

Thomas Santschi, Selig's well-known leading man, who was on here for several months past with "The Crisis" company, made a host of friends during his stay.

Tom is a great, gentle giant of a man in his normal moods; but—as his McNamara in "The Spoilers" shows—a fighting demon when he has his back to the wall. He has the part of Stephen Brice in "The Crisis," a character that should also fit him well.

To look at him one might be impressed that Mr. Santschi would be about the last man on earth to dabble in poetry; but he has done it, although he stoutly disclaims that it is poetry.

Out at Camp Nobles, Catalina Island, with Jack Prescott and a chum from Harvard as companions, one evening, several months ago, the crime was committed. The bracing air, aided by equally bracing libations and the picturesque beauty of the scene, inspired the trio.

"Let's sing a song of the weed," suggested Tom Santschi.

"And another of the rose," said Jack Prescott.

And that was the origin of "The Weed and the Rose," which Tom Santschi finally evolved, as given here:

THE WEED AND THE ROSE.

A little weed grew at the foot of a rose
And they both breathed the same summer air;
But the poor weed sighed as it looked at the rose;
For the rose was so sweet and so fair.

At twilight the little weed tremblingly spoke,
And it told of its love for the rose;
The rose never heard; for the language of weeds
Is a language a weed only knows.

Then at night the little weed heartbroken cried,
And its tears washed the foot of the rose;
And sweeter she grew and her green leaves spread wide
Shutting out the sweet sunlight and air;
So the little weed died at the foot of the rose,
And the rose never knew it was there.

To me, this little poem shows both imagination and great tenderness. Maybe, it will suggest an idea for a scenario to someone.

Chicago Film Brevities.

J. A. Kent, publicity and sales manager of the Great Northern Film Company, New York City, arrived in Chicago Wednesday, May 10, and remained until Monday night, May 15. Mr. Kent reported fair business for his product. During his stay here he interested himself in the censorship of several of his subjects by the Chicago board.

Jay E. Sherwood, state vice-president for Wisconsin of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, paid this city a flying visit one day last week. Mr. Sherwood is manager of the Grand theater, Madison, Wis., and secretary of the Grand Theater Company, which owns it. This house seats 750 people, and is showing to good business. Mr. Sherwood stated that conditions for exhibitors were very good in Madison, but that local women societies are trying just now to establish a local censorship board. He did not believe that anything would be done, however, as exhibitors in Madison are their own censors and very careful to look over their programs before exhibiting them.

Clarence A. Frambers, president of the Photodrama Club, 3018 Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, recently returned from California, where he has been writing special stories on the staffs of the Lubin, Triangle-Keystone, Thomas H. Ince and American Film companies. Since the policy of the club has been changed to make all photoplay writers who are not residents of Chicago eligible to membership, so many applications have been received that it was deemed advisable for Mr. Frambers to return and attend to the business matters and to have the meetings conducted under his personal supervision. The club is being conducted for the benefit of amateur and successful scenario writers, and is making a fine showing and doing a great deal of good for those interested in scenario work, Mr. Frambers informs me.

The Selig players, who have been engaged for several months past in the production of the interiors in "The Crisis," left this city on Wednesday evening, May 17, for Vicksburg, Miss., where the famous battle scenes describing the Winston Churchill story will be filmed under the direction of Colin Campbell. Among the players who left were: Bessie Eyton, Eugenie Besserer, Margaret Fawcett, Thomas Santschi, George Fawcett, Matt Snyder, Marshal Neilan, Cecil Holland, Leo Pierson, and others. A large party of friends, among whom were William M. Selig and Gilson Willets, were at the Illinois Central Twelfth street station to see them off. An advance force of scenario artists and stage carpenters, under the direction of Gabriel Pollock, have been in Vicksburg for some time past, doing the preliminary work necessary before Director Campbell's arrival. Mr. Campbell expects to conclude his work in Vicksburg so as to arrive in St. Louis with the company early in June. After finishing the exteriors there, the company will return direct to the Pacific Coast studios.

James McGee, manager of the Selig studios at Los Angeles, arrived in Chicago Thursday, May 18, and after a brief stay, proceeded to Vicksburg, where he will act as business manager of the Selig "Crisis" company.

"The Valiants of Virginia," adapted from the thrilling novel of Hallie Erminie Rives, will be the next Selig Red Seal photoplay to be released, through V-L-S-E. Inc., following "Into the Primitive," which will be released on May 29. The Selig-Rives photoplay will be released on June 26.

Selig's revival of "The Two Orphans," which will be released through the General Film Company's regular service on Monday, June 12, has created considerable interest among exhibitors. It will probably be remembered that the fine cast of players in this photodrama includes Kathlyn Williams, Winnifred Greenwood, Myrtle Stedman, Charles Clary, Thomas J. Carrigan and other photoplayers well known in the film world.

"Historic Indiana," the Indiana centennial picture which is being produced under the direction of the Selig Polyscope Company, is now nearing completion. Interesting scenes were taken on Monday, May 15, in which the noted Hoosier poet, James Whitcomb Riley, appeared before the camera at his home in Indianapolis. Mr. Riley will be seen in the picture with a small army of children surrounding him, each of them a devoted friend. The production of the picture is being financed by the Indiana Historical Commission.

The following programs have been announced at the prominent downtown theaters in Chicago for the week beginning Sunday or Monday, May 21 and 22:

Studebaker—"Gloria's Romance," third chapter; "A Perilous Love" (George Kleine), and Mae Murray in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" (Lasky). Wonderful business is reported at this house for the first two weeks of "Gloria's Romance."

Fine Arts—"God's Country and the Woman" (Vitagraph), written by James Oliver Curwood, and produced in eight reels. This picture was photographed in Great Bear Valley, 9,000 feet above sea level, in the San Bernardino mountains, in southern California.

Colonial—Mollie King in "Fate's Boomerang" (World); Harry Watson in a Musty Suffer comedy, "The Lightning Bellboy" (George Kleine); a George Kleine scenic picture, and the Hearst-Vitagraph Weekly.

Orchestra Hall—Edna May in "Salvation Joan" (Vitagraph), presented by V-L-S-E, Inc., and other pictures. Misses Nellie and Sara Kouns, soprano soloists, contribute the concert numbers. H. W. Hill, manager, advises me that the second week of his cinema concerts has been very satisfactory, and that the attendance exceeded the corresponding week of last year, at which time Mary Pickford was also the leading attraction. The revival of "Tess of the Storm Country" for the second week was a great success. Although the photoplay is three years old, and many advised against its repetition, it proved that the management's judgment was emphatically right.

Strand—Norma Talmadge in "Going Straight" (Triangle), and other pictures.

Ziegfeld—Edmund Breese in "The Spell of the Yukon" (Metro), and "The Unwritten Law" (California), the latter being held over for another week on account of the great interest it has created.

La Salle—Third week of "The Little Girl Next Door" (Illinois vice film). The biggest business in the history of this house is reported for this picture.

J. K. Burger, general manager of the International Film Service, Inc., New York, arrived in Chicago Wednesday morning, May 17, to assist J. T. Bowman, the Chicago branch manager of the company, in arranging for the exhibition of the fifth, sixth and seventh episodes of "The Mysteries of Myra" at the Princess theater, South Clark street, Thursday morning, May 18. A general invitation was sent out to Chicago exhibitors and to those in surrounding towns. The well filled theaters showed the great interest manifested in the serial by the assembled exhibitors, who displayed considerable enthusiasm as the films were screened. The exhibition was something unusual, as the trade has seldom been given an opportunity to see the fifth, sixth and seventh episodes of a serial when the fourth is still running in the theaters. Mr. Burger was so impressed with the success of the exhibition that he immediately decided to follow the same plan in all the larger cities in the country, where International exchanges are located. He left for San Francisco on Thursday evening.

William J. Flynn, general manager of the Park, Shenandoah, Juniata and St. Charles theaters, in St. Louis, arrived in this city Thursday May 18, and returned the following day. He made a pleasant call at the World office, during which he informed me that his company has done wonderful business at the Park and the Shenandoah for the past season. The former seats 2,000 people, and is so constructed that the roof can be removed during the summer months and everything made snug and tight against the inclemency of winter. At these two houses he has been alternating with a stock light opera company and a stock dramatic company. The Park Opera Company finished its one hunderdth continuous week at both houses on April 24 last, and the Players their one hundredth continuous week on April 29. High-class talent was employed for both companies, and high-class productions were always the rule, sometimes as high as $500 royalty for the week being paid for a drama or opera. Mr. Flynn is thinking of presenting pictures in the Shenandoah during the summer months. The company shows moving pictures throughout the year in the Juniata and the St. Charles, the former seating 1,250 people and located in a residential section, the latter being in the downtown section. Paramount pictures are shown at the Juniata, and features of the Universal, Mutual, Metro and World at the St. Charles. Very fine business has been done at both houses, especially in the Juniata, for the past year.

The benefit at the Auditorium theater, Sunday, May 14, in aid of the American Theatrical Hospital Association, brought $5,000 into the treasury. The proceeds will go towards the construction of a hospital where transient theatrical or moving picture people in need receive free care and treatment. The hospital is now under construction at Irving Park Boulevard and Sheridan Road.

Thomas H. Ince, Kay-Bee's famous director, made a brief stay in the city on Saturday, May 13, on his way from the Pacific Coast to New York City. While here, he announced that his big production, "Civilization," will soon be shown to the Pope. This great picture, which shows the devastation of war and the blessings of peace, will shortly be sent to Rome. First of all, it will be sent to Washington, where the President, his Cabinet, government officials and members of Congress will be given a special and private presentation. Mr. Ince expressed the opinion that the merger, which will include Triangle, Lasky and Famous Players, will make for efficiency and the reduction of overhead expenses. J. Barney Sherry, the well-known Kay-Bee character heavy, accompanied Mr. Ince east. "Civilization" will be given its initial showing in New York City, although Mr. Ince expressed the preference to have Chicago see it first.

Monday, May 15, was Actors' Fund day at the moving picture theaters of Chicago, when over 200 exhibitors contributed 10 per cent. of their day's receipts to the Fund. Owing to the absence, in New York, of William N. Selig, who is the treasurer of the Chicago committee, no accurate figures of the aggregate amount can be given at the time of writing; but, from what I can glean, the total will make a fine showing for Chicago.

Harry Weiss, who for some time past has been a very successful manager of Metro's Chicago branch, has resigned his position. Mr. Weiss has not as yet given out what his future connection will be, but it is understood that he has several flattering offers. No one, as yet, has been appointed to succeed him; but J. S. Skirboll, district manager, will have charge until his successor is appointed. Harry Cohn, well known in exchange and exhibiting circles in Chicago, and who for a long time was connected with George Kleine and the General Film Company as exchange manager, is assisting Mr. Skirboll.

John Le Roy Johnston writes me that he has succeeded Charles G. Brown as editor of Amusements, Minneapolis. I met Mr. Johnston while in Minneapolis, and he acted in the capacit of editor of that publication during the recent exposition.

RELIABLE FEATURE SPREADING OUT.

Manager Schwartz of the Reliable Feature Film Company of Chicago reports that since going into larger quarters business has increased. "Defense or Tribute" and "The Ordeal" were recent purchases for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. From the manner in which bookings are being made it will be necessary to have several copies working at one time.

Jack Schwartz, road manager, is traveling through Wisconsin and C. Christopher through Indiana George Lindon is Illinois representative.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. VON HARLEMAN and CLARKE IRVINE

NO SINGLE FILM COMMISSIONER.

Mayor Sebastian Says He Does Not Intend to Appoint One—Believe Police Department Competent to Handle Situation.

MAYOR SEBASTIAN has announced that Los Angeles now has no moving picture censor.

The ordinances adopted by the council abolishing the local censor board and providing for the appointment of a single censor commissioner went into effect on May 4.

The Civil Service Commission has called an examination for the position of single censor commissioner which will soon be held. Mayor Sebastian, however, says that he does not contemplate appointing any censor commissioner. He expresses the belief that the situation can be handled by the police department. He said:

"The ordinance abolishing the censor commission is now in effect, and, as I understand the situation, we haven't any censorship over moving pictures at the present time, outside of general police regulations. I have no intention of appointing a censor commissioner."

HARBINGERS OF "CIVILIZATION."

Leo S. Harding and Andrew C. Edison on Transcontinental Motorcycle Trip to Spread Propaganda for Great Picture.

Thomas H. Ince this week has undertaken a most novel and effective way of advertising from coast to coast his greatest production, "Civilization." Leo S. Harding and Andrew C. Edison of the Ince forces have started on a motorcycle trip across the continent to blaze the fame of this remarkable picture. They are traveling via the National Old Trails from Los Angeles to Portland, Me. The motorcycle is equipped with a side car and every available inch of its space is elaborately decorated with notices that "Civilization is coming," while a large suitcase is filled with literature and photographs to be distributed along the road.

Andrew C. Edison and Leo S. Harding Receiving Instructions from Thomas H. Ince Before Starting on Transcontinental Trip.

"Civilization" has entered its fourth successful week at the Majestic theater. Now that the big film has settled down to a steady run in Los Angeles negotiations are under way for its early showing in all the other large cities of the country. Producer Ince, accompanied by a large staff of aides, is now in New York arranging for its metropolitan premiere. It will probably be shown at the Knickerbocker Theater. When in the East Mr. Ince will also arrange for its presentation in Washington, Philadelphia, Boston and other big centers.

LARGE THEATER PROJECTED.

Motion Picture House With Three Thousand Seating Capacity Planned for Broadway.

The assurance of the launching of one of the most important building enterprises undertaken in Los Angeles in several years was announced this week. The Business Stability Association, composed of many of the leading business men and owners of business property in the downtown district took an option on a ninety-nine-year ground lease of the property at the corner of Third and Broadway and started a movement for the immediate erection of a modern theater and studio building on that site.

The association expects to erect a structure costing about $600,000. Of this amount $400,000 is declared to have been subscribed. As soon as another $100,000 shall have been added an architect will be commissioned to go ahead with working plans. This statement was made by Miles S. Gregory, secretary of the association. Mr. Gregory also announced that it was the intention to complete the project, with no indebtedness, each subscriber holding his proportionate amount of stock and participating in the returns from rentals on that basis.

The building in contemplation is to contain a motion picture theater with a seating capacity of three thousand persons equipped with a stage large enough to accommodate opera performances. There will also be fourteen small specialty shops on the ground floor, some on Broadway and others on Third. The plans, as roughly outlined, call for fifty-six studios, each measuring 16 x 28 feet, on the upper floors facing Broadway, and eighty studios, some 15 x 100 feet, and others 16 x 29 feet, overlooking Third street. A space, 120 x 100 feet, in the basement is to be given over to a cafeteria.

The building will have a frontage of 120 feet on Broadway and of 194 feet on Third. It will be of fireproof construction, probably of reinforced concrete.

MABEL NORMAND BACK AT WORK.

The Mabel Normand Feature Film Company Rehearsing a Four-Reeler at Their New Studio.

Mabel Normand and her own company of players began rehearsals on May 15, on the first of the features to be released under her name. Early indications are that the story will be in four reels and that of possible the Mabel Normand Feature Film Co. will make about eight such comedy-dramas a year.

Although Miss Normand has her own studio located in one of the beauty spots of Hollywood she has by no means cut adrift from the famous Keystone studio where she was featured for years.

Hampton Del Ruth, managing editor and assistant manager of production of the Keystone Film Company, has been given further anxiety through the four-reel comedy-dramas which require a de luxe treatment for The Mabel Normand Feature Film Co.

To those connected with the famous laugh-making plant of Mack Sennett the picture of the first rehearsal looked much like the rehearsals of the past when the young woman was being featured by the Keystone Company. With the exception of James Young, who will direct Miss Normand, and a carefully selected cast of associate players, Mr. Sennett and Mr. Del Ruth lent their aid as in the past, the only real difference being the story, which is straight comedy-drama.

"I am more than delighted with everything," Miss Normand said when asked what she had to say about her future as well as the present plans. "I am more than satisfied with the first story selected, I feel I have regained my old good health again, and now I am anxious to hear Mr. Young say 'camera' and begin work again."

The comedienne spoke of her trip to the East and said that she felt the trip had done her a world of good.

Miss Normand brought many trunkfuls of costumes home from the American fashion center, and many of these gowns, like the plot of the first story, are to be reserved for the first nighters who enjoy her first picture.

The site of the new studio of the Mabel Normand Feature Film Co. is located just off Hollywood boulevard a few blocks before the traveler reaches the Fine Arts studio.

The women members of Miss Normand's company will dress in individual dressing rooms on the same tier with that of the leading woman, while the men will have their quarters on the ground floor. The front part of the building will be used for the general offices, the stage being overlooked from the dressing rooms.

ACTORS TO SPEED FOR FUND.

Will Hold Racing Events and Automobile Fashion Show at Ascot Speedway on Memorial Day.

Plans are under way and, with every well-known film star in Southern California appearing in some capacity, the race meet at the Ascot speedway May 30 for the benefit of the Actors' Fund will outdo a five-ring circus in its many features.

There will be speed contests for cars, motorcycle races, bicycle races for women riders, motion picture comedies in the making, old-timers' races, "grudge" races and, as a fitting finale, the classiest motor car event ever staged anywhere.

At the wheels of the most stylish motor cars in the world will be seen the well-known beauties of the film world. This event will be known on the program as the Automobile Fashion Show. A committee of well-known judges will be selected to pick the most stylish turnout, car, driver and ability to handle the car to count.

Needless to say, the film queens will pick their cars with care. Almost all the well-known stars are good drivers and the competition will be keen. The judges will not endeavor to name the Motor Queen and the King of Cars. This will be left to the ten thousand persons who are expected to gather for the big event.

As each contestant parades her car in front of the stand the crowd will be asked to express its appreciation. The judges will decide which four receive the most applause. Then the crowd will be asked to pick the two best. And then the winner will be selected. The rivalry will be keen and there is certain to be some husky rooting for the various favorites.

The race for the old-time cars will cause lots of fun. The Keystone company is building a picture around this race and there will be much comedy in the making.

SEEING AN E. & R. PICTURE.

This week we made another stroll Eastlake Park way to the studios of the E. & R. Jungle Film Company.

We found Clem Pope, publicity man, in his den, as usual, surrounded by stacks of copy and pounding away for dear life on his typewriter. Said Clem after the usual greeting and perfunctory small talk, "Want to see a corking E. & R. comedy, which," modestly blushing, "I wrote myself?" Of course we would, never before having seen the famous "Nap and Sally" on the screen. So to the projection room we went and to make the occasion still more of an event, the leading man and the leading lady of the E. & R. Jungle Film Company joined us, and Nap took a seat on our right and Miss Sally on our left.

Of course we felt duly honored and glad to be in such distinguished company. However, we must confess that we at times became a trifle nervous when the big chimpanzees in the thrilling scenes of the picture would excitedly squeeze our arms the same as two very human children. It certainly was most interesting to watch these intelligent apes gaze with rapt attention on the screen. Whether they recognized themselves is hard to tell. At any rate, they surely acted like it.

The name of the picture projected was "Teacher's Pet," a current E. & R. Release. It's really remarkable the stunts these animal actors perform seemingly without an effort. The photography is unusually good.

"DUSTY" FARNUM STARTS ACROSS CONTINENT.

Dustin Farnum, screen star, will be Dustin Farnum, racing driver, this week. Farnum has designs on the transcontinental automobile record, and will depart from San Diego this week, after dipping the wheels of his Marmon roadster in the waters of the Pacific at Coronado Beach. Farnum's goal is New York City, and he intends to drive there in ten days or less. Farnum's car is a new three-passenger roadster, which was delivered to him last week. His schedule calls for a drive of about thirty-four hundred miles, and he expects to average better than three hundred and forty miles a day in the ten days he is on the road. He will adopt no regular schedule, but will stop wherever quitting time finds him, and the six o'clock whistle will not mean quitting time for him either. He plans to sleep about six hours a night and drive practically all the rest of the time.

And the way he made the dust fly when he pulled out from the coast makes the record's life look rather short.

"DOUG" FAIRBANKS' WILD WEST PARTY.

One day last week Douglas Fairbanks, the popular Triangle Fine Arts star, gave a whooping western dance in his mountain cabin, located at Hollywood.

Most of the guests, who numbered over 200, were clad in picturesque "wild west" apparel of '49 and the scene was typical of those early California days.

Among the many film celebrities who attended were De Wolf Hopper, William Farnum, Dustin Farnum, Charlie Chaplin, W. S. Hart, William Collier, Marie Doro, John Emerson, Paul Dickey, Elliot Dexter, Oscar Apfel, William Hurlburt, Elda Furry, Al Jennings, Norma Talmadge and Winifred Kingston.

"Doug" Fairbanks' Wild West Party.

The affair was given by Douglas Fairbanks in honor of his cowboy and girl friends, most of whom came to the scene of the festivity on horseback. Fred Burns, champion American roper, entertained with some difficult feats, and Chief Big Tree Willow Bird, Eagle Wing and Leandro appeared in Indian dances. Many stage celebrities were seen dancing on the floor with the cowboys, cowgirls, Indians and their squaws dressed in full tepee regalia. Refreshments were served in the true western fashion and everybody had a cracking good time.

HEARST NEWS MAN ACTIVE.

Accompanied by world-famous racing drivers and a number of prominent men, L. K. Dewein, cameraman for the International News Service weekly, left this week on a picture-making trip.

The fame of San Bernardino's road building campaign, which has done wonders in advertising the county to the motoring public of the coast and transcontinental motorists as well, is to be exploited by means of motion pictures. Cactus Kate No. 2, a famous automobile, with Louis Nikrent, racing driver, at the wheel, leaving San Bernardino this afternoon for the desert carried the party.

W. S. Wood, L. K. Dewein and Charles Bigelow are in the party. The San Bernardino county highway commission, composed of W. A. Freemire, J. B. Gill and George Hinckley, accompanied the Los Angeles party through Cajon Pass this afternoon.

The route will include the San Bernardino to Needles highway by way of Barstow. The Grand Canyon will be covered on the north rim, Salt Lake City will be visited and photographs taken of the road work on the way.

The road through Cajon Pass is to be inspected, especially what is known as the new road. The members of the county commission will explain the road-making system and stretches of road where engineering feats have been called into use will be photographed and shown in theaters everywhere.

FAY TINCHER HAS STAR PART.

For the first time since De Wolf Hopper arrived in California last September to begin his motion picture work for the Triangle, Fay Tincher has had a vacation. It proved a most profitable rest, too, because when she returned to Fine Arts two scenarios were waiting for her. When the pictures are completed and released Fay Tincher's name will appear in the big type.

This promotion is in recognition of the diminutive comedienne's faithful work at Fine Arts. She has been in the films less than three years, but when Hopper arrived in California she was selected as foil for the huge comedian. Then followed her Dulcinea in the Chester Withey version of "Don Quixote"; the Widow Marrimore in "Sunshine Dad"; and soon she will be seen as Shortie Sal, a crook's "steady," in "Mr. Goode, the Samaritan." Her first appearance in the films was in Griffith's "The Battle of the Sexes." Subsequently she played in a series called the "Komics." Her stage experience began early, at an age when the permission of the Gerry Society had to be obtained for her appearance in Savage productions and the last Weber and Fields burlesques at the old Music Hall.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

V. R. Day, manager Chicago office of the Essanay Film Mfg. Company, has been in the city during the week and paid a pleasant call to the World office. It certainly was a sight for sore eyes to see a friendly face from good old "Chi."

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, arrived in Los Angeles this week, and after visiting the local Mutual studios proceeded to Santa Barbara.

It's reported that Geraldine Farrar will come West again this summer to appear in pictures for the Lasky company. She has leased Blanche Ring's beautiful Hollywood home, Casa Blanca, in which to live during her picture engagement.

"Gloria's Romance," the wonderful George Kleine serial, has been booked for the entire circuit of Pantages Theaters and will shortly begin its engagement here for twenty weeks.

The Palace Theater on Seventh street, between Broadway and Hill, is now the home of the Triangle features. First run Ince and Griffith dramas and Keystone comedies will be shown there exclusively.

J. Warren Kerrigan has been made defendant in a suit filed in the superior court by his former manager, J. Van Cartmell. According to the complaint, the star owes his rise in the profession solely to the one-time manager's efforts. Before Van Cartmell condescended to take Kerrigan under his guidance, the latter was receiving an alleged mere Pittance, $100 a week, it is charged. He is now getting a salary approximately $500 a week, according to the complaint, due to Van Cartmell's business acumen.

The latter asks $2,706.23, alleged due for services. Van Cartmell states that he acted as the star's business manager from July, 1912, until January, 1916.

Cameron Coffey, four years old, champion child swimmer of the world, has been specially engaged by the N. Y. M. P. Corporation to do some very difficult "water stuff" in a new and as yet unnamed picture they are now filming.

He will dive from the deck of the big steamer "Congress" in the Los Angeles harbor one day this week. It is little Cameron's first appearance before the camera, although he has frequently done stunts fully as difficult as those outlined in the moving picture scenario. This sturdy little lad's prowess in the water, it is said, is truly remarkable.

Mayor Charles E. Sebastian of Los Angeles was adopted in the Sioux tribe at Inceville one day this week, when he was made a central figure in one of the most picturesque events ever staged at the big ranch in Santa Monica mountains.

The Redskins who appear frequently in Triangle Kay-Bee productions had made elaborate preparations for the ceremony. A large bonfire was built, and the beef slain in celebration of the occasion, and an extraordinarily large tepee erected within which to conduct the service.

Chief Two-Lance stood before the candidate, his beady eyes fixed on the Mayor's face:

"How?" he greeted.

"How?" said Sebastian.

Chief Two Lance daubed a splash of red paint on Sebastian's brow.

"Warrior now; can fight," he grunted.

Seizing a beaver's tail, he rubbed it over the candidate's face. Then he placed a gaudy head dress of eagle feathers on Sebastian's head.

"Huh!" he grunted. "Great man now. Heap big chief!"

The squaw of Two Lance brought moccasins. The Mayor's shoes were removed and the moccasins put on.

Then, in a solemn circle, the pipe of peace was passed around, Sebastian taking his puff with the others.

"Can stand now," ordered Chief Two Lance.

Mayor Sebastian arose. The others followed.

"How?" said Chief Two Lance. "You great chief of Sioux. You brother of Chief Two Lance. It is said. You Opy-ia Oompa. How!"

"How?" answered the newly made chief.

Escorted into the tepee of his "brother chief," the Mayor received his brother Indians and shook hands with each as the line passed along.

Then followed the ceremony, Chief Two Lance removed the head dress, stuck a feather in the Mayor's curly hair and the ceremony was completed.

The honor conferred on the Mayor is an unusual one. But few have had the distinction of being adopted into a Sioux tribe. One is Mayor James Rolph, Jr., of San Francisco, and the others William Randolph Hearst and Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

F. E. Dodd and Otto E. Sellhausen, business managers, and C. R. Wallace, director, representing the Selecto Film Company, Incorporated, are in Santa Ana, Cal., with a proposal to have the company make Santa Ana its home. They say that they want to sell stock up to $20,000 to Santa Anans and let the Santa Ana people run the company, they to be employes, and if successful in operating the company possibly to get a third interest in it. The three men have been investigated by the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce and their standing found to be good.

Friday night this week Shakespeare's great drama, "Julius Caesar," will be produced at Beechwood Canyon in Hollywood, with which it is probable the most notable cast that has ever appeared in one of Shakespeare's works.

The cast includes such artists as Tyrone Power in the role of Brutus, Frank Keenan as Cassius, Theodore Roberts as Julius Caesar, De Wolf Hopper as Casca, William Farnum as Marc Antony, and Douglas Fairbanks as Young Cato. Constance Crawley will appear as Calpurina, Sarah Truax as Portia and Capitola Holmes as Lucius. Charles Gunn will play Octavius Caesar; H. B. Carpenter, Decius Brutus, and Tully Marshall Lucilius. Even the most unimportant characters will be fulfilled by men and women of national reputation either on the stage or in films.

About five thousand people will take part in the drama and the pageantry that goes with it, and the famous battle on the plains of Philippi promises to be the most realistic thing of its kind that has ever been shown. It will start on the ridge of the hills behind the central stage and approximately half a mile away, with the armies silhouetted against the moonlit sky and gradually work its way to the finale on the central stage.

There will be something like four or five hundred women and dancing girls in the pageants before Caesar, the dancers being led by Mae Murray, Marjorie Riley and Capitola Holmes.

Arrangements have been made to seat 30,000 people in the vast amphitheater, and there is room for thousands more on the hillside. As a spectacle it will be the most magnificent that has ever been staged in this part of the country.

Will M. Richie, the editor and chief of the Balboa scenario department, returned this week to the Long Beach studios after a month's vacation.

Mr. Richie has supervised all the manuscripts produced by Balboa for over a year and a half. During this time he has written a number of photoplays, including "Who Pays" and the "Red Circle" series.

Douglas Fairbanks and Director Allan Dwan, with a large company of Fine Arts players, this week departed in automobiles for Calaveras county to film the first scenes of Bret Hearte's western classic, "In the Carquinez Woods."

The location selected by the producer is approximately one thousand miles from the Hollywood studio, and the players will be compelled to travel part of the way on mountain burros, the roads being too narrow for the automobiles.

The company is expected to stay for at least two weeks.

Seena Owen, the charming Fine Arts actress, has returned from her three weeks' vacation in Colorado, and is preparing to start work in a new Triangle play soon to be announced.

A very unusual set was erected at Universal City, this week, for the use of director Jack Conway, who is producing "The Silent Battle" featuring J. Warren Kerrigan, and a large number of people were used in the various scenes filmed.

The design was of a large hunting lodge, with trophies of the chase and guns and pistols hanging on the walls of the huge room which had been constructed out of untrimmed timbers. A fancy dress ball was enacted, with many beautiful and odd costumes.

Representatives of all the leading jewelry houses of the Pacific Coast were entertained at Universal City for several hours by Charles Rankin, manager of productions, on Friday, May 12. There were a hundred in the party, all of whom had come to Los Angeles to attend the annual convention of the Pacific Coast Jewelers' Association. Mr. Rankin had the visitors meet a number of the leading actors and actresses and had a special animal act put on for them at the Universal Zoo. If it had not been necessary for the jewelry representatives to be present at the convention they would have spent the entire day watching the making of celluloid dramas at the big film city.

F. W. Woolworth, the well-known five-and-ten-cent store magnate and owner of the New York sky scraper which bears his name, was one of the most interested of visitors at Universal City last week. It was the first time Mr. Woolworth had ever visited a motion picture studio, and he declared that it was one of the most interesting of his experiences anywhere in the world.

Jack Sheehan, American's leading man, has been seen two consecutive weeks in Los Angeles. He visited the stamping places of photoplayers and met the "old gang"—this week the comical laugh-maker visited the beach at Santa Monica where he enjoyed a swim, a dance, and the many amusements to be found there.

Anita King, the Lasky-Paramount girl, visited San Diego last week where she appeared at the popular Pickwick theater, met the president of the exposition, and a lot of picture fans. This week she, with the aid of Mayor Rolph of San Francisco, officially dedicated the new Mission Theater in that city. The Mission is the largest and finest of the surburban theaters in San Francisco, seating some twenty-two hundred people and being modern in every way. Miss King also went to bat with the San Francisco Board of Censors in the City Council Chamber and told them just exactly where they stood. She also took a hand in raising funds for the building of a new Y. M. C. A. home and is still in the north, after appearing at the Actors' Fund ball.

Vitagraph's Western leading woman, Nell Shipman, was the guest of honor one night this week at a gathering at the home of Henry Christeen Warnack, a scenario writer of distinction and the dramatic critic on the Los Angeles Times. Mr. Warnack possesses a wonderful home in Alhambra. It is modeled after the Alhambra in Spain, which served as subject matter for Washington Irving's book, "The Alhambra." Among Mr. Warnack's guests were Mr. and Mrs. Tyrone Power, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Keenan, James Young, Kathlyn Williams, Dustin Farnum, Mr. and Mrs. J. Farrell MacDonald, Arthur Maude, Constance Crawley, Captain and Mrs. Reuben Ford, Ernest Shipman and James Warnack.

Wallace MacDonald, assistant director to Rea Berger in the "Virtue" production, had a birthday one day this week and in the evening gave a party to ten at Edgerly Court. Mr. MacDonald introduced a number of novelties. The guests zigzagged into the dining room, which was handsomely decorated, an immense cake being the central figure. To each fork was attached a string that led to a present. In place of napkins baby bibs were used. The place cards and other features were suggestive of the pictures. Mr. MacDonald was the recipient of a gold knife, gold chain and gold cuff buttons. His guests were Archer MacMackin, Frank Borzage, John Stepling, John Sheehan, Charles Newton, Ed Coxen, Rea Berger, Dick Rosson, Roy Stewart and George Ahern.

Another night this week, the big glass studio of the American Film Co. was the scene of another joyous frolic, when the third dance of the series was given by the Good Fellowship Association. This is made up of nearly two hundred employees of the American.

As on the two former occasions a distinctive feature was made of the lighting effects, all supplied by a technical department that is very efficient in that line.

That these dances are proving popular was shown by the fine attendance, and a large number of the townspeople participated as usual. Quite a number of strangers in the city took advantage of this occasion to see one of the finest glass studios in the country.

Here are a couple of paragraphs of interest sent to us from A. C. Gage of the Glendale Kalem studio. He says that:

Preparations are now being made for a new serial which will be as much out of the ordinary as "The Social Pirate" serial. It should prove to be the best series ever turned out at this studio, the name of which is withheld until a future date.

The fourteenth episode of the "Social Pirate" serial entitled "The Music Swindlers" is completed under the direction of James W. Horne.

Marin Sais had a chance to show that she is a singer by rendering a few selections from "William Tell."

Visitors at the studio were held spellbound by the wonderful performance given by Miss Sais and Mr. Jonasson, in one of the scenes of the music studio.

Next week the "Social Pirates" will take their last cruise in locating the fifteenth episode or final of the series enittled "The Black Magic." This has been a long and strenuous series for everybody concerned, and there will surely be a celebration upon the taking of the last scene, "when the ship goes on the rocks."

Manager Wheeler of Clune's Auditorium, announces that the coming week will find the big house dark for the first time in many months. In the succeeding week grand opera will hold sway and the usual film attraction will be withdrawn this week to permit the use of the stage for rehearsals for the opera and other preparations for the engagement, which will last three weeks.

Senor Florencio Constantino will be the artistic head of the venture and it is already assured that he will be surrounded by a distinguished company of principals and a chorus and orchestra both noteworthy for size and quality.

Following the opera engagement, will come the premiere of Thomas Dixon's multiple-reel operatic cinema-drama, "The Fall of a Nation." For more than a year this big film has been in the making and the information which has leaked out is to the effect that its bigness justifies the time spent in preparation.

The new Garrick theater, formerly operated by J. A. Quinn, has changed hands again. A corporation formed of Los Angeles business men has taken over the property and will immediately place the theater in the front rank. Hereafter the Garrick will be known as "the home of Charlie Chaplin" for the new management has secured exclusive first run of all the new Chaplin comedies made under his new Mutual contract. In addition, the program will contain each week a first-run Mutual Masterpiece—five reel feature—with well known stars playing the leads.

The theater has been remodeled to some extent, a new ventilating system installed, new projecting machines and clear, perfect, flickerless pictures will be the rule in the future.

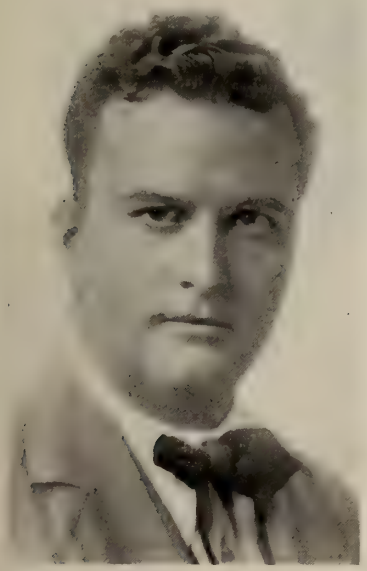
Ince Talks of Culver City

Famous Western Producer Describes the New Plant of the N. Y. M. P.—Has Abandoned Outdoor Stages.

THOMAS H. INCE, the executive chief of Inceville and of Culver City, where are situated the Pacific coast dramatic studios of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, arrived in New York City on Sunday, May 14. His first move was to attend the Board of Trade exposition at Madison Square Garden, where for his benefit was put on the screen the film showing the new and elaborate N. Y. M. P. plant at Culver City.

"We have what I believe is the finest plant for the taking of motion pictures that you can find in this or any other country," said Mr. Ince, speaking of his new studio the next day. "We moved from Inceville because we felt there was good reason to believe that by the construction of a new and modern plant, built upon intelligent manufacturing lines, some of the enormous overhead expenses of taking motion pictures could be eliminated, with the result that bigger and better pictures would be made. Culver City is the last word in studio facilities. It is good commercial planning that has produced it, and then it won't do any harm to remember that close to half a million dollars expended in a tract of sixteen acres—with another sixteen lying alongside of it for future development—makes some considerable showing in buildings.



Thomas H. Ince.

"We have practically abandoned the open-air studio for the taking of our pictures," went on Mr. Ince. "We have come to the conclusion that the best results are to be obtained under glass, and we have equipped all our studios with the best lighting system that we could find anywhere, one that makes possible results that would have been impossible six months ago even. We have five big glass stages, and have the facilities and equipment to add more at short notice. Culver City, I believe, is the top notch in studio work. We have taken what I feel is a large step forward, and the keynote of the whole of the new plant has been something that is sadly lacking in motion picture making heretofore.

"I mean efficient manufacturing methods and proper administration in the layout of the work. I don't pretend to say that we have reached the point where no further improvement may be made, but we have taken a long step forward.

"I think what we are doing now at the Culver City studios will be sure to have its effect upon the motion picture industry, and I am reasonably certain that Triangle exhibitors and patrons will have no reason to complain when they see the steady gain that is now becoming apparent. What we are doing at Culver is going to have its effect elsewhere; it will have to. There is little doubt that the great things that have been accomplished in the motion picture business have been due to the hard, imaginative work of the men who have performed that work, but we have reached a point of industrial development now that makes it imperative that we should begin applying intelligent commercial methods to our work. No industrial corporation would stand for a minute the things that have been done in the name of motion picture production. We have got to make the most of our resources; we have to eliminate waste, and we have to cut our corners in order to maintain high standards and produce better pictures without sacrificing any of the artistic standards we have established. That is spoken for the whole motion picture fraternity.

"Triangle pictures have established themselves, and there is little need for us to do anything now but put the best ideas, the best people and the best work of which we are capable into them. That means, of course, that we will have taken the essential steps for a continued success along these lines.

"The move to Culver City does not mean that we have abandoned the Inceville studios at all. That plant will be used for the taking of special features, and all the William S. Hart pictures will be made there exclusively. Inceville, with its 18,000 acres of western landscape and hundreds of head of horses and cattle, lends itself better than any other studio in America to the making of western pictures."

All of Mr. Ince's society dramas will be made at the Culver City plant, which will be the headquarters of six of his producing companies. With several productions well under way Mr. Ince plans to spend some time in New York before returning to Los Angeles.

World Film Conducts Contest

William A. Brady Offers $5,000 in Prizes to Scenario Writers—Winner to Receive $1,000.

WHAT should prove to be a scenario contest of considerable significance will begin in the Saturday Evening Post of June 3, under the direction of the World Film Corporation, with the sole judge represented in the person of William A. Brady. Mr. Brady, who instituted the contest, and who will devote his personal attention to every scenario or story submitted, will give the writer of the best story or scenario $1,000.

In addition to the capital prize, there will be nineteen other cash awards. The first prize of $1,000 will go to the winner, of course, while to those fortunate enough to write material sufficiently interesting, awards will be made:

Second prize, $750; third prize, $650; fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh prizes will be $500, $400, $300 and $200, respectively, with prizes of $100 each to the next twelve best stories or scenarios accepted by Mr. Brady.

The first announcement runs in a full-page statement in the Saturday Evening Post on June 3. It is an expression by William A. Brady of the fact that, in his opinion, the stories and scenarios submitted and actually visualized during the past several years have been, in the main, trash. He wants live, present-day society and human-interest life stories and believes that almost everyone has had incidents and experiences in life which, if elaborated upon and built up into a plot, or series of plots, would make interesting screen material.

The five thousand dollars in prizes has been deposited in the Mutual Bank of New York, there to remain until the final judgment and awards are made.

The contest will close with the issue of the Saturday Evening Post dated September 15, at 6 o'clock P. M., and the awards made January 1, 1917. All writers are eligible.

GUS INGLIS IN TOWN.

Gus Inglis, a partner in the publicity firm of Willis & Inglis , Los Angeles, Cal., has been in New York for the past few weeks renewing old acquaintances and making new ones.

LUBIN ENGAGES ROBERT FRAZER.

Robert W. Frazer, whose last dramatic engagement was replacing Douglas Fairbanks in the leading role in "The Show Shop," has been engaged by the Lubin Company for an important part in "The Light at Dusk" the story by Anthony P. Kelly, which Edgar Lewis is conveying into a multiple reel screen feature.

AFTER EIGHT LONG YEARS.

Barney Sherry, who has been playing character leads with the Kay-Bee combination in Los Angeles, Cal., arrived in New York on Wednesday, May 17, on a vacation. Barney left New York eight years ago with the first Bison company of players ever sent to the coast by the New York Motion Picture Company and this is the first time in all those years that he has been seen on Broadway.

NEW TRIANGLE PUBLICITY MAN.

Sanford Stanton, formerly editor of the Metropolitan Section of the New York World, and more recently with Selwyn & Co., has joined the Triangle Film Corporation's publicity department, succeeding Wallace M. Powers. Mr. Powers, who has been associated with the Triangle since last summer, will rejoin his old chief, Henry MacMahon, at the National Drama Corporation, sponsor for the Thomas Dixon-Victor Herbert opera-cinema, "The Fall of a Nation," which opens at the Liberty theater on June 6.

"The Yellow Menace" is New Serial

Unity Sales Corporation to Handle Picture Pointing Our Inability to Meet Oriental Foe.

AN IMPORTANT deal in the motion picture industry was consummated recently when the Unity Sales Corporation, through negotiations conducted by Andrew J. Cobe, its vice-president and general manager, purchased a new serial, entitled "The Yellow Menace," starring Edwin Stevens, and written by the celebrated author, Louis Tracy. The picture was made by the Serial Film Corporation, under the direction of William Steiner, and is an elaborate and costly serial in sixteen chapters.

Edwin Stevens, in "The Yellow Menace."

The scenes range from China to New York, employing thousands of people. No more timely subject could well be imagined than that set forth in "The Yellow Menace," which deals with the helplessness of America under present conditions to combat an Oriental foe. It brings home in striking fashion the weak nature of the United States defenses and her inability to defend herself against an invader from across the Pacific.

In support of Mr. Stevens there appears a strong cast, headed by Margaret Gale, who in the course of the production wears more than one hundred gowns, of the most advanced styles, representing an expenditure of over $15,000; Florence Malone, Gerald Griffin, Marie Treador, Armand Cortes and J. A. Hall are others in the cast.

Simultaneously with its appearance on the screen, the novelized version of "The Yellow Menace" is to appear in eleven hundred newspapers throughout the country, giving the picture a tremendous advertising value. Mr. Cobe also intends to inaugurate a nation-wide publicity and advertising campaign, which promises many sensational and unusual features.

Louis Tracy is one of the best-known of English novelists, and his works have been translated into almost every civilized tongue. Among the most noted novels are "The Wings of the Morning," "The Pillar of Light," "The Silent Barrier," "Karl Grier," "A Son of the Immortals" and "The Great Mogul."

As Ali Singh, leader of "The Yellow Menace," Mr. Stevens gives a striking portrayal of his sinister personality of "The Higher One." He depicts the cunning, scheming character of the plotting Oriental, and his make-up is in itself a work of art.

Vim Companies Coming North

Louis Burstein, Managing Director, Returns to New York to Discuss Plans for the Future.

LOUIS BURSTEIN, managing director of Vim comedies, arrived in New York from Jacksonville, Fla., last Thursday, to confer with his partner, Mark M. Dintenfass, regarding the summer plans of the four Vim producing companies. These will leave the Jacksonville studios early in June and will spend the summer months near New York. Mr. Burstein and Mr. Dintenfass have several studios and locations under consideration and the matter will be decided within a few days. The directors engaged in production under the supervision of Mr. Burstein are Harry C. Myers, director and co-star with Rosemary Theby; Walter H. Stull, of the "Pokes and Jabbs" comedies; Will Louis, directing Hardy and Ruge in the "Plump and Runt" series; Harry Naughton and Bert Tracy.

Louis Burstein.

Mr. Burstein waxed optimistic in speaking of the market for Vim comedies.

"I hear a lot of talk about overproduction," he said, "but I am here to say there never has been and never can be an overproduction of quality films. So much footage is being turned out at present that the picture of high quality shines out like a star of the first magnitude. And as the exhibitor has the advantage of the market he is in a position to reject what he does not want and take only the best—something he has not always been able to do. The consequence is that Vim comedies are going strong, and we are ready to increase our output whenever the demand is made."

Mr. Burstein brought with him a number of films, just completed at the Jacksonville studios, which will probably be exhibited privately before exhibitors and exchange managers.

Universal Film Loss at Detroit

Explosion in Cleaning Room Damages Stock of Universal, Bluebird and Metro Film Companies.—Service Not Interrupted.

An explosion, which originated in the cleaning room of the building at 159 Jefferson avenue, Detroit, Mich., Thursday afternoon, May 18, did damage estimated at $150,000 to the building and stock of the Universal Film Co., the Bluebird and Metro Film Corporations, who occupied the first and second floors. The entire building and stock therein was a total loss as a result of the fire, which was one of the most spectacular in many years. The flames spread so fast that it only required about a half hour in which to totally destroy the building. George W. Weeks, manager of the Universal Company, was in Cincinnati at the time. Fortunately no employes were hurt in the fire—all making their escape from the building in good time. Dozens of new and old film were destroyed. Temporary offices have been opened at 183 Jefferson avenue by the Universal, Bluebird and Metro companies. There has been practically no interruption in the service of these companies as additional prints were shipped the same day from New York.

VAN RONKEL STRONG FOR BLUEBIRDS.

I. Van Ronkel, manager of the Chicago Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., returned to New York with Mr. Hoffman from the first lap of his little exchange inspection tour. In the two days which he has now spent in New York he has looked at six Bluebird Photoplays, which have not yet been released. They are "Naked Hearts," "The Eye of God," "Bobbie of the Ballet," "The Three Godfathers," "Shoes," and "Yellow and White," and the excellence of the six, piling one upon the other, convinced him that there was room in the Chicago office for at least two more prints on all Bluebirds.

Vitagraphs for June's First Week

Brooklyn Studio Will Be Represented by Five Subjects, Produced by Brooks, Wolbert, Williams, North and Davenport.

THE Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature for the week of May 29 is "The Lights of New York." Other photoplays on the list are "The Rich Idler," "Kernel Nutt, the Footman" and "The Lonelies," one part comedies, and "Carew and Son," a three-part Broadway Star Feature. "The Lights of New York" is a five-part drama featuring Leah Baird. It shows how an East Side gunman works his way into the "upper ten." Walter McGrail plays the part of the gunman, and Adele de Garde is seen as the half-sister. Arthur Cozine and Don Cameron also do good work in this photoplay, which was produced by Van Dyke Brooke.

In "The Rich Idler," Mary Anderson takes the role of the proprietor of a small notion goods store, who, when the landlord calls for rent, thinks he is looking for employment and gives him a job. The resulting complications make an exceedingly interesting and funny tale. Webster Campbell is also seen in this comedy. Its filming was supervised by William Wolbert.

Frank Daniels in "Kernul Nutt, the Footman," is seen as one of the army of the unemployed. John T. Kelly and Alice Washburn assist in the funmaking. C. Jay Williams produced this comedy, which is the latest of the "Kernul Nutt" series.

Lillian Walker is seen in "The Lonelies." William Shea and Edwina Robbins make up the remainder of the cast. Wilfrid North directs.

"Carew and Son" is the story of the machinations of an adventuress. Charles Kent, Mary Maurice, Walter McGrail and Belle Bruce portray the leading roles. Harry Davenport is responsible for its production.

V-L-S-E Releases for June

Four Vitagraphs, a Lubin, a Selig and an Essanay Make up the Big Four Program.

THE four companies which make up the Big Four have been diligent in presenting for the month of June an array of high tensioned features to assure exhibitors that their summer business will be up to the same standard as that of the cool months.

The four features that the Vitagraph Company has contributed to the June program consist of the first appearance of Lucille Lee Stewart, the new Vitagraph star, in "The Destroyers," a dramatization of James Oliver Curwood's dynamic novel, "Peter God." "The Destroyers" has been directed by Ralph W. Ince, and will be released in five parts. The other Vitagraph releases will be "The Redemption of Dave Darcey," in which James Morrison is featured, and supported by Belle Bruce and Billy Billings; "Winifred, the Shop Girl," which features Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno, and "Fathers of Men," which features Robert Edeson and Naomi Childers.

Edgar Lewis for Lubin has produced a powerful drama in which Nance O'Neil is featured. "The Toilers," written by Daniel Carson Goodman, will be released in five parts. The Selig contribution to the June program will be an appealing drama, "The Valiants of Virginia," which conveys the spirit of the hospitable South to a marked degree.

The Essanay release for June features Warda Howard, supported by Ernest Maupain, Duncan McRae and John Lorenz in "That Sort," a drama which gives a glimpse of the beauty of the Riviera and the glamor of Monte Carlo.

General Film Service Program

No Weak Links in the Offering for Week of May 29.

VARIETY, snap and punch aplenty characterize General Film programs for the week of May 29 to June 3, if information from the General Film Company's publicity department may be relied upon—and when did a publicity department ever fail in its duty?

Beginning Monday, May 29, Selig releases "The Hare and the Tortoise," in which Fritzi Brunette is featured. This production is especially adapted as a vehicle for Miss Brunette's versatility. "The Rich Idler," a Vitagraph comedy, precedes "The House With Closed Shutters," a Biograph drama, and Lubin's "Frilby Frilled," a comedy, and the Selig-Tribune News Service add strength to the day's program.

Essanay, Tuesday, offers an all-star, two-reel drama; Kalem supplies a comedy, "A Bunch of Flivvers," and Lubin strengthens the day's releases with "The Final Payment," a two-reel drama. Edison provides a real climax with "Helen of the Chorus," featuring Sally Crute and Herbert Pryor.

"A Smokey Adventure" is the first offering Wednesday. This is a Kalem comedy of the high standard established by that company. Essanay provides a one-reel drama that remains to be christened, and Edison supplies a one-reel comedy. Biograph releases a three-part drama, "Woman Against Woman." The gentler sex is again represented in the feature of the day, a Biograph release in five parts, "The Woman in Black." In this, Lionel Barrymore and Millicent Evans have stellar roles.

Lubin for Thursday offers "The Code of the Hills," in three parts; Vim comes forward with "Schemers," a comedy, reinforced by the Selig-Tribune animated news of the day.

"Shadows," a three-part Knickerbocker Star Feature, ushers in the Friday program, with "Sis, the Detective," a Kalem comedy of the "Sis Hopkins" series, as a follow-up. Then, to make the laugh a long one, "The Lonelies," by Vitagraph, and "The Land Lubber," by Vim, each a one-reel comedy, will be unleashed.

For Saturday, Essanay provides a three-part drama, "Our People," featuring Bryant Washburn; Lubin comes forward with a one-reel comedy, "Pickles and Diamonds"; Vitagraph strengthens the day's program with "Carew and Son," in which Charles Kent is starred. Then follows the always interesting episode of Kalem's "Hazards of Helen" series, entitled "The Spiked Switch." The week will be closed with the Selig one-part drama, "Crooked Trails."

Pretentious Showing at Rialto

California Motion Picture Corporation Secures Big New York Theater to Present "The Woman Who Dared" to the Trade.

A TRADE showing of the new California Motion Picture Corporation feature, "The Woman Who Dared," with Beatriz Michelena, is announced for the Rialto Theater, New York City, for 10 a. m. Friday, June 30th. Alexander E. Beyfuss, general manager of the California company, has just arranged the affair and the big new theater has been taken over for the showing, complete with all of its equipment. The regular thirty-five piece symphony orchestra will play a special musical score which has been arranged for the picture and S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Rialto, will superintend the trade screening.

It is announced that the sale of States Rights on the big picture will begin immediately after the showing in New York. This means that "The Woman who Dared" will probably attract to New York many prospective buyers from as far west as Denver, Col., who have already made bids for the feature on the strength of the success which they made with the California company's previous "Better Than Program" release, "The Unwritten Law"; this last named picture was first shown the trade in New York City and some days later in Chicago but nowhere on as pretentious a scale as will be attempted at the Rialto.

"The Woman who Dared" will be an eight-part release. Miss Michelana, the star in the production, is supported by a number of the California players who scored with her in "The Unwritten Law" and the production which has required approximately eight months for its completion is said to be a particularly elaborate one. The story has a timely interest in that it has to do with diplomatic intrigue in the courts of Europe.

Canada's Fighting Forces

Official Motion Pictures of Canadian Contingent Will Be Shown in the United States.

HAVING just completed a tour of Canadian cities, "Canada's Fighting Forces," the official Dominion Government films, will be given their initial showing in the United States in Boston on June 12, opening an engagement at one of the leading theaters, under the management of Edwin Bower Hesser, acting for the Canadian authorities.

While these pictures, taken by Lieut. D. J. Dwyer, the official government photographer, have created intense enthusiasm throughout Canada, as is quite natural, they will undoubtedly be very interesting also to Americans as showing the extensive military activity going on within a few miles of the international boundary, and the important part being taken in the great war by Canadian soldiers. Few in the United States realize the magnitude of the effort being made in Canada, where already 300,000 men have been enlisted for active service, and a great part of them sent overseas to England and France.

"Canada's Fighting Forces" is just what the title implies: a record, dealing with the soldiers of Canada, without any attempt to portray actual warfare, unless we may designate as such a remarkably interesting set of animated diagrams shown on the screen and illustrating in a graphic manner all the changes in the lines during the historic battle of Ypres, where the Germans, by their first use of asphyxiating gas, broke through the French lines and the Canadians "saved the situation." A drawing, representing a bird's-eye view of the district, is shown, and the use of the block system in illustrating the changing tides of battle during the three-day fight becomes positively thrilling, accompanied, as it is, by a vigorous description by Sergeant Fred ("Doc") Wells of the Seventh Battalion of British Columbia, who was in charge of a platoon in this battle, lost his left arm through machine gun fire, was taken prisoner by the Germans and, after spending several months in a prison camp, succeeded in being exchanged and returned to England—by consistently feigning insanity.

Any review which neglected to give due credit to the part his "lecture" plays in the success of the film would be unjust. It is one-armed "Doc" Wells, dressed in the neat uniform of the Canadian sergeant, who raises the entire performance to its high plane of sustained interest. In addition to accompanying the film with explanations and anecdotes, he delivers, after the fourth reel, a twenty-minute talk dealing with his experiences in the German prison camp. Possessed of abundant "personality," and with an unbounded stock of humor, he sways the audience from laughter to applause—and always back again to laughter; and where the film without the lecturer might become slightly tiresome to those who have seen a great deal of this sort of thing, Sergeant Wells keeps the interest at a high pitch throughout. In all parts of Canada the record of the entertainment has been that at each engagement the business has shown a consistent increase after the first performance; and this is, after all, the final test of any attraction.

PARAMOUNT PICTOGRAPHS.

In continuation of its campaign through the films for "Better Babies" the Paramount Picture Corporation will show in the seventeenth release of the Pictographs, its "magazine on the screen," the correct method of physical training for the boy who has his years in the schoolroom ahead of him. This feature of the motion picture propaganda, which is teaching mothers how to make their children healthier, contains the following camera lessons for parents to guide them in training the boy:

How to teach the "kiddies" to walk Indian-footed to avoid twisted joints and broken arches. The old-fashioned method of standing with the toes turned out has proved more injurious than otherwise, so the modern child keeps his feet parallel while walking.

How the child should be taught to sit in the classroom so that he will not become stooped. Round shoulders cause lung troubles.

How the child should breathe, inhaling and exhaling. Correct breathing is the basic principles of "method" in physical training.

MASTERS BACK ON THE JOB.

E. L. Masters, advertising manager of the V-L-S-E, has returned to his desk after a week in the hospital for what was supposed to be appendicitis. It wasn't—hence his early return.

"Billy" Sherwood, Metro Juvenile Lead

WILLIAM SHERWOOD, who plays the juvenile lead in "The Spell of the Yukon," in which Edmund Breese is starred, and which was produced by the Metro-Popular Plays and Players, is a graduate of Tulane University in Louisiana, and had hoped to be an architect. But in 1908, while attending a preparatory school, he was awarded a gold medal for his recitation of the "Polish Boy," and that set him to thinking. In fact, it veered him clear off his chosen path, and from that moment he decided to be an actor.

During his first year in Tulane University he attracted attention by unusual histrionic ability. At the end of the season the class chose George Ade's "County Chairman" for its annual production and "Billy" though a freshman, was given the leading role, that of the old picturesque chairman.

William Sherwood.

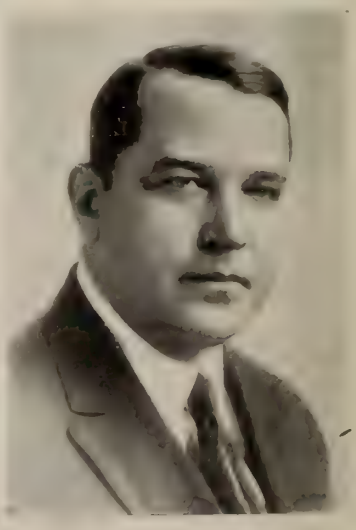
Mr. Sherwood is an all-around athlete and won the walking contest in the A. A. U. championship walk of the South. Before joining Metro he was the leading man for Marguerite Courtot in the "Ventures of Marguerite," and also appeared as the juvenile with John Barrymore in "The Lost Bridegroom."

In "The Spell of the Yukon" he has an excellent part and one that is admirably fitted to his talents. Evelyn Brent plays opposite him in this production, and they will be seen together in subsequent Metro subjects.

Harry Dunkinson

ESSANAY'S most jovial comedian has been picked to play the part of "the grouch" in a forthcoming three-reel release of that title. It is Harry Dunkinson, who almost constantly wears a smile and was never known to have a grouch in his life. He says it is his first experience, but that he knows what they are like by watching others.

Mr. Dunkinson, always good in comedy parts, has developed wonderfully lately in taking funny leads. There is no slapstick in his work. It is genuine and subtle humor and it gets across, as was testified to by the reception by the public of his work in "Separating from Sarah," "The Misleading Lady," and "Mr. Buttles," to say nothing of the George Ade comedies, in which he has appeared innumerable times.



Harry Dunkinson.

Mr. Dunkinson is as clever an entertainer in real life as he is on the screen. He was born in New York City, and after an education in the public schools went on the stage at the age of nineteen. He played in drama, musical comedies and in vaudeville for twenty-five years before joining Essanay. With this breadth of experience it was found that he was exceptionally well qualified for cinema work, a channel of activity in which he has been making good ever since.

Mutual Releases for Week of May 29

"Other People's Money" and "The Man from Manhattan" Are Top Liners.

THE big offerings topping Mutual releases for the week of May 29 are, "The Man from Manhattan," May 31, an American production, featuring William Stowell and Rhea Mitchell, and "Other People's Money" May 29, from the Thanhouser studios, with Gladys Hulette as the star.

In addition to these five-part feature productions, the Mutual releases for the same week offer a three-part feature and four two-reel subjects diverse in story and locale and presenting a host of popular Mutual players. Seven single-reel comedies and three exceptionally interesting single-reel feature releases, round off the Mutual offerings for the week of May 29.

"The Man from Manhattan" was prepared for the screen by J. Edward Hungerford and filmed under the direction of Jack Halloway. William Stowell, as the "city fellow," and Rhea Mitchell, as the daughter of the coming political boss, head a cast of capable players including Jack Prescott, Perry Banks, Warren Ellsworth and Charles Wheelock.

"Other People's Money" is a startling production in many ways, for it serves to bring to the public attention the numerous methods pursued by the "get-rich quick" men. Fraunie Fraunholtz heads a company of noted players appearing in Gladys Hulette's support. J. H. Gilmour, Kathyrn Adams and Yale Benner appear in support of the principal players.

Winnifred Greenwood is the featured player of "The Trail of the Thief," June 1, and the three-reel feature release of the week. Edward Coxen plays opposite the star, and in their support are George Field, Jack Farrell, George Armstrong, Anna Morrison, Marie Van Tassell and several others of equal note.

"The Release of Dan Forbes," with William Stowell and Helene Rosson the featured players, which goes to the public May 29, is the first of the two-reel feature releases of the week.

"The Nymph," with Barbara Gilroy and Robert Vaughn, is the Thanhouser two-reel offering to be released May 30. "A Man's Friend," June 2, with Art Acord and Nita Davis, is the two-reel Mustang feature. The Centaur two-part release, featuring Margaret Gibson, will go to the public June 3, under the title of "Clouds in Sunshine Valley."

Falstaff comedies for the week include "Disguisers," May 29, another of the comedies featuring Claude Cooper and Frank E. McNish in the roles of Oscar and Conrad and "Perkins' Pitiful Plight," June 3, with Bert Delaney and Gladys Leslie.

"The Comet's Come-Back," with Carol Halloway and John Sheehan, is set for May 31, and "Ima Knutt Gets a Bite" for June 4, starring Orral Humphrey. These are the "Beauty" offerings of the week.

"Shy Thirty Cents," May 30, with Rube Miller and Madge Kirby in the principal roles, leads the Vogue laughmakers, followed by "When Pape Died," June 4, starring Ben Turpin, the new Vogue-Mutual comedian.

Billy Armstrong is the featured player in "Sawdust Love," Cub, June 30.

Mutual Weekly No. 74 is released May 31. The fourth edition of "Reel Life," the Mutual Film's Magazine, a recent feature addition to the weekly service, will be released as usual on Sunday, June 4.

Planet Soon to Begin Work

First Four Subjects to be Made at Raver Studios Will be Three Five and One Eight Reeler.

THE Raver studios and laboratory, which are now nearing completion at Rockville Centre, L. I., will be used by the Planet Film Corporation for the production of its pictures.

Harry R. Raver, vice-president and general manager of the Planet Film Corporation, is personally supervising the work which is being carried on at the Raver studios.

The Planet Film Corporation intends to start work just as soon as the studios are finished. The first picture will be a five reel adaptation of either a well-known play or novel, featuring some road star, one that is known equally as well in the small cities and towns as on Broadway. This will be followed by two more of the same length and then an eight reel feature will be released.

As it will be necessary to work on two pictures at the same time the original studio plans have been altered somewhat to allow for more space for the directors. The initial floor space of 30 by 60 feet has geen increased to 30 by 120 feet.

Metro to Issue Travelogue

Beginning May 29 It Will Release Weekly Studies of Bird Life and General Scenic Subjects.

THE Metro Travelogues, a weekly feature, will have its first release May 29, under the auspices of the Metro Pictures Corporation. These features embrace a wide range of subjects including truly wonderful studies in animal and bird life and glimpses of the most interesting and picturesque locales in the world.

Unlike similar travelogues heretofore presented upon the screen, the Metro weekly features will carry a predominating element of humor in the animal and bird studies. The seemingly impossible has been obtained in the humorous "close-ups" of bird life. Real downright tragedies of their everyday life are presented, but they do not strike the spectators as seriously as they evidently do the birds. On the other hand, they provoke a laugh and are bound to arouse the interest of the most hardened critic and cynic.

William Lovelle Finley, biologist for Oregon, is the genius responsible for these intimate pictures of the bird and animal life. He has succeeded in penetrating the privacy of these interesting phases of their lives and the result is distinctly novel and interesting.

There is no end to the wonderful scenic beauties presented in the Metro Travelogues. Not the least of these is the feature dealing with the gigantic construction work being carried on under government supervision in the construction of the Elephant Butte dam and irrigation project on the Rio Grande near El Paso. This dam, which has just been completed, will store more water than any other reservoir in the world, and will be the means of converting a useless desert into a wonderful agricultural country. The dam is located 120 miles north of El Paso, and the motion pictures show many exceedingly interesting engineering feats. All these films were edited by the United States Department of the Interior before being released to Metro.

There are many scenic offerings in the Metro Travelogues, including an automobile trip over the Lincoln Highway, showing the most picturesque localities of that famous route. No expense or effort will be spared to keep up the high standard established in the first travelogues pictures now in the vaults of the Metro plant, and the world will be scoured for novelties and special features.

Busy Days for Selznick

Clara Kimball Young Features Attract a Host of Exhibitors—"The Common Law" the First.

THERE are no busier offices in the film industry these days than the general headquarters of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation and Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc., in the new Film Building at Forty-ninth street and Seventh avenue. With the opening of the New York Exchange in charge of Sol. J. Berman, late of Bluebird and World Film, many local and up-state exhibitors are seeking franchises to present the future pictures of Miss Young in their theatres, beginning with the first of the new company's releases, "The Common Law," by Robert W. Chambers.

In Philadelphia Stanley Mastbaum and W. B. Smith, Mr. Selznick's partners in the distribution of Miss Young's pictures in Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, are taking care of hundreds of applications daily, while in Detroit Harry I. Garson, the Michigan representative, is equally busy. The demand for "The Common Law," and the subsequent Clara Kimball Young productions, appears to be of universal strength and proves that the beautiful and talented screen star is one of the greatest drawing cards in the business.

The engagement of Albert Capellani as director general of the producing company is another stroke for which Miss Young and Mr. Selznick are being generally congratulated. M. Capellani has been identified with some of Miss Young's greatest productions, among them "Camille," and knows her possibilities better than any director in the profession. He has already begun to prepare his own scenario from Mr. Chambers' novel, "The Common Law," working both in collaboration with Miss Young and the noted author himself.

LILLIAN M. RUBENSTEIN IN NEW YORK.

Lillian M. Rubenstein, who for over a year has been writing articles on scenarios which have been printed in many newspapers, especially in the South, has for the past week been visiting in New York. Miss Rubenstein for two years was scenario editor for the Lubin Company.

Five Famous Players for June

Peggy Hyland and Ann Pennington Make Their First Appearance With This Company.

FOR June the Famous Players will release five big productions. These photoplays are of especial interest because, in addition to containing the names of the stars who have been long associated with the Famous Players, the list contains the names of several players who, though celebrated on stage or screen, are appearing for the first time under the banner of the Famous Players—notably Peggy Hyland, the British star, who makes her debut in an adaptation of Henry Arthur Jones' "Saints and Sinners."

Another newcomer is Ann Pennington, the Ziegfeld "Follies" artist, who makes her first appearance on the screen in "Susie Snowflake." Louis Huff, featured in many productions by other concerns, whose delightful work in the Famous Players' adaptation of Denman Thompson's "The Old Homestead," has won her a permanent place on the latter company's roster, is featured in "Destiny's Toy," with William Courtleigh, Jr., playing opposite her.

"The Evil Thereof," a powerful morality play written by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, is released June 5. Chief in a strong cast is Frank Losee, whose work in many Famous Players productions, notably in Denman Thompson's own role in "The Old Homestead," has made him one of the most popular figures on the screen. Grace Valentine, Crauford Kent and others of equal prominence are in the cast.

On June 12, Marguerite Clark will star in "Silks and Satins," a delightful combination of comedy and drama, which opens in the present and goes back to mediaeval times. Appearing with Louis Huff in "Destiny's Toy," which is to be released on June 15, is William Courtleigh, Jr., who has been seen recently with Marguerite Clark in "Out of the Drifts," and with Valentine Grant in "The Innocent Lie." The exteriors for this play of romance and adventure were taken on picturesque Block Island.

"Susie Snowflake," Ann Pennigton's introductory vehicle, will be released June 22. This is a delightful comedy-drama of musical comedy life which is peculiarly suited to the diminutive star, in view of the fact that her whole theatrical career has been devoted to this branch of stage activity. Pauline Frederick stars in "The World's Great Snare," an adaptation of the well-known novel by E. Phillips Oppenheim, on June 26. This is one of the most powerful dramas in which Miss Frederick has yet appeared, dealing as it does with the elemental life of a western mining town.

Pallas Pictures Engage Adelaide Woods

ADELAIDE WOODS, well known among patrons of the screen through her effective portrayal of character leads, has been engaged by Pallas Pictures to appear in important roles.

Miss Woods has appeared on the screen some three years, having been identified with Biograph for two years. After six months with Balboa she returned to Biograph where she remained until the closing of the West Coast studio of that concern. Her greatest work on the screen was evidenced in "Paths That Crossed" in which she scored a personal triumph. Preceding her affiliation with motion pictures Miss Woods played on the concert stage in many successes for your years.

Adelaide Woods.

As Mrs. Cleave in "The American Beauty" a forthcoming Pallas Pictures subject starring Myrtle Stedman, Miss Woods will make her initial appearance before patrons of theaters showing Paramount productions. In this character she is given a particularly difficult part and it is readily expected that "The American Beauty" will offer her an opportunity to register her greatest characterization on the screen.

Jourjon Expected in New York

Head of Eclair Company, Now in the Trenches at Verdun, Gets Leave of Absence to Straighten Out Affairs of American Branch.

CLAUDE PATIN, of the Beacon Films Company, is authority for the information that Lieutenant Charles Jourjon, now at the battle front with his command in the Verdun sector, has been granted leave of absence, contingent upon the apparent breakdown of the German offensive operation at Verdun, and will presently visit New York to straighten out the affairs of the American Eclair Film Company, of which he was the head when war was declared against France in August, 1914. It will be remembered that Mr. Jourjon and his associates, Claude Patin, also an officer of the Eclair Company, immediately returned to France at the opening of hostilities and offered their services to their country. Both were of the reserves. Mr. Jourjon was assigned to an infantry regiment and Mr. Patin, owing to defective eyesight, was assigned as an interpreter to the British forces and afterwards was retired from active duty.

How long he will be permitted to remain on this visit is not known, but when the war is finished and peace established, Mr. Jourjon will take up the rehabilitation of the Eclair Company in a large way. He has many plans to this end that are big and which will place the Eclair Company up in front ranks of motion picture producers and distributors.

E. G. BRIGGS, ONE OF PATHE'S YOUNG MEN.

E. G. Briggs, assistant manager of the Pathe Exchange in Albany, is still young in years but old in film experience. As a booking agent he is a magnetizer of exhibitors. Recently he returned from a "drive" through his territory richly laden with bookings for "The Iron Claw." He knows his territory like a book and he is welcome in every theater. Mr. Briggs, being a young man and very much alive, has grasped the fact that the exhibitor is getting to be an important personage in the film industry, hence his ardent desire to co-operate with the exhibitor and hence his unquestioned success. He has seen film service with the Exclusive, with the Fox Film Company and with the True Feature Company. Everywhere he has made a splendid record. Briggs served his country as a volunteer in the Philippines and has gone through some most interesting experiences.

QUICK WORK GETTING RACES ON SCREEN.

The interest New York City took in the automobile races at Sheepshead Bay Saturday, May 13, caused the Mutual Weekly to satisfy the demand for pictures of the events by showing them the same evening in leading Broadway theaters. The work was done under the editorial eye of Pell Mitchell, who has charge of the Weekly. Although not leaving the track until the light failed, the film was prepared at the Gaumont Laboratories, Flushing, N. Y., in time to be run off for the patrons of the Strand, the Rialto, and the Palace, the three representative New York houses showing pictures. In addition to these prints, a fourth was made and shown at the Motion picture Exposition held at Madison Square Garden.

MISS BARRISCALE IN TRAGEDY ROLE.

From the "Balkans," the setting for the last Bessie Barriscale picture, "Bullets and Brown Eyes," the Triangle star, has gone to "Venice" for her forthcoming release, "The Sorrows of Love." Advance information indicates that this new Ince feature is a powerful drama with plenty of suspense and stirring action, an absorbing love story and that almost unknown quantity of the films—a tragic ending. At least, the lovers are separated by the death of one, while the other returns to the convent from which she had gone on an errand of mercy.

MINUSA FOR NEW GRAND CENTRAL.

The New Grand Central Theater of St. Louis, owned by one of the most popular exhibitors in America, Bill Seivers, is about to project its photoplays on a Minusa Gold Fibre Screen, the Minusa Company having been given the specifications of the house, with instructions to build a screen for Mr. Seivers that will give him the results that he is looking for.

Two Big Essanays Coming

Henry Walthall and Edna Mayo Will Each Head a Cast in Special Productions.

Two more Essanay feature productions, one presenting Henry B. Walthall and the other Edna Mayo, which will be released on the V-L-S-E program, have been announced by President George K. Spoor. "The Little Musketeer" was written by Charles Mortimer Peck especially for Mr. Walthall. It is in five acts. Mr. Walthall, who is making a short visit to his home in Birmingham, Ala., will return to the Essanay studios in a few days and take up work on this new feature, which is exceptionally well adapted to bring out his strong portrayal of emotions.

Mr. Walthall will be given opportunity to present his versatility in portraying character in this piece, as he takes two parts, the roles of two brothers, one the scapegoat of the family and the other its mainstay. Neither is guilty of crime, but each thinks that the other is and does everything in his power to shield his brother.

"The Return of Eve," also in five acts, is the vehicle in which Miss Mayo will next appear in feature productions. It is a strong drama, written by Lee Wilson Dodd and adapted by H. S. Sheldon, and is exceptionally suitable to her talents.

The story is of the Garden of Eden brought down to date. A boy and girl brought up on a desert island finally taste civilized life. It disgusts them, but when they go back to their island they find that they have eaten of the fruit of the tree of knowledge and their Eden is an Eden no longer. They are barred as effectually as were Adam and Eve by the flaming sword.

Essanay's short-reel releases, which it is producing with as much care as it does its features, have been booked through July and are just announced by Mr. Spoor.

Among the strong two-reelers is a fable by George Ade, that of the "Fearsome Feud Between the First Families." This is the first of Mr. Ade's fables to be released in two reels. The one-reel releases for the month consist of a Canimated Nooz Pictorial, cartoons on events of the day by Wallace A. Carlson, Vernon Howe Bailey's Sketch Book of New Orleans and two of Ade's fables.

The three-reel releases consist of "The Regeneration of Margaret," presenting Warda Howard and John Junior; "Power," featuring Sydney Ainsworth and Nell Craig; "Secret of the Night," featuring Sydney Ainsworth, Lillian Drew and John Lorenz, and "The Grouch," presenting Harry Beaumont, Harry Dunkinson and John Cossar.

Would Knit Film Factors

Charles W. Allen, President Unity Sales Corporation, Aims to Bring Together Maker, Exchange and Exhibitor.

CHARLES W. ALLEN, president of the newly-formed Unity Sales Corporation, brings to the film industry new ideals. Mr. Allen's primary object in founding the Unity was, as the name implies, to knit closer the interests of the manufacturer, the exchange man and the exhibitor. Mr. Allen's plans, which he has worked out with Andrew J. Cobe, vice-president and general manager of the Unity, aim at idealizing the distribution end of the business and giving the manufacturer better profits and the exchangemen and exhibitors a good and consistent grade of pictures.

Mr. Allen, who is a brother of Viola Allen, and managed her for many years, has a reputation for business ability and artistic sense in the theatrical profession. He brings to the film business the accumulated knowledge of his long experience in this branch of art. He is himself a producer, having to his credit several feature productions, among them "Diana," an elaborate photodrama starring Paul Swann and the Baroness De Witz, and "The Boy Scout," by the late Richard Harding Davis.

The Unity has ambitious plans for the future and has already distributed two features, Tom Terriss in "My Country First," a photoplay dealing with preparedness and patriotism, and "The Pursuing Vengeance," starring Sheldon Lewis, with Jane Meredith and Henry Mortimer. Mr. Allen announces that in the near future the firm has announcements to make which will be of interest to the industry at large.

"Our policy of service and co-operation to the manufacturer and exhibitor on our new system of mutual understanding has resulted in an instant response," said Mr. Cobe. "In fact, the results of our announcement of our plans have exceeded even our own expectation. As I said before, our plan embraces what I might term the new evangelism of the business. Consistency in the standard of our pictures and strict supervision of every print and every feature is not the least important part of our policy as exchangemen and exhibitors will realize. I intend to see to it personally that our slogan, 'The concern with a conscience,' is no idle phrase, but one which will be lived up to in everything it implies."

Claire Alexander

A SECLUDED place in filmdom four weeks ago—a leading woman today. That is the accomplishment of tiny Claire Alexander, who through her excellent work and thorough understanding of the parts assigned her has been signed to a contract at the David Horsley studios and in the future will be seen in the leading feminine roles in support of George Ovey, star of the Cub Comedies.

Claire Alexander.

Four weeks ago, Miss Alexander, a little miss who lacks two inches of being five feet tall, was guided to the Horsley institution by her big brown eyes and a desire to cast aside the more dramatic side of the silent drama for comedy.

She was given a hearing. She told of having had about a year's experience before the camera and frankly admitted that most of her work was in the background, but occasionally a "bit" was given her to do.

Director Milton H. Fahrney, who has supervised the Cub Comedy Company ever since that brand of pictures has been produced at the Horsley studios, became interested in the young woman and consented to give her a trial. It was at a time when Mr. Fahrney was casting his net about to find a capable young actress "big" enough to handle leads in support of Mr. Ovey.

"The Traitor" was the first picture in which Miss Alexander was cast. A small part was assigned to her and her work and general understanding of what was wanted impressed her director as well as everyone else who witnessed her performance.

In "Preparedness," the next Cub Comedy to be filmed, Miss Alexander was seen in a larger part and she was given even a bigger role in Mr. Ovey's next picture, "Jerry's Perfect Day." Then came "Jerry's Big Lark," and at the conclusion of that comedy Director Fahrney was convinced that he need go no further in his search for a leading woman.

HARRY O. HOYT AS SING SING WARDEN.

Harry O. Hoyt, chief of scenario writers at the Metro-Rolfe studio, has added another mark to his well-known versatility by his appearance before the camera in the role of the "Warden at Sing Sing," in "Notorious Gallagher."

LUBIN CALIFORNIA PRODUCTIONS.

Forthcoming releases from the California studios of the Lubin Company are May 30, "The Final Payment," two acts; June 1, "The Code of the Hills," three acts; June 8, "The Scapegrace," three acts; June 13, "The Avenger," two acts; June 15, "Sons of the Sea," three acts; June 22, "The Stolen Master," three acts. Each production was made under the personal direction of Captain Wilbert Melville.

WOMAN MAKING GOOD AS BOOKER.

Miss Effie L. Ross came a year ago to the Pittsburg office of the V-L-S-E in a stenographic capacity knowing absolutely nothing about pictures. Being extremely apt, she quickly picked up the finer points, and became conversant with the business, the actors, and the vocabulary of the exchange. She has been advanced to the booking department and is reported to be most efficient. Manager Child has yet to receive a complaint from anyone who has been treated unfairly or ungraciously. Miss Ross is a college graduate.

San Francisco Fair on Screen

Ten Thousand Feet of Scenic Film Will Be Released Weekly in Eight Hundred Foot Lengths.

THE president of the Exposition Players' Corporation George A. Collins, arrived in New York from the Coast last week, at which time a deal was consummated whereby E. M. Asher takes over the world's rights for 75,000 feet of negative, which covers the complete history of the World's Fair which closed in San Francisco last December. The Exposition Players Corporation controlled the exclusive and only franchise which permitted the taking of scenic pictures inside the exposition grounds, and which is in full effect until July, 1917.

The compiling of the negative, which is due to arrive in New York next week, required almost two years of preparation, none of which has ever been released.

Mr. Asher announces the pictures will be ready for release in about two weeks, and after being cut to ten thousand feet will be marketed as a serial in eight hundred foot lengths at the rate of one each week, as follows: "A Story," "Gardens and Buildings," "Palaces," "Architecture," "Sculpture and Statuary," "Aviation," "Lighting and Night Illuminations." "Natives from Foreign Climes," etc.

KALEM FILMS "THE LOTUS WOMAN."

KALEM announces the release on June 20, through the regular General Film Service, of "The Lotus Woman," a five-reel drama staged by Harry Millarde. The producer also takes a leading role in the picture, which features Alice Hollister, the "original screen vampire" in the title role.

The work of staging "The Lotus Woman" carried the players from New York to Jacksonville and St. Augustine, Fla., and over four months of labor was necessary before the final touches could be put to it. The story carries the action from New York to a Latin American republic. The thrilling battles of a Central American revolution required the use of over five hundred soldiers.

Alice Hollister has never had a role offering the strong opportunities of "The Lotus Woman," and her work in the colorful part is said to be the best of her long screen career. In addition to Harry Millarde, Arthur Albertson is another Kalem favorite seen in the feature.

The unusual atmosphere of the story is greatly enhanced by the seventeenth century background of St. Augustine and its historic forts.

CHANGES IN V-L-S-E. FORCES.

In line with the policy of the V-L-S-E. to promote its members from the ranks, the company announces the promotion of H. E. Stillwell, who has been bookkeeper for the Atlanta Branch, to cover the territory in Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee as salesman.

L. E. Schaffer, who has been with the Denver branch since it was made a buying office, and who has covered the territories in Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Colorado, New Mexico, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho, Montana, West Nebraska and Western South Dakota, has been promoted to assistant branch manager of the Denver exchange.

Patrick Doyle, who has had extensive experience with the Fox Film Corporation, and the World Film Corporation, now becomes associated with the Montreal office as salesman.

E. K. LINCOLN WITH WORLD FILM.

E. K. Lincoln, one of the youngest and most popular of photoplay stars and until recently the head and principal star in the concern producing under the E. K. Lincoln banner, joined forces with the World Film Corporation recently and will begin work under the direction of Robert Thornby at the Paragon Studio. The first production will be an elaborate affair, entitled "The Almighty Dollar," and in the production Mr. Lincoln will have as fellow players Frances Nelson, last seen in "Human Driftwood," and June Elvidge, whose work in "The Hand of Peril," and "The Closed Road," created so favorable an impression.

For years Mr. Lincoln was featured by the Vitagraph and Lubin companies and it was through the medium of short subjects that his popularity was constructed.

EUTERMARKS TAKES "THE OTHER GIRL."

The Raver Film Corporation production, "The Other Girl," taken from the stage success by Augustus Thomas, has been purchased for the Eastern Pennsylvania territory by Mr. Eutermarks of the Pennsylvania Feature Film Company of Philadelphia.

Essanay vs. Chaplin

Plaintiff Alleges That the Comedian Still Owes Four Comedies Under His Contract.

THE complaint in the action of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company against Charles Chaplin, the bringing of which suit was noted in these columns several weeks ago, alleges that Chaplin agreed to make ten comedies in a specified time for which he was to receive a bonus of $10,000 in addition to a weekly salary of $1,250. The company admits that he made six of these pictures, but that he failed to make the other four. It is this failure that is the basis of the Essanay suit and the value of each picture is estimated at $125,000 making a total of $500,000 for the lot.

It is further stated by the counsel for the plaintiff that Chaplin was paid a total of $180,000 during the time he was employed by the Essanay Company.

In the suit of Chaplin against the Essanay Company for an injunction preventing the distribution of the "Burlesque on Carmen," Judge Hotchkiss dismissed the application in a decision rendered Monday, May 22.

TANDY WITH WORLD FILM.

Vice-president Tandy of the Southern Paramount Company, New Orleans, La., has bought the rights for the World Film Corporation productions for the South and has formed the Southern World Film Corporation.

"UNIVERSAL" FLAHERTY VISITS NEW YORK.

F. J. Flaherty, of the Universal Film Exchange of Chicago, spent a week at the Universal offices in New York attending a conference regarding the sale of state rights of "Pavlowa," "Where are My Children" and other Universal productions, returning to Chicago on Saturday, May 20. He reports business in the Middle West as very good.

MAY ABANDON THEATER TAX

It is learned on good authority that when the Ways and Means Committee of Congress commence the consideration of the proposed omnibus measure for providing revenue for the maintenance of the government provision will be made for the abolition of the special taxes under the war emergency revenue law to take effect July 1. This will relieve exhibitors from the further payment of the tax assessed upon their theaters according to seating capacity.

HARVEY CLOSES WITH ACTORS' FUND CAMPAIGN.

The ramarkably successful publicity of the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund was handled by E. L. Harvey, who resigned from the assistant city editorship of the Evening Journal to take up the work. The campaign is drawing to a close and Mr. Harvey is undecided whether to return to newspaper work or remain in the film business, in which he has had several flattering offers.

UNIVERSAL SEEKING REGULAR SCRIPTS.

Helen Starr, scenario editor of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, announces that she is in need of "regular" scripts. She is not interested in embryo amateur efforts. Work from established photoplaywrights will be welcomed and purchased with avidity. The Universal Company is in need of one and two-reel comedies and one, two and five-reel dramas. The scenario department at 1600 Broadway, New York, buys for both the eastern and western studios.

METRO'S "PICTURES MAGAZINE" GROWING FAST.

The "Pictures Magazine," a weekly publication devoted to motion pictures and their activities, which started about seven months ago, with a circulation of approximately 100,000, has now reached and passed the million mark. The marvelously rapid growth of this publication's circulation is a most notable achievement. There are few publications, of any character, that have a wider circulation.

Arthur James, director of Metro publicity and editor of the "Pictures Magazine," explaining the cause of the magazine's enormous growth in such a short space of time, says motion pictures are the entertainment of the masses and that next to seeing motion pictures the public likes to read about them.

Arrangements have been completed for a noteworthy series of articles from the pens of the foremost artists now appearing on the screen.

A Splendid Lasky Production in Which the New Star, May Murray, Shows to Better Advantage.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS feature comes up to the expectations which the public nowadays entertain when a Lasky production is on the program. "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" is a charming story told about the interesting people who lived in a picturesque age. May Murray, the star of the play, finds the part of a very beautiful and lively girl much more to her taste than the role she essayed at her first attempt in the drama of the screen. Miss Murray made a dainty lovable Kitty Bellairs; she was, as the French put it, "tres femme." Her girlish graces, her innocent witchery, her sweet roguishness are bound to captivate every audience. The young people will be delighted beyond measure of course, but May Murray's rendition of the coquettish little beauty will win smiles from the males and females of a tougher age.

The ever-conscientious efforts of the art director, Alfred Buckland, in beautifying pictures and choosing the best possible settings indoors and outdoors, are very much in evidence in this delightful feature. It is the first Lasky picture directed by Mr. James Young, and to this capable and gifted man belongs not a little of the credit for the undoubted success of the picture. There was a variety of those pretty and novel lighting effects which help to characterize the Lasky school of motion picture art. Altogether "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" is likely to go to the top of the ladder of Lasky film plays. Miss Murray had good support with the exception of Tom Forman, who was obviously miscast for the part of Lord Verney. Not that the young man was lacking in earnestness or in good intentions. He no doubt tried to do his best, but the part might have fared infinitely better in more skilled hands.

"The Sins of Men"

A Farce—Comic Characters Come in for Christmas Dinner and the Old Man Has Bad Dream—Fox Offering.

By Hanford C. Judson.

CLOSE-UPS of passion scenes, and it makes no matter at all that some character in the picture only dreams them, are out of place and reprehensible in a picture like this. Lust draws the eyes in and gathers up the muscles of the cheeks and the spectator in his anamalism sees it as an animal unless his humanity has been kept awake by intellectual considerations suggested by the picture's inner meaning. Twice in this farce there is pictured the whispered conversation that precedes seduction—in one scene the victim is a young girl and the film would be much more commendable if the scene were out of it. The story of the picture will show why the spectator is not compelled to see and think about seduction from the human side. It is an easy thing for a player coldly to make his face imitate passion of this kind.

The mainspring of the action is a book full of diabolical philosophy that an author is temped to write for the money in it. The publisher tells him the people want that kind of stuff. Three or four subtitles give the quality of the book—we get somewhat more than a taste of it and we are made to feel sure that the public really does want it. Now the author has a daughter and a son. The wife and mother scouts the idea of writing such a wicked book. The temptation comes at Christmas time and a room full of queer characters come in to the dinner and make the spectators laugh many times. But after they go, the author sits down to write the book till his wife advises him to turn in. In a dream he sees the book published and himself and family rich. But the evil in the book makes his daughter rebel at restraint. She spends the night out with a married neighbor. The son also reads the book to a sort of hired-girl protege of the family and then leads her to a settle behind some curtains; the author discovers them in each other's arms. The author wakes up and finds it luckily only a dream.

Biographs to Be Seen Again

"A Fair Rebel," in Three Reels, and "The Unwelcome Guest," a Single-Reel Mary Pickford Drama.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

OF THE story in "A Fair Rebel," produced by the Biograph Company by the late David Miles and now scheduled for reissue, little need be said. The plot is commonplace, just about what audiences accustomed to Civil War dramas have every reason to expect; but even at that the three reels are well worth reviving, unless battle scenes have gone out of fashion, which, of course, they have not. The first reel serves to introduce the characters and prepare for the romance of a southern girl and a northern officer—a standard ingredient of Civil War pictures—then right at the opening of the second reel there comes as spirited a battle as one need wish to see.

The engagement takes place in the woods where the Confederate forces are defending a bridge. Cavalry and infantry charges, accompanied by exploding shells ripping the branches from trees and digging great holes in the ground, precede the best thrill of all when the bridge is rent asunder by an explosion, and an entire company of soldiers appears to be hurled into the air. In point of excitement these scenes in the second reel provide easily the best moments of the picture, although subsequent developments are moderately interesting. The famous Libby prison, adequately represented, is given a prominent place in the picture. It is here that the Union officer languishes with other prisoners until he tunnels his way out and, assisted by the fair Rebel, escapes. Linda Arvidson appears in the name part, supported by Dorothy Gish, Charles Perley, Charles West and Robert Drouet.

"An Unwelcome Guest" shows Mary Pickford in the type of character that first endeared her to the public. She plays a poor little slavey, whose companion in misfortune is an aged man. Almost literally they are fed on the crumbs that fall from the table of the master of the house, until a sudden change in fortune places them in control. Chrystie Miller, as the unwelcome guest, gives a perfect characterization in a picture filled with delicate human touches that ring true. Jack Pickford, Claire McDowell and Charles Mailes are included in the cast.

"Tangled Fates"

Peerless-World Film Production in Which Alice Brady Is Starred Under the Direction of Travers Vale.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE title of this five-part Peerless-World Film production is rather apt. We have a tangled story of tangled fates in which the spectator is expected to credit all sorts of odd happenings without inquiring too closely into the whys and wherefores. There is a little bit of almost everything, plenty of action and enough change in scene to prevent monotony. For a time it looks like a drama of life in a New England village dominated by an uncompromising Morals Committee; next we are transferred to New York, where the heroine, after a crackers and milk diet in a hall bedroom, is permitted to become a model that she may wear an assortment of elaborate gowns, and finally the tangled fates of the characters lead them to the snow-covered wilds of Alaska.

Fortunately, Alice Brady is in the picture. She is certainly one of the most attractive actresses on the World Film roster and bids fair to become one of the most versatile. Her playing of Jane Lawson in the photoplay under consideration is so sincere and convincing that one may grant the possibility of situations, which would hardly bear analysis. Take the most important incident in the first reel, for example. Jane's younger sister, innocently enough, goes for a moonlight walk with a traveling salesman, although her father, a member of the Morals Committee, has ordered her to remain in her room. Even in the most straight-laced communities, a mild flirtation between a boy and a girl is not unforgivable, none the less Jane follows the pair, sends her sister home and then, being found with the man herself, shoulders the criticism. These circumstances hardly justify a father in turning his penniless daughter out into the cold, cold world.

For the rest, "Tangled Fates" may be classed as a story conveniently arranged to introduce a dramatic situation every once in so often and to utilize the variety of locations already mentioned. Force of a kind, it unquestionably has, and in the final reel, with the triumph of lynch law and the hanging of a man—his shadow appearing on the snow as he is suspended from a tree—there is enough to work up excitement in an audience, though even an indirect glorification of lynching is in poor taste. Satisfactory performances are given by Arthur Ashley, Helen Weer and George Morgan. Also, it may be mentioned in passing that Miss Brady introduces white kid gloves in Klondike society.

"The Gorgona"

Four-Part Authors-Ambrosio Twelfth Century Story Bulks Big with Spectacular Scenes.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Authors Film Company is showing "The Gorgona," a four-part subject made by the Ambrosio Company of Turin, Italy. It is a historical tragedy, with Pisa in the beginning of the twelfth century as the place and the time. The settings are rich in noble structures of medieval architecture. Literally hundreds of persons are engaged in the making of the picture. From the staging standpoint—of great buildings unaltered in hundreds of years, of large craft especially built for the occasion, and in the number of costumed men and women who take part in the performance—"The Gorgona" is an unusual production.

The story is a surprise. When Henry is elected commander-in-chief of the navy, Lamberto, left behind to guard the city, in pique declares to Henry he will win from him his affianced, the Gorgona. He makes good his declaration in so far that through bribing the young woman's servant he gains access to her home. Lamberto enters the room of Gorgona, seemingly prepared to stop hardly short of murder. He finds the young woman praying and keeping burning the sacred lamp of which she is the specially delegated guardian. Gorgona is not only unafriad; she greets the intruder as if he were the lover to whom but a short time before she had given so affectionate a farewell. The story from that point on turns on the efforts to save the life of Lamberto, who had contravened the edict of his father, the commander, that any one surreptitiously entering the city should be put to death—and Lamberto has been discovered.

As may be judged, "The Gorgona" is interesting more by reason of its elaborate staging than on account of its dramatic elements.

"My Country First"

Unity Film Sales Corporation Presents Timely Six-Part Subject Written and Staged by Tom Terriss.

IN the staging of the photodrama "My Country First" Tom Terris has hit upon a happy subject under present conditions. The story is presented in the form of a melodrama with the author in the principal role and a cast of players each one of whom is of a distinct type appropriately chosen. Among these appear the names of Alfred Heming, Helene Ziegfield, Scene from "My Country First" (Unity).

John Hopkins, Joseph Baker, Joseph Sterling, Jill Woodward and Alfred Vosburgh.

The plot of the story has been cleverly worked out and has been artistically visualized by Mr. Terriss, who has not only written it and played the principal role but has succeeded in perfectly impersonating the old chemist in the employ of Dempsey, the master plotter of the play. Those familiar with the splendid work of Mr. Terriss in the portrayal of Dickens characters such as Scrooge in "The Chimes" will not be surprised to learn that as the old chemist in the production in question he scores more heavily than in the character of the younger man. In the scene following the premature ignition of the chemicals forming the explosive which the old chemist has by foreign spies been set to analyze and in which the old man meets his death, Mr. Terriss does an excellent bit of acting.

The psychological side of this play will be found to have been nicely developed. Plenty of action and excellent photography are also valuable attributes of the production which will be handled as a states rights proposition by the Unity Film Sales Corporation.

"Gloria's Romance"

Chapters Two and Three Increase Steadily in Interest, with Miss Billie Burke Holding All Eyes by Her Art and Beauty.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

CHAPTER two of "Gloria's Romance," entitled "Caught by the Seminoles," stands out in strong contrast with the simple action of chapter one, yet from observation I have been inclined to the opinion that it did not come up to the expectations of spectators who have become so accustomed to viewing the impossible in preceding film serials that it will require time before they will be willing to content themselves with merely sane incidents. Youth, especially, craves the lurid and the extravagant in stories and is seldom content with the life-as-it-is-lived type. I have no doubt, however, after watching closely the career of Gloria at the Studebaker theater, Chicago, that the appeal of the Ruperts' motion picture novel will be wide and that interest will steadily increase in it, wherever it is presented.

Scene from "Gloria's Romance" (Kleine).

Gloria has a trying time of it in the Everglades, and although she is an object of commiseration, Miss Billie Burke never seeks to create it either by look or demeanor. When she is robbed by the "Cracker" family she shows fine spirit, but never a tear, and when the "Cracker" urchin pinches her cheek she resents his familiarity with a resounding whack on the jaw that makes one fairly yell with delight. In the scene where the young Seminole chief offers Gloria the choice of becoming his squaw or being killed Miss Burke again makes Gloria fearless by baring her bosom for the knife.

The scrap between the Indian chief and Dr. Joyce (Henry Kolker) looks like the real thing. It creates the impression of a real lust for victory on the part of both men, and when the Doctor hands the Indian a left uppercut to the jaw that puts him down and out, one looks around for the referee, for the count, so natural is it all.

Before that the Doctor had a hard time of it, rushing through swamps and the thick underbrush in a dress suit and pumps! The fight showed that he had the right stuff in him, and we forgive him that intense interest in Gloria's welfare had caused him to rush to her rescue without changing his apparel.

The entrance of Richard Freneau (David Powell), gentleman adventurer, in the story as a suitor for Gloria's hand, gives a new angle and points to important complications that will heighten the interest. He takes all the credit—yellow through and through as he is—for Gloria's rescue from the Indian, and Dr. Joyce calls him hard; an incident that suggests some important revelations concerning these two men, as Gloria falls in love with Freneau, believing that he had saved her from the Indian chief.

Chapter three is entitled "Perilous Love," referring to Gloria's attachment for Freneau. Her father, in order to sever this attachment, sends Gloria off to college for a five-years course, and so chapter three treats of her college days, with their pranks and waste of time. Here Miss Billie Burke is the one typical girl for the role of Gloria. I can think of none other with such grace and charm of sweet girlishness. Gloria's escapades—innocent, girlish pranks that have chiefly to do with the breaking of blue-stocking rules and the like—always end in one way, forgiveness. She is always ready to take the blame, in order to save her innocent fellow students, and her clear, straightforward eyes, with the spirit of good will that they show, banish all resentment from the hearts of her superiors.

Then Gloria returns home and reminds her father that the five years have elapsed and that, according to his promise, she must see her sweetheart, Freneau. She does see him soon after that, but in a way that shocks her. One night while entering the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, with her father, she caught sight of Freneau. Wishing to surprise him she approached so closely that her robe brushed against him. He cast a glance at her, but there was no recognition.

"He has forgotten me," sighed Gloria, and the heart-pain in her eyes, as revealed by Billie Burke, and the appealing beauty of her face as she sorrows over the shattering of her dreams form a picture that will long remain with me. The beautiful opera coat worn on the occasion by Miss Burke will make the picture all the more lasting.

"The Suspect"

Six-Part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Presents Anita Stewart in the Role of the Daughter of a Russian Nihilist.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

SPECIAL interest attaches to a review of the work of Anita Stewart under her new director, S. Rankin Drew; and the fact that she has carried with her the same remarkable qualities for which she was famous under the direction of Ralph Ince proves that there lies within herself a wonderful power of dramatic interpretation despite the aid of the best of directors. And furthermore, S. Rankin Drew has in the staging of "The Suspect," an adaptation of a story entitled "The Silver Shell," by H. J. W. Dam, proved himself equal to the occasion of piloting the star. The production is one that required masterful treatment, one of the main factors of the story being its psychological development. This point has been grasped with avidity by the director, whose treatment of this side of the question has been reflected intelligently by the players.

The role of Paul Karatoff, son of the cruel Russian, Duke Karatoff, known among the Nihilists as the "Butcher," is played in a finished manner by Mr. Drew, the supporting cast consisting of Anders Randolph, Bobby Connolly, Julia Swayne Gordon, Frank Wupperman, George Cooper, Edward Elkas, Albert Rabock, and Anna Brody. The opening of the picture is singularly effective in style, and stamps immediately the origin of the plot in the brutal death by torture of the Nihilist Karrinini, that of his wife from shock at the awful happening, and the embittering of the mind of Sophie, the Nihilist's daughter, against Karatoff. Later Sophie is found to be one of the moving spirits of the Nihilist party and has been cleverly led by the author of the story into a meeting with the son of Karatoff, when a bomb placed in a bunch of roses is directed by Sophie to be thrown into the carriage of Karatoff. The bomb misses its mark; young Paul Karatoff pursues the Nihilist agent who has thrown it, and creeps up the steps of Sophie's home after being shot. This meeting gives root to a thought in Sophie's mind which suggests the punishment of Karatoff through his son. A marriage takes place between the two, a son is born, and in the polluting of the blood of the house of Karatoff with that of a Nihilist Sophie finds her vengeance.

"Mr. Goode, the Samaritan," Five-Reel Fine-Arts; "Going Straight," Five-Reel Fine-Arts, and "A Dash of Courage," Two-Reel Keystone.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

MR. GOODE, the Samaritan," offers a dignified and kindly characterization admirably interpreted by De Wolf Hopper. In the role of a rich philanthropist, not distributing gifts for the sake of making an impression, but as one disposed to take a favorable view of his fellow-men wherever he finds them, even in jail, Hopper seems to be so perfectly at home that he fairly beams benevolence. There is no rough comedy in the part. Very much to the contrary, it rises to high comedy of a refined sort when it is shown that back of the philanthropist's faith in human nature there lurks a lot of sound judgment. Foolishly good in the eyes of his wife, a woman of social aspirations, he is not lacking in discernment when a well-disguised crook comes a coutting his daughter, the very thief who sold the nice old man a stolen automobile.

This purchase lands Goode in jail, one of the kind where offenders are given the use of one large room. Goode takes a great fancy to his fellow prisoners. His natural love of mankind so dominates his natural discernment that he insists on making them all as comfortable as possible. There is a faint touch of farce in his refurnishing the place so that it takes on the appearance of a gentlemen's club and in his being robbed by some of the "dips" at one moment and his watch and money restored at another, all without his being aware of what is going on, but the character is preserved with unusual skill throughout, while an interesting story runs on to an end that justifies the fine old fellow's confidence in human nature after all.

"Going Straight" gives opportunity for Norma Talmadge, Eugene Pallette and the Triangle children to do some fine acting, and the story is admirably handled. With good structure, careful and tasteful treatment and a splendid cast, the presentation is generally satisfactory, but the subject matter has appeared so often on the screen that it is somewhat discouraging to see it re-appear, even under advantageous circumstances. Producers cannot be aware that the story of a reformed thief who is asked to go out and crack just one more safe to keep an old pal from squealing is shown to reviewers so often that it seems to bob up about once a week on the average, and with scarcely any variation.

"A Dash of Courage" contains a dash of new spirit, there is a genuine story involved in pure farce comedy. Through an amusing series of incidents, a daring crook and his gang obtain police control of a town and put the real officers in stripes. Harry Gribbon, as the leader, offers much that is new in characterization and in his personality, and his support is active enough to make the little play move with snap from start to finish.

"The Mysteries of Myra"

Episodes Four and Five of International Serial Offer a Number of Thrilling Happenings.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE ingenuity in plot development that marked the opening episodes of the International Film Service's serial is equally apparent in the fourth and fifth instalments that place Myra and Dr. Alden at the mercy of the Black Order, before their escape is adroitly arranged. Howard Estabrook, Jean Sothern and other members enter completely into the spirit of a production in the main successful in creating the illusion of supernatural forces with which ordinary humans have the greatest difficulty in coping. Admitting, for the sake of the story, the possibility of occult powers such as the authors have conceived, there is no reason why an audience should not be properly shocked by the experiences of the characters marked for destruction.

In the fourth episode Dr. Alden, displaying more valor than judgment, locates the secret lodge of the Black Order and effects an entrance. For some time it appears that he is hopelessly caught in a death trap; but after his burial, a faithful attendant digs his way to the coffin through an underground passageway and the intrepid doctor is released that he may save Myra from death by poisonous gases concealed in toy balloons. As in preceding reels, the settings provided by the Whartons are conducive to an atmosphere of mystery, and considerable care was expended in achieving odd effects in lighting.

The elaborate hypnotizing machine introduced in Episode 3 is again brought into play in the fifth instalment, and Myra's astral body is once more released from her human form. This time she goes in search of Dr. Alden, who is among the missing after he has led the police in a raid on the lodge of the Black Order. But it happens that the Grand Master of the Devil Worshippers is prepared to beat the young woman at her own game. He, too, projects his astral body with directions to take possession of the form of Myra. An interesting situation is presented at the close of the second reel and one that suggests many possibilities for future development. The girl is so uncontrolably under the influence of the Grand Master that with words of love on her lips she attempts to shoot Dr. Alden. Several explosions, in which much earth is dislodged, preparatory to the entrance of the police into the quarters of the Black Order, lend a spectacular value to the first reel.

"The Eye of God"

A Bluebird Five-Reel Offering by Lois Weber—Full of Eerie, Creepy Quality, It Holds Strongly.

Reviewed by Hanford C Judson.

A ROMANCE in quality not unlike the weirdly imagined stories of Poe and holding strongly from its start, "The Eye of God," the latest Bluebird picture, was written by Lois Weber and produced by the Smalleys. While it belongs with the ultra-romantic, trap-door-in-lonely-inn kind of melodrama, the mechanism behind it is so simple and, in the atmosphere of the tale, so convincing, that it gives a distinctly fresh impression and makes an offering that we can heartily commend to exhibitors. The main setting is a lonely farmhouse. We soon find that there's a closet off the main bedroom on the ground floor that gives access to it from the garret through a hidden trap door.

The opening scenes concentrate our attention on the farmer, powerfully portrayed by Tyrone Power, a morose, brooding, discontented man. His unloved wife, a piteous figure, is played by Ethel Weber. The land all about is barren-looking and the farm is breaking the man's spirit. One day, the wife is called away by her sick sister. A woman, played by Lois Weber, is left with her maid at the lonely way station. There is no train till the morning and they have to spend the night at this haunted farmhouse. There is excellent acting through the early evening scene between this woman and the farmer, starved for the outer world. In the night as she sleeps he makes use of the trapdoor and kisses her hand. She wakes in fright, but he is gone.

This is a very skilfully conceived bit of business. It not only establishes the hidden stair for use later in a terrible murder scene with lightning flashing in at the windows, but is used at the climax when the heroine, putting two and two together, fastens the crime where it belongs. For two men come one stormy night and ask for shelter. They have much money. One goes to sleep in the bed while the other watches in the other room with the door closed. A hair-raising murder is committed and the second man, wounded by the farmer, doesn't know just what happened and is convicted of the crime. He is the strange woman's husband. The "Eye of God" is seen looking down on the murderer, who dares not live in the house and is chased out over the world to be finally compelled to confess after the heroine has found him out, and gives himself up.

There is some marvelous photography in it. It is strongly worked up and very ably acted. A good offering.

JACKIE SAUNDERS is altogether charming as the flirtatious bride in this three-part picture made by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer. Some of them are resplendent in the gold and lace always associated with the guardians of small European monarchies, while others do their duty—defeat the bandits and rescue the heroine—in less ornate attire. The sanguinary encounter reserved for the last reel is enlivened by some perilous falls, as the soldiers are picked off by bandit sharpshooters.

But first interest is likely to center in the personality of the bride with a winning smile and inviting eyes that she uses all too effectually, even after her marriage. Four disappointed suitors attend the ceremony and arouse the jealousy of the husband by kissing the bride with unnecessary fervor. Then, inadvertently, she is locked in a room with one of them and the suspicious husband gives free expression to his disapproval, which becomes yet more acute when the party of admirers is met on the train, and the bride, stopping for refreshments at a station, is left behind.

Having reached Europe on this inauspicious honeymoon, the troubles of the pair assume a still more serious tone; for the bride, continuing to use her eyes and her smile indiscriminately, captivates nearly all of the officers stationed in the neighborhood. One of them, it seems, is a traitor who possesses plans of extraordinary military value. Quite innocently, the flirting bride is made to act as his accomplice, then she is captured by bandits; then thrown into jail and so her troubles increase, until she promises to reserve her smiles and her eyes exclusively for her husband. As there is no pretense of even remotely reflecting life in the picture, it need not be criticised on the score of improbability. William Conklin, Edward J. Brady and Henry Stanley appear in support of Miss Saunders.

"Prisoners of Conscience"

Three-Reel Lubin Photoplay Written by L. V. Jefferson and Josephine McLaughlin, Containing a Variant of the Enoch Arden Motive.

HEROES of melodrama, like Caeser's wife, should be above suspicion. The authors of "Prisoners of Conscience" have cast a doubt upon the moral courage of the hero of their story and robbed him of the respect and sympathy that the leading lover of a melodrama should always command. Dean Carroll, a struggling young physician, is made to believe that he has given a wealthy patient an overdose of deadly poison. The mistake has been made by another doctor, who advises Carroll to run away and hide from the consequences of the act. Although happily married, Carroll does not wait to bid his wife good-bye, and hurries off and hides in the desert. Mrs. Carroll is led to believe that her husband has committed suicide. At the end of a year she has grown very fond of a young clergyman, who has long been in love with her. Just as the reverend gentleman is about to propose, the guilty man experiences a change of heart and his confession falls into the minister's hands. He puts his own happiness aside, after a struggle, and goes to Carroll, with the truth. The physician hastens back to his wife, the minister accompanying him. Carroll, inadvertently, learns the true state of affairs, but his wife realizes that he has the first claim, and sacrifices love for duty. Unlike Tennyson's mariner, this Enoch Arden accepts the sacrifice.

An attempt is made to justify the cowardice of the doctor by claiming that he was worn out with fatigue when he ran away. Even if this were accepted, it does not excuse his remaining away for a year and not communicating with his wife during that time. Dr. Carroll showed too much strength of character previous to his sudden flight to have acted in so cowardly a manner—a fact that is accentuated by the personality of Cecil Van Auker, who plays the part. This gentleman's mental and physical endowment give no suggestion of a yellow streak, although he is better adapted to heavies than to leading roles.

Setting aside the weakness of this one motive, the plot is dramatic, reasonably skillful in construction and the picture has been produced with equally favorable results. Adda Gleason as the doctor's wife gives the best performance of the cast. Creditable impersonations are contributed by Evelyn Page, George Routh, Ben Hopkins, Alan Forrest and Lucy Payton.

SCARLET women, vampires and Magdalenes may, generally, be relied upon to put a "punch" into whatever form of dramatic composition in which they are the central figures. Whether treated with the moral significance employed by Hawthorne in sketching Hester Prynne or prostituted for commercial purposes only, as in the case of certain photoplays devoted to the vampire type of women, the sinning sisterhood find many virtuous persons of both sexes that follow the chronicles of their lives and crimes with eager interest. Small wonder, then, that dealers in photoplays, as well as makers of the spoken drama, have turned to the Phrynies and Magdalenes of the present day and offer intimate histories of their careers in the market places!

"The Littlest Magdalene," the three-reel photoplay by Watkins Eppes Wright, is a somewhat different drama of besmirched womanhood. It is not related in any way to that class of fiction known to our English cousins as "the shilling shocker," and wins sympathy for itself by an ingenuousness in the writing that is only equalled by the convincing artlessness with which Leonie Flugrath invests the character of Mary O'Ryan. The girl, an East Side toiler, is drugged and taken to an hotel by an unscrupulous rent collector. The next morning, when she awakens, Mary is horrified by the thought of what she has become. She runs away from her home and finds employment as the model for an artist who is painting a "Magdalene." The painter falls in love with her, she confesses her fall from virtue, learns, through the testimony of the rent collector, that he was forced to leave her before accomplishing her ruin, and, in place of a grim tragedy, the final picture fades from the screen to the suggestion of orange blossoms and wedding bells.

Up to the time when Mary poses for the artist, the construction of the story is fluent, the motives convincing, and hackneyed situations are given an air of novelty by the evident belief of the author in the freshness of his theme. The real romance in the girl's life seems much more conventional, but the majority of picture patrons will heartily applaud the play in its entirely.

As Mary O'Ryan, little Miss Leonie Flugrath is as simple, wholesome and winning as the character demands. Her assumption of innocence and grief at her unmerited disgrace does not appear like acting but the reflection of a light from within. And she was able to denote the youth and purity of a seventeen-year-old girl without wearing her hair in little ringlets all over her head. Ingenues and ballet ladies of the pony class, please take notice!

"The First Stone" Completed.

Director Phillips Smalley has completed the five-reel society drama entitled, "The First Stone," in which the featured lead is played by Mary McDonald, who also was featured by the Smalleys in "Shoes." An important part in the photoplay is taken by Horace ("Kewpie") Morgan. Others appearing in the cast are Grace Johnson, Marion Siegler, Nanine Wright and the Emerson Sisters, together with Ernest Shields, Jack Mulhall, Dana Ong and Charles Marriot. The story is by Lois Weber.

"Those Who Toil"

A Powerful Lubin Feature in Which Nance O'Neil Takes the Leading Part.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS feature is full of action and if action is the demand "The Toilers" may surely be pointed to as part of the supply. The play is strong and full of realism. Not the least attractive part of the feature consists of the splendid settings which provide the atmosphere. The scenes are for the most part laid in the coal oil region of Pennsylvania. They form a striking background to the story which deals with the wrongs of labor. There is nothing inflammatory in the play; the writer of the scenario has given us a thoroughly human story in which lights and shadows appear in probable proportions. The director, the able Mr. Edgar Lewis, has brought out this feature of the play in his usual strong and clear fashion. Bits of realism that were especially striking were glimpses of The Great White Way at night and views of burning oil tanks. The handling of groups and mobs was likewise splendidly done and reflects no small credit on the director. There is the usual photographic excellence which is to be found in all Lubin productions.

Nance O'Neil had a part particularly suited to her talents and she made the best of it. She was well supported by Herbert Fortier, Victor Sutherland, Tom P. Tempest and John Sharkey. Adelaide Hayes did very well in a small but important role.

"The Madcap"

Romantic Comedy-Drama in Five Reels, Featuring Flora Parker De Haven as Unconventional Heroine.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

ARTISTIC excellence is the strong feature of this five-reel Red Feather production. The first reel presents the dashing girl heroine in good style, but the expected action is deferred for a reel or more. Then the story picks up with renewed interest and the events of the last two reels are strongly entertaining. But for a certain lull in the action in the second and third reels this would be an exceptional offering.

There is a continual appeal to the eye, and the director, Wm. Dowlan, has succeeded wonderfully well with the atmosphere of the piece. It is based on a story by George Gibbs, the scenes being laid in Normandy and various French provinces. Flora Parker De Haven plays the part of Flora Fairbanks with animation. She puts conviction in the scenes where the girl is thrown from a horse and where she "drops in" on an aeroplane to pay her first visit to the artist.

Flora has money and everything her heart can wish but happiness. She admires the young artist who has painted her aunt's portrait and her tomboy exploits rouse his interest. Richard Sterling appears as the artist. Vera Doria plays Countess Olga, also madly in love with the latter.

The girl meets the artist while he is strolling through Normandy and in an impulsive moment decides to accompany him. She dons a garish costume and procures some musical instruments. They travel with a burro. It is in these scenes that the action lags somewhat, and yet they are very attractive in themselevs.

Countess Ogla finds the artist at different places along the route and finally, in the hunting lodge, discovers the presence of the girl by a clever trick. She, seeing herself bested in the arist's affections, determines to start a scandal. She procures her revenge later in New York City, through the medium of an amateur play, where the scene in the hunting lodge is reproduced, at the same time spreading the information that the situation is based on facts. In spite of this notoriety, the girl and artist live down the gossip and find happiness.

Lubin Releases on G. F. Program.

"Frilby Frilled," one-act comedy, written and directed by Edwin McKim, is released May 29, by the Lubin Company, through the General Film Company. A screaming burlesque on "Trilby," in which the ubiquitous Davy Don, as a weird Severgarlic, survives a series of unique misadventures. Patsy DeForrest, Bernard Siegel, George Egan and Charles Ebbinger are in the cast.

"The Final Payment," two-act drama, by Maude Thomas and produced under the associate direction of Captain Wilbert Melville and Leon D. Kent, is released by the Lubin Company, May 30, through the General Film Company. A young wife is striving to keep the pace set by wealthier society friends and loses heavily at bridge and momentarily yields to temptation in the form of a diamond pendant. But in the end all is well. L. C. Shumway, George Routh, Helen Eddy and Velma Whitman are in the cast.

"The Code of the Hills," a three-act drama, written by Millard Wilson and directed by Melvil Mayo, under the supervising direction of Captain Wilbert Melville, is released by the Lubin Company. A girl of the hills, whose family are feudists, and a young district attorney from the city are twin victims of Cupid's arrows. Their marriage starts, instead of ending, a story in which thrills and tears alternate. The cast includes: Melvin Wilson, Bird Hopkins, Cecil Van Auker, Adelaide Bronti, Lucy Payton and Evelyn Page.

"Pickles and Diamonds," one-act comedy written by Dave Reed and directed by Clay M. Greene, is released June 3 by the Lubin Company through the General Film Company. A fortune hunter in search of a wealthy wife, and a pickle manufacturer who aspires to an aristocratic son-in-law, are brought together in a diverting test of wit. The principal parts are ably played by June Daye, Florence Williams, Francis Joyner and Kempton Greene.

"Social Pirates" Buttons Break Record.

The attractive "Social Pirates" buttons, bearing likenesses of Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby, have already passed the two and a half million mark in sales and are now getting close to the three million point. The number of buttons issued to exhibitors as advertising aids has already broken the record of two million set by the "Midnight at Maxim's" buttons. With bookings on the Kalem series increasing steadily each week Kalem officials are certain that the number of buttons called for by exhibitors will come close to the four million mark before the life of the series is ended.

Comments on the Films

Exclusively by Our Own Staff.

General Film Company.

OTTO THE ARTIST (Selig), May 15.—A one-reel farce, by Burk Symon, this photoplay is supplied with rapidly changing incidents, and is made amusing by the comic acting of D. L. Don. Patsey De Forest, Bernard Siegel and George Egan are members of the cast.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 39, 1916 (Selig), May 15.—Deer drive, Shelter Island, L. I.; Domestic Science students call on President; 8th U. S. Cavalry, El Paso; services at St. John the Divine, N. Y.; burning of grain elevator, Chicago; police parade, N. Y.; scenes at Juarez, Mexico; auto trip, Washington to San Francisco; meeting of Allies at Paris; U. S. troops in Mexico.

A LUCKY TUMBLE (Vitagraph), May 15.—William Dangman is the chief funmaker in this short reel farce. He takes a tumble down a chimney, while clad in his pajamas, and captures a burglar and the money for his room rent. The scenario was written by James A. Styles and is good for a fair average of laughs. Florence Natol, George O'Donnell, William Lyttell, Jr., Lucille Crane, Jean Hubbell, and Harry Mayo complete the cast. Scenes in Iceland are shown on the same reel.

THE IRISH REBEL (Kalem), May 18.—A one-reel photoplay of the time when Ireland first started to rebel against her English rulers, the picture unfolds a romantic story, the scenes of which were taken in the Emerald Isle. It is well acted.

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK OF SAN FRANCISCO (Essanay), May 17.—The merits of this clever artists's sketches are thoroughly understood. His drawings of the points of interest in the chief city of California show the same dexterity and skill in selection. The usual western scenic is found on the same reel.

THE ARTFUL DODGER (Kalem), May 17.—A review of this picture was printed on page 1534 of the issue of May 27. It is an excellent one-reel comedy, with Ethel Teare as the chief attraction.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, No. 40, 1916 (Selig), May 18.—Park scene, Chicago; burning of military stores at Columbus, and other scenes; "Better Baby Show," New York; Fusiliers Parade, Boston; new army base established at Marathon, Texas; hydro-aeroplane, Washington; Navy Yard, Mare Island, Cal.; with the U. S. Army in Mexico; Kentucky Derby, Louisville, Ky.; May Day celebration, New York.

THIRTY DAYS (Vim), May 18.—The material for this one-reel farce has been selected with excellent judgment. It has had a long and honorable career upon the French, English and American stages, and its powers of creating laughter are still unimpaired. Plump and Runt are very funny as the two married men who are forced to serve a jail sentence, and deceive their wives concerning their whereabouts.

AN INNOCENT VAMPIRE (Kalem), May 19.—A review of this picture was printed in the issue of May 20, page 1354. The difficulty of associating Sis Hopkins with any sort of vampiring, innocent or otherwise, is not hard to understand. Her efforts are all largely humorous, however, and worth a good laugh.

ONE CHANCE IN A HUNDRED (No. 80 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), May 20.—If it were one chance in a thousand it would be all the same to Helen—she'd take it and make it! The hazard in this number is up to the standard in its ability to thrill, and the reproduction of life on the rail as authentic as of old. Edward Matlack wrote the scenario and James Davis directed the cast.

MORE MONEY THAN MANNERS (Vitagraph), May 19.—A comic duel is the big laugh-getter in this one-reel farce by G. Graham Baker and Lawrence Semon. Broad effects are aimed at in the fun-making, and John T. Kelly, Kate Price and Hughey Mack loom large in this result. The picture is a good slam-bang offering, and the remaining parts are vigorously acted by Templar Saxe, Ed. Dunn, Dan Hayes, Jewell Hunt and Genevieve Russell.

A FAIR EXCHANGE (Vim), May 19.—The exchange consists of swapping a suit of prison stripes for a frock coat and all that goes with it. Pokes and Jabs are the swapees and the two suits of clothes are made to contribute largely to the fun of the reel. A lively and comical Vim.

A BOARDING HOUSE HAM (Selig), May 20.—A well trained leopard has one of the best comedy parts in this comedy. The reel has considerable humor, the characters being theatrical types. Wallace C. Clifton wrote the scenario, and Charles Le Moyne, Sidney Smith, Miss McKeen and Olga Celeste attend to the acting.

General Film Company Specials.

SAUCE FOR THE GANDER (No. 8 of "The Social Pirates") (Kalem), May 15.—The bird referred to in this number of the George Bronson Howard serial is a loan shark, and his son and partner is given the same sort of dressing down by the lady avengers. The plot is skilfully devised. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of May 20, page 1351.

THE HARD WAY (Selig), May 15.—Something of the strength of theme to be found in Hogarth's "The Rake's Progress," has been put into this three-reel photoplay by the author, Russell E. Smith. It is the story of a rich man's son who starts on the downward road. He is shown as a forger and murderer, but, contrary to the English realist, author Smith insures a happy ending for his youthful sinner by having the events of the last reel take place in a dream. The incidents form a gripping screen drama. Jack Pickford is boyish and convincing as the rich man's son. Harry Lonsdale, Lillian Hamward, Vivian Reed, Sidney Smith and James Bradbury complete the cast. F. N. Heffron, director.

THE DOUBLE CROSS (Essanay), May 16.—An appealing little love story is woven into the action of this two-reel photoplay, which deals with criminal life, a woman detective being the means of running down a gang of counterfeiters and bringing the romance of the lovers to a joyous conclusion. The picture is well made melodrama and receives good treatment at the hands of a cast consisting of Elizabeth Burbridge, Patrick Calhoun, Thurlow Brewer, and Alice MacChesney.

THE BEGGAR KING (Lubin), May 16.—It is not always easy to believe that the events shown in this two-reel photoplay are a truthful transcript from life. As a melodramatic story, meant only to entertain, it fulfills its mission. Robert Gray, Jay Morley, Louis Fitz Roy, M. de la Parelle and Eleanor Blevins form an earnest and satisfying cast.

BEVERLY OF GRAUSTARK (Biograph), May 17.—A three-reel screen version of the George Barr McCutcheon "best-seller," displays all of the fine flavor of romance beloved by readers of this writer of novels. A handsome prince who rescues lovely ladies in distress and wins their regard under the guise of a mere officer, has a powerful attraction for many worthy persons. This photoplay will meet their approbation. The locations have been selected with intelligence, and a large company employed. Linda Adverson, Chas. Perley, Gertrude Robinson, George Pearce, Robert Drout and Chas. H. W. West have the leading roles.

SPELLBOUND (Knickerbocker Star Feature), May 17.—The first of the Knickerbocker five-reel features was made by the Horkheimers, with Lois Meredith giving an excellent performance in the leading role. The story, dealing with the spell cast by an idol stolen from India, is fairly interesting.

JACKSTRAWS (Lubin), May 18.—A three-reel melodrama, the story hinging upon a runaway marriage and its consequences. The man in the case is a worthless fellow, and the girl has a hard time in living down her early mistake. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of May 27, page 1534.

THE LITTLEST MAGDALENE (Edison), May 16.—A review of this picture is printed on another page of this issue.

A CHILD OF FORTUNE (Knickerbocker), May 19.—This three-reel Star Feature photoplay opens quietly and pleasantly in the country, the action shifting to the slums of the city and closing with a grim tragedy. The story is of fair quality and very well told. Frank Mayo and Lillian West are excellent in the "leads," and Jimsy Mayo, Charles Dudley, Henry Stanley and Edward Peters do satisfactory work as the minor characters.

A ROSE OF ITALY (Essanay), May 20.—The scenes of this three-reel photoplay are laid in this country, an Italian girl, just from her native land, being the rose referred to in the title. She becomes a model; next a dancer, and the story is brought to a close after she has had a dramatic adventure with a rascally Italian banker, and is glad to marry her old sweetheart from home. An interesting and adequately acted screen drama, with Ann Kirk, Edmund F. Cobb, Patrick Calhoun, Richardson Cotton and Hugh Thompson in the cast.

MISS ADVENTURE (Vitagraph), May 20.—Three sisters and all attractive; young man makes love to all three, and picks out the youngest for his wife. Youngest a saucy bit of baggage and fond of playing practical jokes. Her adventures make an entertaining three-reel comedy. The part is romped through quite fetchingly by Mary Anderson. Webster Campbell is the lucky lover, and Annie Schaeffer, Otto Ledere, Corinne Griffith, Carmen Phillips, Jack Mower and William Western round out a competent cast.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE SINS OF MEN (May 14).—A five-reel farce picture that made many laughs in the audience. It is a picture made to serve as a commercial offering of amusement. There are one of two scenes in it that are not morally edifying. A longer review will be found elsewhere in this issue.

International Film Service.

THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA (International), May 15-22.—Episode four and five of this ingenious serial, based on occult phenomena, fulfill the promise of earlier instalments. They are well acted by Howard Estabrook and Jean Sothern and the settings are made to contribute to the atmosphere of mystery. A review appears on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 72 (Gaumont), May 17.—The horse show at Washington, launching of a big tanker in California, auto races, yacht races, cadet drills and war scenes on the Mexican border are included in this entertaining and instructive number.

HARMONY AND DISCORD (Cub), May 19.—A Billy Armstrong number of fairly entertaining qualities. The plot, what there is of it, centers about the placing of a piano in a certain house. The piano takes fire, the piano mover gets in trouble and reinstates himself in the good graces of the mistress of the house by rescuing her daughter in an automobile accident.

REEL LIFE NO. 3 (Gaumont), May 21.—A live educational subject, showing the way railroad tracks are renewed; drilling holes and sinking spikes by machinery, removing old rails and smoothing the roadbed. Other scenes show the way maple sugar is made on a larger scale. Then follow some very fine views of animal life, taken by Elwin R. Sanborn. The growth of antlers on the American elk is a striking feature. A good subject.

RIVAL ROGUES (Vogue), May 23.—This is an entertaining farce comedy number in which two thieves fall in love with the same girl, who promises to fix her choice on the best provider. The theme is not very high class, but has been developed in a fairly humorous manner.

SEE AMERICA FIRST NO. 37 (Gaumont), May 24.—This half-reel gives interesting panoramic views of Savannah, Ga., and surroundings. The plantation views are attractive; also the view of the grove of live oak trees, centuries old.

NOSEY NED (Gaumont), May 24.—On same reel with above. Another of Harry Palmer's animated drawings, this time picturing Ned in the act of purchasing a spring hat. He gets a hand-painted one, which brings him much ridicule. A characteristic number.

SAMMY'S SEMI-SUICIDE (Falstaff), May 27.—An amusing office comedy, featuring the corpulent Walter Hiers as a young man in love. He threatens suicide when things do not go right, and makes one or two unsuccessful efforts in that direction. In spite of the grimness of subject this is treated in good burlesque style and is quite successful.

THE PORK PLOTTERS (Beauty), May 28.—Orral Humphrey is the producer of this picture which deals with the near ruin of Mr. Sliggers, impersonated by Mr. Humphrey, in a slump in the pork market. The turn of the tide comes when one morning Mr. Sliggers enjoined by his wife not to forget to bring home some pork chops with him, writes on his cuff, "buy pork." The result is that all who see, rush out to buy stock. A very amusing comedy.

THE DISGUISERS (Falstaff), May 29.—There is not a very strong element of comedy in this number in which a discarded lover tries to separate husband and wife by concocting a false story and persuading the husband to disguise as a plumber, a painter, etc., at different times, in order to discover his wife's supposed perfidy. The suspected man turns out to be the wife's uncle, who is about to give the newly married couple the deed of one of his houses as a wedding present.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE COURTESAN (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe), May 18.—A five-part production from the American studios, featuring Eugenie Forde. The picture's most serious fault lies in the fact that it is developed too much along the lines of a narrative rather than a drama. The story deals with the career of a woman whom circumstances has forced into the wrong track. She places her son in good hands with the proviso that he will never know of his mother, and continues a life of wrong-doing. Later when the son has grown to manhood he is elected district attorney, and in trying to depose him he is lured to his mother's house while a raid on the house is arranged. The story ends happily.

THE BLINDNESS (Mustang), May 19.—Rhea Mitchell, William Stowell and Roy Stewart play the principal roles in this two-part production which treats of how a young school teacher in the west is wooed by two lovers with the result that a bitter hatred takes root in the heart of one against the other, and in crossing the desert he takes advantage of the fact that his partner is stricken with sand blindness to leave him to what he supposes will mean death. A timely rescue of the blind man brings him home in safety to his wife, formerly the school teacher. An entertaining number.

HIGH LIGHTS AND SHADOWS (Centaur), May 20.—A two-reel story of a fishing village on the coast of Africa, featuring Wm. Clifford, Margaret Gibson, Jack Nelson and Marie Gavette. An artist becomes enamoured of a fishing girl and neglects his wife, but later events occur which put him on the right track again. The costuming of the Briton fisherfolk is attractive and the coast scenes are also picturesque. The Bostock animals appear to advantage in the scenes taken in the jungle later in the picture. The story is rather conventional in plot but contains many features of interest.

FOR UNCLE SAM'S NAVY (Thanhouser), May 23.—A two-reel subject, by Philip Lonergan, featuring Edwin Stanley, Kathryn Adams and others. This is a story of international intrigue and centers about the person of "Captain Rudolph," who comes to America to get some military plans. The plot ingredients are familiar, but have been put together in this instance in a new and absorbing way. There is a surprise at the close. The cast is pleasing and the story holds the interest well.

ARMADALE (Gaumont), May 25.—A three-reel special, based on a novel by Wilkie Collins. Alexander Gaden plays the part of James Midwinter and Iva Shepard, the scheming governess, who tries to poison Allan Armadale, Jr. The story is old-fashioned and crowded with incidents. It keeps the observer watching closely to follow the various threads, but is quite strong in spite of this. The father's confession is pictured in a realistic way, the fire on the vessel at sea being a good feature. The close seemed a little abrupt. The theme of the narrative shows how a son tries to make up for his father's crimes. The construction is good considering the number of complications.

OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe), June 1.—A five-part production from the Thanhouser studios in which Gladys Hulette plays the feminine lead. Miss Hullette, always attractive, does much to help the picture along by the manner in which she handles the role of a young woman who lives under the shadow of her father's crime, and gives her inheritance to satisfy his creditors. It is in rather bad taste to interpolate a fashion show in the midst of what should be a legitimate drama. This is bound to bring criticism as to construction, in spite of the excellent things accomplished by the players.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

PASQUALE (Morosco), May 18.—A tender-hearted story in a five-reel picture made by the Oliver Morosco company. It is an offering that is sure to please broadly and is commended. For a longer review see page 1532, issue of May 27, 1916.

BURTON HOLMES TRAVELOGUES (Paramount), May 22.—In this issue of the Burton Holmes pictures, the party of travelers boards a yacht for a tour of the Philippine Islands. Barring the first part of the reel, which gives an unnecessary number of close-ups of the members of the yacht's crew, it is a very passable number, instructive as well as entertaining.

PICTOGRAPHS (Paramount), May.—The preparedness section of this issue of the Paramount magazine concerns the making of a sailor, the training of raw recruits and the life on shipboard. Hugo Munsterberg offers another interesting test of mental alertness. An automobile equipped with every convenience for camping is shown in service; also there are instructive views of the Japanese method of preserving cut flowers.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS NO. 38, 1916 (Pathe), May 10.—In this issue is shown the Cymric on her last voyage out of New York, General Obregon and his staff in conference with Gen. Scott, U. S. marines and sailors boarding the superdreadnaught Oklahoma at Philadelphia, statesmen and soldiers from the Allied countries in conference at Paris, attractive American fashions posed by models of the Mood fashion house, Leo Stephens opening the Motion Picture Board of Trade Exposition by ascending over Madison Square Garden in a balloon, and the shipping of deer from Shelter Island to the Adirondacks.

PATHE NEWS NO. 39, 1916 (Pathe), May 13.—What will no doubt prove most interesting to Americans in this number are the splendid views the Pathe camera man has succeeded in getting of the Preparedness Parade of May 13 in New York City. Other items of interest are Russian troops arriving at Marseilles, France, the prize baby in the recent contest in New York, and views from the French war front.

LUKE'S LOST LAMB (Phunphilms).—Harold Lloyd, who appears in this series of films, is best known to most of us as Lonesome Luke. In this number which, by the way, is an especially entertaining one, we follow Luke and his fellows in crime to the seashore where the most amusing of situations occur on the beach. During this time his wife, fat and anxious to join the sylphs of the seashore, loses their only child, which is found after much chasing and amusing misunderstandings.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE IRON CLAW NO. 12 (Feature), May 15.—"The Haunted Canvas" is the title of this number of the serial. In it Janet O'Mara is pursued and trapped by Legar and his associates, and is rescued by the Laughing Mask, Margery Golden also has an adventure while trying to follow single handed the trail of Legar, and is saved from death through the Laughing Mask who suddenly appears on the scene and throws the bomb intended to end the lives of Margery and those with her, from the window. A full review of this number will be found on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corp.

A DASH OF COURAGE (Keystone), May 7.—A lively farce-comedy containing some striking situations and a real story.

THE PRIMAL LURE (Triangle-Ince), May 21.—A rather poor vehicle for a good actor, perhaps the poorest in which he has appeared.

A CHILD OF THE PARIS STREETS (Triangle-Fine Arts), May 21.—An interesting melodrama of the Paris underworld with Mae Marsh in an animated leading role.

THE MARKET OF VAIN DESIRES (Triangle-Kay-Bee), May 28.—The story of a young preacher who won his bride through a fearless denunciation in the pulpit of loveless marriages.

MR. GOODE, THE SAMARITAN (Fine Arts), May 28.—A delightful comedy of the better sort with De Wolf Hopper in an unusual characterization. A clean story, entertaining and original. Reviewed on another page.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

WHEN SLIM PICKED A PEACH (Imp), May 16.—A domestic comedy, written by Roy Clements, featuring Victor Potel and Jane Bernoudy. The story shows how a henpecked husband flirts with the new hired girl, who leaves the imprint of her hands on the back of his coat. His father-in-law comes and also falls a victim to her fascinations. This is quite amusing in a conventional way and makes about an average release.

THE WOOING OF AUNT JEMIMA (Nestor), May 19.—A comedy number, by Clifford Howard, featuring Stella Adams, Neal Burns, Betty Compson, Ed Burns and Harry Rattenberry. The aunt inherits a fortune and numerous rivals for her hand spring up. Neal impersonates the aunt and has some fun. There is not much novelty in this, but it is quite pleasing in presentation.

ALL OVER A STOCKING (Nestor), May 29.—A pleasing comedy subject, by Arthur Mackley, featuring Ethel Lynne, Eddie Lyons and Betty Compson. The young husband is suspected by his wife of having purchased some silk stockings for the pretty stenographer. This is handled in a delicate manner and makes a good offering of the lighter type.

A DOUBLE FIRE DECEPTION (Imp), May 30.—A comedy number, by Jay Hunt, featuring Jane Gail, Matt Moore, Allen J. Holubar and Clara Beyers. The maid and her mistress change places, also the master and his valet. A double wedding results under amusing circumstances. This is an entertaining subject.

THE FUR-TRIMMED COAT (Laemmle), May 30.—An original comedy number, with a surprise ending, by Irene Haere. Rupert Julian, Francelia Billington, Douglas Gerrard and Elsie Wilson appear. This concerns a fur coat and hat and muff, which are given to the wife by an admirer. She becomes conscience stricken and confesses. Then comes the twist at the close, which makes a strong number of it.

THE ATTIC PRINCESS (Big U), May 31.—A number, written by Calder Johnstone, featuring Zoe Bech, Marjorie Ellison and Thomas Jefferson. The story concerns a little girl, kept in an attic by her cruel aunt. An old artist, in the adjoining house, comes to her rescue. The part of the aunt would have been more effective if played by an older woman. A quaint little story, with a touch of heart interest.

GOOD NIGHT, NURSE (Nestor), June 2.—A number, written by Al E. Christie, presenting a familiar comedy situation, in which a young man pretends illness in order to be near a hospital nurse with whom he is infatuated. The rough house he creates among the patients is full of humorous action and certain to bring laughter.

A DARK SUSPICION (Joker), June 3.—An amusing knockabout comedy by Allen Curtis, featuring Wm. Franey, Gale Henry and others. The experiences of Bill and his wife in the coal bin are very funny. A pleasing number of the type.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THE CIRCUS MONGRELS (Universal Special), May 22.—Episode No. 4 of "Peg o' the Ring." An entertaining installment in which numerous interesting incidents occur. Peg assists Lund, Jr., to get out of the millrace and both escape from the lions den. They return to the circus and Peg once more falls into the powers of the Hindu. Lund, Jr., discovered the latter, who has shut Peg into a strong box. They have a hand to hand struggle, during which fire starts in one of the tents. The circus stunts are pleasing. This serial is proving an enjoyable one in numerous respects, although the plot has not many complications.

CORPORAL BILLY'S COMEBACK (Big U), May 25.—A two-reel subject, adapted from a story by Harry Leon Wilson. This contains good characterizations, Thomas Jefferson playing the civil war veteran and Antrim Short the boy scout. The old man finds himself supplanted by a Spanish-American war veteran as grand marshal of the Decoration Day parade. Then he and the boy scout shame the old fellow's detractors by rounding up a negro murderer and bringing him to justice. This has a strong interest and is above the average production in entertainment value.

THE IRON HAND (Red Feather), May 29.—This five-reel offering, by George E. Hall, features Hobart Bosworth as Big Tim Noland, leader of a gang in a tough ward. He clashes with the political boss and is thrown into prison, with his companion, Slim. Later in the story Slim is killed and his wife dies. Tim then adopts their baby boy, whom he afterward surrenders to a sociologist who desires to raise the child under a good environment. Twenty years pass and the story takes up again with Tim as political boss of the city and the youth in love with the daughter of a reformer. The story is interesting principally as a sociological study. The political scenes are true to life and, while not dramatic, the narrative probes deeper into human problems than the average film.

TAMMANY'S TIGER (Bison), June 3.—A two-reel subject in which wild animals play the important roles. The Tammany Club holds a meeting, for which occasion a "doped" tiger has been procured. It comes to life during the meeting and creates much excitement. An elephant upsets a circus parade and the animals invade massage rooms, street cars and other places. The episodes are quite humorous in themselves, but lack a good connecting plot. With greater tension in the scenes this would have been stronger. It proves fairly entertaining as it is.

World-Equitable.

TANGLED FATES (Peerless), May 22.—Playing the principal character in this five-part drama, Alice Brady gives an interesting performance. The story is not particularly convincing, but it offers enough variety in scene and action to hold the attention. A review may be found elsewhere in this issue.

Miscellaneous.

MY COUNTRY FIRST (Unity Terriss), May.—A six-part production written and produced by Tom Terriss. Mr. Terris also plays the principal role. This will be found to be an entertaining picture, which deals with the manufacture of an explosive by a young American patriot with a view to presenting it to his country. He is trapped by foreign spies, escapes and is trapped a second time, when he is given a choice between sacrificing his life or giving up the formula of his invention. A full review appears on another page of this issue.

PARAMOUNT PROGRAM.

Completing the Paramount program for the week of June 5, the three short subjects released by the Paramount Pictures Corporation will be the eighteenth of the Paramount-Burton Holmes travel pictures "Visiting the Sultan of Sulu," Paul Terry's "Farmer Al Falfa's Tentless Circus" and the weekly edition of the screen magazine, the Pictographs.

That inventive hero, Farmer Al Falfa, scorns the big top of Barnum and Bailey fame when he decides upon a circus of his own. Having seen the daring tightrope walker and the menagerie full of jungle beasts of a big show at close range, Al Falfa determines upon a rural enterprise of his own with the cows, pigs and horses of the old farm as performers in his improvised ring banks. Al Falfa himself acts as ringmaster and the entertainment proves more diverting than any yet staged under canvas.

Burton Holmes visits the Sultan of Sulu, who was made famous by George Ade, when he makes his next stop in his screen cruise through the distant Philippines. Governor General Cameron Forbes acts as host and the trip is made under the most advantageous of circumstances on board that official's private yacht. After one more stop in the cruise, Travel-Picture audiences may forsake the Far East to visit again the beauty spots of Europe as they were before the outbreak of the great war. The first of this new film series by Mr. Holmes will be "Imperial Berlin."

Having seen how a "cop" is made, Paramount audiences will now catch a glimpse of the making of a fireman in the eighteenth Pictograph release. In this edition, also, Hugo Munsterberg, the noted educator, will show another of his mental tests on the screen, "Logical Imagination." "Free Play" will be the "Better Babies" release of this week and "First Aid to the Injured" will also be shown.

"MYSTERIES OF MYRA" GOES BIG IN BOSTON.

Frank D. Stratton, manager of the Franklin Park theater of Boston, is responsible for filling the Franklin Park to its capacity for the initial release of "The Mysteries of Myra." Suspended above the playhouse was a huge balloon kite with the title of the feature picture showing boldly on all sides. Mr. Stanton's idea of giving away souvenirs to the children succeeded in filling the street to the extent that the police were required to keep the traffic open. The souvenirs, in the form of toy balloons, were distributed to the kiddies, and went a long way towards increasing Mr. Stanton's popularity with the little tots.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

VISITING THE MOROS WITH HOLMES.

Pirateland—pictured by generations of poets and novelists as the haunt of romance and adventure—is shown in a "close-up" view to motion picture audiences in the seventeenth release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, "Visiting the Murderous Moros of Mindanao."

A good fight is always more palatable than a good meal to the Moros, from the sturdiest chieftain to the smallest boy of the tribe, but the traveler in these "easy chair" journeys going to Mindanao with the escort of Burton Holmes and Governor-General Forbes views without danger to life or limb the murderous natives in their every day life in the streets and in the markets, and sees the warlike and barbaric splendor of their war dances and naval evolutions.

The Moros, whom the Spaniards were never able to subdue, but whom a wise and tolerant administration by American governors has at last made good friends of Uncle Sam, are descendants of a villainous and inhuman race of sea-roving pirates, who still cruise about in curious craft and make their homes in villages of queer huts built on stilts on the shores of Mindanao.

In this seventeenth release of the Travel-Pictures the chiefs of the Moros are shown as they turned out to greet the "White Chiefs from Washington" with all their pomp. Two of the Dattos are shown doing a spear dance and the principal chieftains execute a series of naval manoeuvres in their "vintas" or boats, before Governor Forbes and Mr. Holmes' camera.

NEW COMEDIANS FOR VOGUE.

Paddy McQuire, who first came before the eyes of the public as a leading man on the motion picture screen through vehicles furnished him by Vogue Films, Inc., has come into instantaneous popularity. In addition to Paddy's comic ability, Vogue has secured the services of the inimitable Ben Turpin, who needs no introduction to film audiences. The Vogue releases of the near future will show Ben in new characters to which this funny man gives laugh-creating powers beyong conception. The possibilities offered by these originators of pantomime comedy are unlimited. They see fun in everything, and are endowed with the ability to make the general public reflect their mirth.

With these two, and under the able direction of Jack Dillon, pretty little Rena Rogers lends the charm of beauty and grace to the Vogue productions. This accomplished comedienne is a photoplay star of repute. Her smile is contagious. Her personality appeals to all who see her work. On and off the screen, she is irresistible.

Then there is Arthur Moon, who enacts heavy lover and heavy villain parts with equal precision. He is a dark-haired, dark-eyed young man, congenial and likable, and he radiates good fellowship. His knowledge of screen technique adds materially to the strength of the Vogue comedy cast.

The productions of this company reach the screen through the medium of the Mutual Film Corporation, which has found that the Vogue comedies are constantly increasing in popularity both with exhibitor and theater patron.

CLEVER UNDER-SEA PHOTOGRAPHY.

Remarkable scenes photographed under water enhance the brisk comedy of "The Sea Dogs," the Vim release of June 8. The rescue of a family of castaways is effected by the simple expedient of towing a boat which drifts to their island. The towing is done by Babe Hardy, the famous "Plump," who walks along the sea bottom, pulling the painter of the boat, in which six persons are seated. Several other cleverly devised scenes lift this picture out of the ordinary run, including the antics of a hawser which obligingly ties itself into knots at the right moment.

J. P. McGOWAN WINS POPULARITY CONTEST.

J. P. McGowan, whose latest far-famed accomplishment is the production of "The Girl and the Game" with Helen Holmes, has won the laurels of popularity in a contest conducted through the columns of the Minneapolis Journal.

Mr. McGowan is now at work in the title role and directing the production of "Whispering Smith," the novel by Frank H. Spearmin, which is being filmed as a ten-reel feature, with Helen Holmes in the principal feminine role, at the Los Angeles studios of the Signal Film Corporation.

"HER HUSBAND'S WIFE" (Ivan).

The Ivan Film Productions will release through their exchanges on June 1 "Her Husband's Wife," an original story by Ivan Abramson. The story of "Her Husband's Wife" treats of an unfaithful wife who deserts her husband and child and elopes with a sculptor. The child in later years becomes a famous violinist. The woman leaves the sculptor to marry another, but to him also she proves false and secures a divorce. Her husband marries the famous violinist (his wife's daughter) some time later. A wonderful dramatic story unfolds itself and the situations are tense with interest as the play comes to the denouement and finally ends happily for the deserving.

A notable cast was assembled to enact the various roles. Sally Crute heads the list. To her is assigned the "vampire" role in this play. Mignon Anderson has the role of the vampire's daughter. Augustus Phillips, long with the Edison Company, returns to the screen in this play and creates the difficult roles of husband to both. Brinsley Shaw, William Bechtel and other well known screen players support the principals.

"Her Husband's Wife" will be released through the Ivan Exchanges throughout the country the last week in May. It will be in five acts.

"FLAMES OF VENGEANCE" (Gaumont).

The first June release of a Gaumont three-reel photodrama will be "Flames of Vengeance." This will reach the screen as a Mutual Picture June 8. Miss Gertrude Robinson has the stellar role, with Miss Iva Shepard appearing as the central female figure in the first reel. "Flames of Vengeance" tells the story of a woman's mistake on her wedding day. Miss Shepard has the role of the girl disowned by her hot-headed old father because she jilts the man she is to marry in a few hours to bestow her hand upon one of the men asked to serve as ushers for the happy event. The man she marries not only proves unworthy but also dies in a short time. The young wife is forced to struggle desperately to rear the daughter who is born to her.

Miss Robinson is the daughter of this union. When the drama itself opens she is a girl of nineteen. She secures employment as a stenographer in the office of a large manufacturing concern, not knowing that her employer is the man her mother had wronged by deserting him at the altar. The man falls in love with her. When there is labor trouble, he is abducted by striking conspirators and imprisoned in a barn far in the country. But his stenographer learns of his plight and rides to his rescue on top of a limousine which is taking several men sworn to burn the building with their employer in it. She effects his rescue in a spectacular manner, and all ends happily with the girl marrying the man her mother had once promised to wed. Others in the cast are Sydney Mason, John Reinhard John Mackin, Birsha Shepard, Albert Macklin, James Levering, Mathilde Baring and Charles H. Travis.

"JACK" (Mustang).

Anna Little, with whose record as a cowgirl and horsewoman all film fans are familiar, has a splendid opportunity to show just what she can do in the characterization of a society woman also in a two-part Mustang drama entitled "Jack," in which Frank Borzage and Jack Richardson portray the principal male parts, under the direction of Borzage.

Borzage, who plays the title role of Jack, is a plain cowboy on the ranch owned by Gilman (Dick La Reno). Frances (Anna Scene from "Jack" (Mustang).

Little) is a girl who has been born and brought up in wealth and luxury. She goes West on a visit with her schoolmate, Gilman's daughter, and falls in love with Jack, promising to return and marry him when her school days are over.

Back East, Frances allows herself to be talked into marrying Welton, a rich club man (Jack Richardson), and thus writes to Jack. Meanwhile Jack has built a bungalow to be ready for his bride. When he receives the news of her approaching marriage to Welton, he burns down the new house and tries to end his life in the fire. However, he is rescued by neighbors; Frances is informed of the tragedy and realizes she loves Jack, who regains his health under her tender nursing; and the two lovers are married.

Anna Little is at her very best in the realm of cowboys and horses. In her charming, free-hearted girlishness there is an appeal that reaches out from the screen. The story is a splendid vehicle for Miss Little's abilities. "Jack" will be released on the Mutual schedule on May 26.

"FLOATING STAGE" FOR "SOCIAL PIRATE."

A "floating stage" is the latest innovation introduced at the Kalem Company's Glendale studio. Director Horne found it necessary to construct the new wrinkle to secure the desired realism for the ship's interior scenes in "In the Service of the State," a forthcoming episode of "The Social Pirates." A slightly rocking motion of the ship was required. In the small interiors this was an easy matter to evolve, but the concert room of the liner in which much of the important action occurs taxed the inventive genius of the studio force. Director Horne refuses to divulge the exact means used, but the effect was much similar to a modified form of the "Witching Waves," so popular at amusement resorts. After two hours of rehearsing and playing on the gently swaying floor of the ship the players were of one mind in agreeing that one does not have to go to sea to get seasick.

SELIG-TRIBUNE GOES AFTER MEXICAN STUFF.

With commendable enterprise Editor Jack Wheeler of the Selig-Tribune, the motion picture news film, ordered a specially equipped automobile for carrying cameramen into Mexico when the United States forces recently entered that country. This is probably the first occasion where an automobile has been especially built and equipped for service on such an occasion.

Selig Tribune Touring Car.

This Selig-Tribune touring car has capacity for seventy-five gallons of gasoline, fifteen gallons of water and eight gallons of cylinder oil. An especially constructed top of khaki affords shelter during the day and can be adjusted as a sleeping and shelter tent at night. The novel car also is equipped to carry a camera, tripod, blankets, canned goods, cooking utensils, and there is a novel rack for machine gun equipment.

In fact the automobile has been so constructed that it can make a continuous journey of eight hundred miles without stopping for either gasoline, water or oil. There is also a box lined with steel plates and, in case of trouble, the car can be operated from the interior of the box.

The Selig-Tribune car is being used in Mexico by I. G. Ries and Nicholas McDonald.

RIALTO COMPLETES "HOUSE OF MIRRORS."

The initial production of the Rialto Film Corporation, "The House of Mirrors," by Frederick Chapin, directed by Marshal Farnum, is completed and will be released in two weeks. The photoplay is replete with dramatic situations and treats of a theme domestic in its nature.

Unusual sets were built for this production, but noteworthy of them all is the room of mirrors, after which the play receives its title. In order to construct this room twelve gigantic mirrors were placed in frames reinforced with steel in order to hold the tremendous weight. It required nine men sixteen hours of continuous work to install these mirrors.

It has been heretofore announced that the production will be in five reels, but difficulty has been experienced in cutting down the 16,000 feet of negative originally taken to fit five reels and it is not as yet determined whether the production will be in that length or of an added reel.

Frank Mills is starred in the production.

"THE LURE OF A LURID LOVE" (Universal).

Have you ever observed how vamps work under the tropical Hawaiian moon? Do you know that they always slip a cigarette in the corner of their mouths and wear aigrettes? Have you ever noticed that vamps generally do their vamping on a most melodious lounge dressed in clinging silks and satins which suggest that they are trying to entice the object of their vamping into a compromising attitude?

If you have, then "The Lure of a Lurid Love," a Universal comedy, will give you a laugh that will last a week. It tells how a faithful wife and her still more faithful six-months old baby are betrayed by a wicked "wampire" who wins the "wictim" to her by wile. Oh, it's a heart-rending tale, and if you are tired ad nauseam of the woman adventuress-vampire type of story don't fail to see "The Lure of a Lurid Love." It's a looloo.

"OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY" (Thanhouser).

Expose of a band of notorious "get-rich-quick" schemers and their nefarious methods pursued in obtaining the confidences and frequently the savings of a gullible public, has been made the basis for a stirring photodrama to be released shortly by the Mutual Film Corporation. In the preparation of the scenario the Thanhouser-Mutual studios were furnished with considerable data by Federal agents and by several noted Government sleuths who have been instrumental in breaking up a number of bands of notorious "get-rich-quick" plotters.

This stirring production will be released through the Mutual as a Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, under the title of "Other People's Money," the five acts of the piece are alive with action and replete with thrilling situations. Throughout runs an unusually pleasing love story, ending with the happy marriage of the young girl who brings about the expose of the band and the young detective, with whom she worked.

Gladys Hulette, the five-foot star of Thanhouser-Mutual productions, is the featured player, supported by an extraordinary company of players, headed by Fraunie Fraundholz, a newcomer, but by no means an unknown player. "Other People's Money" wil be released in five acts, on May 29.

VARIETY FILM PROPOSES SERIES.

An unusual demand for, and the impression created by, the five-part feature, "Should a Baby Die?" being booked through the Variety Films Corporation, has resulted in the announcement by President Louis Rosenbluh that the present picture will form the first of a series that will be completed and exploited under this general title and each of which will be accorded a main sub-title appropriate to the phrase of the general question on which the ensuing chapters will dwell. This decision was arrived at as the result of a contest held by an up-to-date exhibitor who, in conjunction with the Variety Corporation, offered a cash prize among his patrons for the best suggestion offered by them for a sequel story on this topic. The series, or as it might be called, the serial, will be in six or eight parts, and each will run approximately from four to five reels in length. Contracts for the production work will be placed in a few days, and the second picture started on at once.

I. J. Schmertz has left for an extended trip through the State of New York in the interests of the Variety Films Corporation and to exploit their big five-part feature, "Should a Baby Die?" Mr. Schmertz's first stop was in Buffalo, where he put over some remarkably unique advertising stunts which created a decided favorable impression at the Screen Club Ball. After a few days' activities, he reports good business and a big demand for the picture.

"THE DESTROYERS" (Vitagraph).

With the first week of June comes a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature of unusually high quality. In it is a face new to photoplay lovers, for Lucille Lee Stewart, Vitagraph's new player, makes her bow to followers of the big "V" in Ralph W. Ince's latest effort, "The Destroyers." The story is taken from James Oliver Curwood's novel, "Peter God," a tale of the Northwest.

Miss Stewart portrays the part of Josephine McCloud, the wife of Peter God, a fugitive who is hiding in the frozen North. Years before he had been the main factor in the defeat of an unfit character for the mayoralty and was afterward "framed" by the man and his confederates. The evidence against him assures conviction and he escapes to the North. Shortly after his accuser on his deathbed makes a confession clearing him of the crime. Josephine, after many hardships in the white blanketed country, finds him in the clutches of the "red death," and through her careful nursing and attention he recovers. Together they start back for civilization, happy in the knowledge of each other's love and devotion.

Huntley Gordon, John Robertson and Richard Turner assist Miss Stewart in the enactment of the story. It is a typical "Ince" production.

DRA-KO AD CARTOONS POPULAR.

The steady growth of the business of the Dra-Ko Film Company, Inc., is very gratifying to the originators of that concern. There can be no doubt about there being a field for the animated cartoon as an advertising method.

One of the main reasons why this concern has been so successful has been their care and foresight in handling this new type of advertising medium. They have placed the creation of all cartoons in the hands of Frank A. Nankivell, who needs no introduction. His splendid work is known from coast to coast and in many foreign lands. Back of every cartoon that he and his corps of able assistants turn out is the experience of this man who has been carefully studying his audiences for years. He knows what people want, and he goes them one better by giving them more than they expected.

Wherever these commercial advertising cartoons have been shown, they have had the hearty approval of the audience, and because of their clean-cut, spontaneous humor they have been highly praised by the theater men themselves.

PARAMOUNT PICTOGRAPH PRESENTS PLASTIQUES.

"Did Sherman Say Law or War?" will be the second of Ashley Miller's "Plastiques" on the Paramount program to be released among the short reel subjects from the J. R. Bray studios. This screen novelty is a clever adaptation of sculpture to the films, the figures in motion being shown in relief. The characters in these scenarios are introduced to the audience by evolution on the screen. Two farmers, a lawyer and a cow constitute the cast of "Did Sherman Say Law or War?" For plot this drama in sculpture depends on the squabble of the farmers over a cow which is claimed by both. The rightful owner engages a lawyer to defend his rights, but the litigation drags out through the courts until the cow wastes away to a skeleton. At the final settlement one farmer is awarded the cow's tail, the other her horns. To the lawyer himself goes the cow as payment for long and faithful service.

AUTO-TRUCK FILM DELIVERY.

Owing to the unsatisfactory express service, exhibitors and exchange men have been seriously inconvenienced in the handling of films between theaters in Connecticut and the distributing offices in New York. There has been lately organized the Interstate Film Delivery Company to transport films on stated routes, leaving New York at 3 a. m. and arriving at the farthest point in the service by 10 o'clock in the morning. The return service startes at 1 a. m. and delivers the films picked up along the way in New York by 9 o'clock in the morning. Two trucks of 1½-ton capacity have begun operating, and with one truck held for emergency it is believed that this service will end the annoyances that have prevailed. The main route runs to New Haven, with a spur from Bridgeport to Waterbury, making all intermediate stops at picture theaters and giving a service in both directions.

TWO UNIVERSALS UNDER WAY.

"The Seekers" is the title of a five-reel feature which Director Otis Turner is preparing to film at Universal City, featuring Flora Parker De Haven with a large cast of well known Universal players in support. The scenes of the story are laid in the Eastern mountain regions and it involves the love of two strong men for a girl. The photoplay was written by Olga Printzlau and the scenario by Turner.

Director Lynn Reynolds has commenced the picturization of "The Deacon's Demise," a five-reel comedy-drama written by Reynolds and featuring Myrtle Gonzalez and Frank MacQuarrie. Others in the cast are Val Paul, Fred Church, Bertram Grassby, George Hernandez, Jack Curtis, Nanine Wright and Lulu Warrenton. The story is written around the proverbial church deacon and is a comedy of high class with many clever situations.

PARAMOUNT-BRAY CARTOON BY EARL HURD.

To the annals of fishing lore, Bobby Bumps, the mischievous youngster, contributed by Earl Hurd to the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons, adds another chapter in the twenty-second release of these drawings, "Bobby Bumps Goes Fishing." When the hero decides on a fishing trip Dad accompanies him, both on pleasure bent. Bobby seats himself at one end of the boat, Dad at the other. The latter's luck is consistently against him, but Bobby's success is so phenomenal that he makes a catch every time he throws his line in. Dad changes places with his son, but having no better results, resumes his original position. Bobby's next catch is so large that Dad is sent headlong into the water. Dad registers such anger that Bobby hastily exits. Starting off in search of adventure, the hero buys a large stuffed fish which he rigs up with a motor attached to a propeller at the fish's tail. Entering the scene where Dad is still fishing the fake fish immediately gets his hook and they exit together. Dan's next stop is at the photograph gallery, where he and his catch pose before the camera. Then he goes home to mother, who listens to his tale, but at once discovers the fraud. Bobby is immediately bribed and exits victoriously.

"PAY DIRT" NEXT KNICKERBOCKER "FIVE."

"Pay Dirt," a drama of the gold fields, is announced for release by Knickerbocker Star Features on the General Film program, June 18. This is the second five-reel feature under the Knickerbocker brand, following "Spellbound," released May 17.

Henry King plays the leading role of a "drifter" from the East, who has staked out a claim that is coveted by Peter Gardner, an "old-timer." Gardner invokes the aid of Dick Weed, a gambler, and the two attempt to cheat the Easterner at cards. He is an inveterate gambler, but the influence of a woman, herself an outcast because of her passion for gambling, helps him to conquer himself.

Marguerite Nichols is again cast as the female lead. This young actress is rapidly making a name for herself through her skillful support of Henry King in his "red blood" roles. Others in the cast are Mollie MacConnell, Daniel Gilfether, Gordon Sackville and Charles Dudley. Henry King, assisted by Reaves Eason, directed the production, which is from the Horkheimer studios.

"THE THREE GODFATHERS" (Bluebird).

When "The Three Godfathers" appeared in the Saturday Evening Post the editor of that publication declared that Peter B. Kyne had written the best story the Post ever printed. The opportunities that the narrative presented for unusual photography and scenes uncommon in moving pictures prompted Bluebird Photoplays to secure the picture rights, and as a result the scenario submitted by Harvey Gates was accepted and E. J. Le Saint was commissioned to direct the production.

With a special car filled with animals and paraphernalia necessary to the proper equipment of the scenes, Mr. Le Saint took a large company to the Mojave desert and there worked four weeks completing the exteriors. Incident to his stay on the desert Mr. Le Saint "caught" an actual sand storm in all its terrifying details, from the time it appeared in the distance until it overwhelmed the immediate scene and then passed onward.

The Bluebird production has other novel features, but the central motive of the story is the main dependence and is in itself unique in pictured narratives. Three desperadoes are called upon to keep the breath of life in the body of a newly born babe, suddenly and unexpectedly thrust upon them when its mother died, alone in the middle of the Mojave desert. The touch of human interest that develops from the sacrifices of these men in transferring the baby to a place of safety is the great element upon which the Bluebird feature is expected to make its appeal to the public. Harry Carey, Frank Lanning and George Berrell are ably equipped to play the roles of the three godfathers with rare artistry.

"THE LIGHT OF DUSK" (Lubin).

The gap that is supposed to separate church and theater and which is lessening as the endeavors of exponents in pulpit and on the stage increase in sincerity has been spanned.

A bridge upon which those advancing from either side may meet on untroubled ground is furnished in "The Light at Dusk," a remarkable story by Anthony P. Kelly, which, under the direction of Edgar Lewis, is being made by the Lubin Company into a feature photoplay destined to make a powerful impression on account of the lesson conveyed.

The introduction of the character of Christ into the warp of a photoplay story requires the delicacy of a master hand, an undertaking that only the spirit of true reverence and obvious intent to serve inspiringly, could save from protest. From the point of view of both church and theater, "The Light at Dusk" in its reverential introduction of the character of Christ bringing healing to exulcerated minds and response to the prayers of the patient poor, must be regarded as a sermon on the screen.

The story itself combines all the elements of a modern drama in a theme of absorbing human interest. But the purpose of the author for which the figure of Christ is projected into the story is to give another exposition of the deathless text on charity, the greatest of all virtues.

It is the story told over again of the rich man who was counseled to sell all that he had and give to the poor, and in "The Light at Dusk" the theme is exploited in a way that must accentuate the tremendous value of the screen, as after all, the pulpit with the largest congregation.

BILLIE BURKE WELCOMED BY EXHIBITORS.

Topheavy business for the summer months is almost unheard of in the motion picture industry, and yet there are a vast hoard of exhibitors in the United States this year who are not worrying over the takings during the hot months. The reason for this lies in the fact that these managers have one and all signed up contracts calling for the showing of Billie Burke in the new George Kleine motion picture novel, "Gloria's Romance," from the pens of Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, at their theaters.

The magic name of Billie Burke has kept open more than one Broadway house during the hottest days of the summer season, when Miss Burke was a star of the speaking stage, and like results are assured for the picture theater managers who have arranged for her appearance on their screens during the same season. In addition to seizing the opportunity of playing Billie Burke during what is ordinarily a dull season these managers jumped at the chance to screen a clean, wholesome story with nothing of the sensational or melodramatic in its entire length of twenty feature chapters. Dainty, fascinating Billie Burke will charm and hold every one who beholds her in the opening installments of the new screen novel, and her romance grows more and more interesting as it progresses, so managers feel their patrons, who witness chapter one of "Gloria's Romance" are certain to flock back to the theater, no matter how hot the night, once they begin to follow the tale.

"OUR PEOPLE" (Essanay).

The trials of the small-town editor usually are pathetic and humorous enough to create a heart interest, regardless of his personality. But make him a young editor in love with the daughter of the town's leading banker, and she his only reporter, and there is the nucleus for a plot of delightfully human phases. Add to this Bryant Washburn as the struggling young editor and the only thing else required to make it ideal is a pretty girl. Gertrude Glover has that part. This three-act Essanay carries a clever théme, which can be enjoyed alike both in large and small cities. For the letter there is a multiplied appeal. There is no attempt to satirize the small town; rather the desire to glorify it. The plot culminates with the young hero getting out the town's first extra edition and frustrating a run on his prospective father-in-law's bank. The old man is then won over and a young editor and his assistant decide to fight for the rights of "our people" together, thereafter.

Scene from "Our People" (Essanay).

KERNEL NUTT SERIES FOR V-L-S-E.

With the completion of the Frank Daniels' "Mr. Jack" series of comedies the V-L-S-E announces another set of ten one-reel comedies, which will treat of the escapades of Kernel Nutt, in the person of Frank Daniels. These single-reel comedy plays will be released at the rate of one each week, the first having been released on May 15.

Each release has a distinct plot all its own, and has no connection with the other plays of the series.

With the favorable comments that the last series brought from exhibitors, the success of the Kernel Nutt series, measured by their present demand, is quite assured.

The first comedy, released May 15, was "Kernel Nutt, the Janitor," followed by "Kernel Nutt Wins a Wife," "Kernel Nutt, the Footman," and "Kernel Nutt and the Hundred Dollar Bill," to be released on May 22 and 29, and June 5, respectively, with six others to follow.

"THE HARE AND THE TORTOISE."

"The Hare and the "Tortoise," produced by William Robert Daly, from the story by William Anthony McGuire, proves that the race is not always to the swift. John Drake can be likened to the tortoise, while his gay brother, Sidney, resembles the hare, which, confident in its own ability, fritters away valuable time.

Released through the General Film Service, on Monday, May 29, "The Hare and the Tortoise" is a multiple-reel drama, which acceptably upholds the new standards for regular service set by the Selig Company. The cast includes: Fritzi Brunette, Harry Mestayer, Edward J. Piel, Harry Lonsdale, Lillian Hayward, Edith Johnson and William Scott. There are a number of spectacular scenes, not the least of which is the interior of a large steel mill, which was turned over to the Selig Company for film dramatic purposes. William Anthony McGuire, the world-famous author and playwright, never wrote a more gripping and exciting plot than that of "The Hare and the Tortoise."

"THE WOMAN IN BLACK," MAY 13.

In the issue of The Moving Picture World dated May 27th the Biograph company's five-reel feature "The Woman in Black" was incorrectly listed as Wednesday, May 31, the release date should have been specified as Wednesday, May 13th. "The Woman in Black" features Lionel Barrymore and is obtainable through the General Film Company.

"REPAID" (American).

In the film adaptation of "Repaid," a two-part "Flying A" story written by Anthony W. Coldewey, directed by Thomas Ricketts, to be released May 22, the strong note is the love of his parents which prompts a complete sacrifice of social and business position. The theme is true in note—as though taken from a chapter in the life of many a boy.

Edward Coxen, Lizette Thorne and George Field are the characters who give life to the story, and their portrayals are excellent. There is not a moment throughout the entire two parts when the heart of the audience does not go out to the youth who is misjudged, and his dream of happiness rudely dispelled by the imaginings of a stern father. The pathos of the scenes with the heart-broken mother (Louise Lester) are wonderfully full of heart appeal and depth of feeling.

"Repaid" is to be released through the Mutual service on May 22.

The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co.

The President, Watterson R. Rothacker, Describes in an Interesting Manner the Great Modern Laboratory and Studio Just Completed by the Company, and Announces Some of the Company's Plans.

THE thousands of requests for information concerning our new laboratory and studio, and the many inquiries relative to our plans for production and our policy have actually swamped my desk and taxed the capacity of our telephone lines. Here is the answer:

The Industrial Moving Picture Company was launched a little more than six years ago and has always been directed along lines definitely purposeful. The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company was named as successor to the Industrial Moving Picture Company to discourage confusion through names made to sound like our's and trade on the prestige we have gained for the word "Industrial." The name combination was also determined, because it is more representative of our increased scope.

We are particularly proud of this organization representing, as it does, the acme of scientific management and general efficiency in moving picture production. We are duly and truly prepared to occupy the ideal of our dreams and it is now ready for occupancy.

Our new building is located on Diversey Parkway, at Ward street—twenty minutes from the center of Chicago by surface line, and fifteen minutes by motor on Chicago's great boulevard chain which passes our doors. We are about a mile from Lincoln Park and the shore of Lake Michigan.

The laboratory and studios adjoin, are operated in combination, and are under one roof. The building proper has 125 feet boulevard frontage and 130 feet depth. We also own the adjoining property which we will fence so as to have an enclosure 50 x 130 feet for garage and storage purposes. We have a total floor space of 19,500 square feet in the laboratory and 6,500 square feet in the studio.

The entire structure is absolutely fireproof and dust-proof. The air is water washed by a special device, and both temperature and humidity are governed automatically. All walls at top and bottom have two inch coves which eliminate crevices where dust might accumulate, and the walls throughout are painted and treated by special process; the floors likewise.

Our general offices, with telephone exchange, service and audit bureaus, are on the second floor with north and east exposure. All of the office partitions are constructed of art metal or plate glass, and all the office furniture is made of steel, with mahogany finish.

We have installed a battery of five enormous International filters, which is located in a special room at the north end of the building, which serves the developing, wash and color rooms, as well as piping pure water to various departments.

Our perforating room is a model of its kind, and we have here provided to operate comfortably sixteen Bell & Howell perforators, with all special attachments. The positive and negative developing rooms are separated and operated independently, for obvious reasons. In all of the dark rooms the Eastman system of indirect lighting has been installed giving us higher efficiency, the employes more comfort, and securing a decided saving in cost of operation. The tanks in the developing rooms have been laid out scientifically so that there is no lost motion.

The wash room, and the tinting and toning rooms adjoin the developing rooms and are arranged and equipped so that the very best results may here be obtained in the very best time.

The dry room, which is really the clearing house, is of magnificent proportions and capable of drying many times the amount of footage our big battery of printers can turn out.

The printing room is on a very elaborate scale, being capable of containing twenty-six printers. Our present equipment is composed of a large battery of Duplex step printers, Bell & Howell printers, and several Pathescope printers for handling twenty-nine millimeter film.

From the dry room the film is transported by dumb waiters to the second floor, where it is received in the inspection and assembling rooms. All of the girls in these rooms use gloves and all of the furniture in these rooms is steel white enameled. Here the film is carefully assembled, inspected, cleaned by Duplex polishing machines, and made ready for screen inspection.

A special room is devoted to title making and a special room to trick photography. Adjoining the offices, and adjacent to the assembling room, is the large art department where drawings for animated cartoons are made.

In addition to the screen inspection rooms for the factory, we have installed a large and beautifully furnished projecting room for customers where two automatic projectors are in service.

After the film has been screen inspected and passed, it is delivered to the shipping department which is conveniently located for the purpose. Here all shipments are checked, boxed, labeled, carefully inspected, and delivered by the electric elevator to the shipping dock.

Throughout the building we have inter-department telephone service, so that the office can talk with any department head with no waste of time.

The studio floor is capable of comfortably and efficiently handling six complete sets at one time. Our lighting equipment offers something decidedly new in studio illumination, and not only secures a maximum of light, but saves a vast amount of time and inconvenience, and does away with all of the confusion incidental to cables being on the floor the time sets are changed. In this studio we have places for pit work and a large swimming tank 20 x 30 feet.

In conjunction with the studio we operate a completely appointed and equipped carpenter shop, paint room, property room and dressing rooms. The large electric elevator serves these various rooms and also is extended to the roof, and the roof is built to carry an extremely heavy life load, so that on the roof an out-door set of immense proportions can be placed. The studio floor is of heavy wood placed upon a solid concrete foundation so that there is absolutely no chance for vibration.

So far as has been possible, we have standardized our equipment throughout and have overlooked not a single opportunity to buy the best, install efficiently, and operate on a scientific basis where there is no waste effort or motion. By doing this we secure the supreme degree of film quality at prices which could not be quoted under ordinary conditions. By maintaining and operating a studio in direct combination with the laboratory, we offer the moving picture trade everything needed in moving picture production.

In closing, I would like to lay great stress upon the fact that we have built, according to advice from the Eastman Kodak Company and the various Underwriters' Laboratories, the largest and most fireproof vault in the world. This vault is of steel concrete construction thoroughly departmentized, with bafflers throughout, and air cushion protection against explosions, and with every department sprinkled. In fact, every department in the building is sprinkled by automatic sprinkling devices which are served by the 18,000 gallon tank on the roof. By virtue of the protection afforded by this vault, we are able to secure insurance against fire and theft on all of our negatives and the negatives of our customers, and it's enormous size enables us to store safely thousands of reels of negative and positive in addition to our raw stock.

Now, in reference to our plans of operation: We still operate the Industrial Moving Picture Company and specialize in moving pictures adapted for industrial exploitation, commercial education, general advertising and publicity, and we still maintain our big department for doing commercial developing and printing for all those who take moving pictures professionally or as amateurs. As a matter of accommodation, we supply Eastman raw stock to our customers, and by reason of the immense stock we always keep on hand, we can make shipment always the same day order is received regardless of quantity.

I am not prepared, just now, to explain in detail the plans we have for this year, other than to say that we will put our new multiple set studio and our entire factory at the disposal of the moving picture trade. We will rent our studio, with entire equipment, at reasonable rates; we will make moving pictures in this studio to order, under contract, and are prepared to put on the biggest feature or the smallest split reel, and give them equal attention. In fact, we are prepared to furnish complete service to any person desiring quality-moving-picture production.

ADVENTURES OF A PIANO.

What can happen to a piano bought on the instalment plan is the subject of a brisk comedy scheduled for release by Vim on June 9. The title, "A Dollar Down," lampoons the sensational "dollar-down-and-dollar-a-week" advertising of some piano firms, and the action centers about the attempts of a lover to get revenge upon his rival, who has bought a piano for the girl on the instalment plan. There isn't much left of the instrument after Pokes and Jabbs get through with it.

ABOUT "THE ANSWER."

Through an error a Thanhouser drama entitled "The Answer" was advertised as being in one reel instead of two. This production is the first release of Emmet Mixx, the popular short-story writer, who has just joined the Thanhouser scenario staff.

NOTES OF THE TRADE

THE remarkable agility of Pauline Frederick, displayed as the dancer in several scenes in "The World's Great Snare," need not surprise anyone. For the Famous Players' star first began her triumphant stage career in musical comedy and has never lost her clever pedal control.

It was announced by the Thanhouser-Mutual studios that Frederick Warde, Shapespearian star, who has been signed for a number of "Thanhouser Classics" to be released within the next eight months through Mutual, will begin work on his first picture within the next ten days. All of the interior work will be done at the New Rochelle studios, the exteriors being photographed in an up-state location recently selected by Ernest Warde, his son, who is to direct the features starring his father.

Phillips Smalley is directing a five-reel society drama entitled "The First Stone," in which Mary McDonald is featured. The story is by Miss Lois Weber, who took her text from the Scriptures and about it has weaved a powerful story. A large cast of players from Universal City including Horace Morgan, the Misses Emerson and Jack Mulhall, are working in this photoplay, many of the scenes of which are to be taken on one of the beautiful ranches in the vicinity of Los Angeles.

John Lorenz, Essanay leading man, appears in "That Sort," a forthcoming five-act photoplay taken from the stage play of Basil McDonald Hastings.

John H. Collins, the director, who is producing "The Flower of No Man's Land," with Viola Dana in the stellar role, began his career as a baseball pitcher. He played with many semi-professional teams in the east and turned down several flattering offers to play professional ball.

Director Henry McRae and his company, including his featured players, Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill, together with L. C. Shumway and Dr. H. G. Stafford, spent most of the week at the race track located at Tia Juana, Mexico, filming scenes for "The Jockey's Triumph," a race-track drama. The story is by Mrs. A. C. Robinson, from which Frank M. Wiltermood prepared the scenario.

Bud Lehman, who plays the part of a frontier postman in "The Quitter," a five-part Metro wonderplay in which Lionel Barrymore is starred, began his professional career as an acrobat with the Adam Forepaugh circus. He is now sixty years old. He broke both legs many years ago in a fall from the top of the tent. After he recovered he went into stock and was on the speaking stage until his recent debut in motion pictures.

"Smiling Billie Mason" is directing and playing the featured lead in the second spisode of "Baseball Bill," a rapid-fire comedy, supported by Miss Peggy Coudray, Victor Potel, Orrin Jackson and others of the Universal's stock company. Mason is using considerable trick photography in this picture.

Jack Mack, famous as a banjoist in Lew Dockstader's minstrels 'way back in the 70's, is now doing special work as an "extra" at the American-Mutual studios. He appears in several of the scenes of "The Overcoat," a Masterpicture De Luxe Edition feature.

Cleo Madison, assisted by Wm. V. Mong as co-director, has commenced the picturization of "Priscilla," a two-reel photoplay written by Harvey Gates of the Universal staff, in which Miss Madison and Mong play the leading roles. In the supporting cast are Charles Gunn and Jack Abbott. Miss Madison has completed the one-reel slum drama "When the Wolf Howls."

Clarence A. Frembers, president of the Photodrama Club of Chicago, has been added to the scenario staff of the American-Mutual studios.

"The Reprisal," a Selig feature film with Fritzi Brunette in the leading role, is in course of production by Director William Robert Daly at the Los Angeles studios.

Earle Williams, the popular Vitagraph star, is still having numerous experiences in the C. N. and A. M. Williamson story which Wally Van has well under way. It will be released in fifteen episodes, one episode a week.

The five-reel mountain drama entitled, "The Silent Battle," featuring J. Warren Kerrigan, is almost completed by Director Jack Conway at Universal City. Playing opposite Kerrigan is Lois Wilson and in the supporting cast are Maude George, Harry Carter and a large number of other Universal City players. Many of the scenes of this film play were made at Pine Hills near the Mexican border and east of San Diego. In addition some wonderful sets were erected on the mammoth stage at University City by Conway for use in this photoplay which promises to add greatly to the reputation of the featured actor.

"The Fable of the Fearsome Feud Between the First Families" is being constructed in two reels by Essanay. The fable is the customary Ade scream multiplied by two. Its production in two reels has allowed for more elaborate sets and the use of more people. It is one of Ade's unrivaled satires on the activities of the ultra rich. Essanay is continuing its regular production of single-reel fables.

Vernon Sniveley, the son of the Los Angeles Chief of Police, is employed as assistant to Director T. N. Heffron, of the Selig Polyscope Company.

"The Fall of Deacon Stillwaters," is the title of a one-reel comedy being filmed by Director Allen Curtis of the Universal Joker company, featuring Gale Henry and William Franey and supported by M. Moranti, C. Conklin, Lillian Peacock, Jane Bernoudy, "Mother" Benson and a number of others. The story is written by A. B. Bishop and has a laugh in each scene.

Continuing to branch out, the Horkheimer Brothers have now added an animated cartoon department to their Long Beach studio. In J. R. Willis and J. Cammerer, they have two well-known artists.

Walter Pritchard, one of the Gaumont-Mutual cameramen attached to the winter studios at Jacksonville, Fla., has been called North by General Manager Bradford to become official cameraman for "Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine released each week in the Mutual service. Pritichard will make his headquarters at the studios in Flusing, L. I.

Through the courtesy of Mack Sennett, director of the Keystone studios, Louella Maxam, leading woman with the Keystone forces, has been given an indefinite leave of absence in order to accompany her husband, William Brunton, on his trip to the Orient with the Signal-Mutual company, where numerous of the big exterior scenes will be made.

Little Zoe Bech is featured in a one-reel comedy drama entitled "The Availing Prayer," which is being produced by Director George Cochrane at Universal City. The story is by Richard Barkert Shelton and prepared for the screen by Calder Johnstone. The little star is supported by Miss Marjorie Ellison and Malcolm Blevins, together with others of the Universal stock company.

After completing the engagement in several Chicago theaters, Richard C. Travers returned to Essanay for a brief stay and then departed on the last leg of his vaudeville tour. The itinerary includes Cleveland, Buffalo, Syracuse, Rochester, Albany, Detroit, Indianapolis, and Omaha. At the conclusion of this booking he will return to the studio and take the lead in several plays with summer settings.

Harry T. Morey, who supported Edna May in "Salvation Joan," is now working in a three-part Broadway Star Feature. Eugene Mullin, who is author of many Vitagraph successes, is supervising the filming of the story.

The part of John Valiant as a child in "The Valiants of Virginia," is in the capable baby hands of "Little Billy Jacobs." He is a veteran in experience, if not in years, and has already made himself at home in the Selig Zoo. He had not been on the grounds ten minutes before he knew all the animals by their first names.

Sherwood Macdonald has taken up the direction of "The Grip of Evil," the new photoplay series which Balboa is producing for Pathe. It consists of fourteen stories, each episode complete in itself. Jackie Saunders, the featured player, enacts a different type of girl in each instalment. In this regard the production promises to be a distinct novelty.

Seven comedies, each with its own star, are constantly at work in the Vogue-Mutual studios in Los Angeles. One single reel comedy is completed every third day.

For "Silks and Satins," the Famous Players built the largest set which has yet been constructed in their 56th street studio—and it was for the smallest star in the company's roster, little Marguerite Clark, who is the star of the production. The scene shows the interior of a huge mediaeval castle.

Director Henry McRae has completed "The Jackey's Triumph," a race track two-reel drama in which the lead was played by Dr. H. G. Stafford with Marie Walcamp opposite, and he is now preparing to film a railroad drama the title of which has not been announced, but it is settled that the leading roles will be played by Miss Walcamp and Lee Hill. This film story contained some very thrilling episodes.

Hughey Mack, Vitagraph's heavyweight comedian, is now appearing in "The Battler," a one-part comedy by Lawrence Semon and C. Graham Baker. Hughey, as a boxer, introduces something entirely new in the "squared circle," when he uses gas bombs in his line of defense. Lawrence Semon, besides being co-author, also directed the action of the story.

Lillian Drew, with whom picture patrons are most acquainted in heavy leads, has another such part in "Secret of the Night," a new Essanay three-act drama. Her last picture was a comedy drama, "A Return to Youth—and Trouble," and she demonstrated her versatility by packing it full of laughs. Sidney Ainsworth and John Lorenz also appear in the new piece.

Virginia Norden, late of the Vitagraph's eastern studio, has joined Balboa. She was specially engaged by the Horkheimer Brothers for dramatic work in a selection of stories being written for her. Miss Norden is statuesque, fine-featured and good to look at. Emotional roles are her particular delight.

"Not by Faith Alone," is the title of a story by Bob Wagner prepared for the screen by Calder Johnstone of the Universal City staff, which is being picturized by Director Lloyd Carleton, featuring Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson. Others in the cast are Alfred E. Morris, H. Skinner and Fred Witting. It is a story of the early days of the Spanish Missions of California and carries throughout a pretty love scene.

Marc MacDermott, now a recognized Vitagrapher, is busily engaged on his first picture to be released by the Vitagraph Company. It is a five-part dramatic story by Louis Joseph Vance and is being filmed by Director William Humphrey as a Blue Ribbon Feature. Naomi Childers, Robert Whitworth and Josephine Earle play important characters in its enactment.

One of the bridges owned by the Pacific Electric Railroad was purchased outright by Director J. McGowan, who is staging the Signal-Mutual five-part feature, "Medicine Bend," and destroyed by an explosion in order to get the proper realism for several of the important scenes.

"The Committee on Credentials," a story by Peter B. Kyne, and prepared for the screen in two reels, is nearly completed by Harry Carey and George Marshall acting as co-directors. Carey plays the lead in this western drama with Olive Fuller Golden opposite. Nearly all of the cowboys of Universal City are working in this film play which is being made with full realism of western scenes.

"Flames of Vengeance," second of the three-part Gaumont-Mutual feature releases, will go to the public early in June. Gertrude Robinson and Sydney Mason are the stars and in their support appear John Reinhard, Iva Shepard, John Mackin, Albert Macklin and James Levering. One of the big scenes in this production comes with the escape of the hero and heroine from a burning building. Another depicts Miss Robinson clinging to the top of a limousine while the car is speeding along at a terriffic rate.

Frank Daniels, the popular Vitagraph comedian, is working under the direction of C. Jay Williams in a one-part comedy which comes from the pen of Mark Swan. The story gives the famous actor an opportunity to displaying the peculiar mannerisms which have won him many friends both on the legitimate stage and the photoplays.

Director Wallace Beery has completed the first episode of "Timothy Dobbs," in which the leading role is played by Carter de Haven, and is now working on the filming of the second episode. Viola Smith plays opposite De Haven, while others in the cast are Helen Leslie, Jessie Arnold and Bertram Grassby.

Henry B. Walthall, leading man with Essanay, is the most popular photoplayer in Ottawa, Can., according to a poll of the city taken by the Ottawa Evening Journal. This is the second contest he has won within the last few weeks, having captured the prize in Australia as the greatest motion picture star.

A great cast of players has been gathered together in "The Two Orphans," the great play of Kate Claxton, filmed by the Selig Polyscope Company. "The Two Orphans" will be released in regular General Film Company service. The cast includes: Kathlyn Williams, Winnifred Greenwood, Myrtle Stedman, T. J. Carrigan, Charles Clary and other stars. Misses Williams and Greenwood assume the role of the Two Orphans. The date for the release is Monday, June 12.

While waiting for Director Stewart Paton to continue at Universal City a submarine feature on which he has been working in the East, Allen Holubar will direct a one-reel society drama, entitled "Any Youth," in which he will play the lead with Dorothy Phillips opposite. The photography is largely allegorical, with a number of special photographic effects. It is the story of a youth who eventually finds his better self for the love of a girl.

Anna Little, famous for her many daring feats of horsemanship in Flying "A" Mutual feature releases, casts aside her cow-girl raiment in "Jack," a forthcoming Mustang-Mutual drama for that of an Eastern society girl.

On his return from New York last week, H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of the Balboa Company, announced the appointment of William Stoermer as director-general of the Long Beach studio. He will have supervision over all productions. Having had extensive stage and screen experience in the putting on of plays, Mr. Stoermer is an important addition to the Balboa forces.

Director Jay Hunt has taken a company of Universal City players to Eureka, in the northern part of California, to film two, and perhaps three, lumber camp and mountain photoplays. The first one to be produced is entitled "The Trail of Honor." Lucille Younge will play the leading role in at least two of the film stories and will be supported by Jack Holt and a number of others of the Universal City stock company. Hunt will be away several weeks.

Edith Story and Antonio Moreno will soon be seen in a five-part Mexican story. Miss Storey plays the part of a dancer and Mr. Moreno (her lover) that of a Mexican gentleman. Besides producing the picture, George D. Baker also conceived the plot. Mr. Baker selected an all-star cast to support the popular Vitagraph pair.

Cleo Madison and William V. Mong are filming a two-reel comedy drama, entitled "Priscilla," written by Harvey Gates of the Universal City staff. Miss Madison plays the title role, with Charles Gunn opposite. Others in the cast are Mrs. Bertram Grassby, Ray Hanford, Wadsworth Harris and Frank McQuarrie. While the story is written as a comedy, it has a heart interest theme.

Director Rube Miller, who guides the energies of Vogue comedians and comediennes, has returned to his duties at the Vogue studio, after a severe attack of blood poisoning which resulted from his stepping on a rusty nail.

Director Jacques Jaccard is not only filming a multiple-reel underworld drama, entitled "The Viewpoint," but is also supervising the production of a Western two-reel photoplay. Jaccard wrote the underworld photoplay in which the featured lead is played by G. Raymond Nye, with Mina Cunard opposite. Important parts in the cast are taken by Jessie Arnold, Helen Wright and William Quinn. Jaccard has been working day and night on this film story and declares it is one of the best he has attempted at Universal City.

Florence La Badie will make her initial appearance as a star of the new Thanhouser Classics, to be released through the Mutual in "The Fugitive." It will be released in five acts. Miss La Badie will be supported by George Marlo and a notable company of players, several of whom have been especially engaged for the Classics in which Miss La Badie is to be starred. Her second Classic will be released under the title of "Woman, Saint and Devil." It will be in five reels.

Director "Smiling" Billie Mason is making the third reel of his "Baseball Bill" serial at Universal City. These are being released in one reel and, as the title would indicate, surround a baseball player who has plenty of action and many laughable situations. Mason not only directs, but is playing the featured lead himself, and, in addition, supervising some of the clever photography.

Red-blooded romance, adventure, financial and political intrigue, land grabs and the expose of crooked real estate transactions prevail throughout "The Reclamations," a five-act American-Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, starring Winnifred Greenwood and Franklin Ritchie. It was directed by Edward Sloman.

Sunday Films in Boston

Present Method of Designating Special Sabbath Pictures Stands—Attempt to Discover a Better Way Fails—Clerk Macer Says Authorities Will Have to Depend Largely on the Honesty of Exhibitors.

By William M. Flynn, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, MASS.—Chief John H. Plunkett of the Massachusetts District Police, First Clerk Frederick W. Macer and Officer Harry Atkinson of the film inspection department of the district police have given up hope of ever finding a way of designating what films have been released for Sunday use in Massachusetts other than the one which exists at present. Chief Plunkett and his assistants held a conference with the local exchange managers on this question several weeks ago at which time several new methods of distinguishing Sunday films were suggested, but for every suggestion there were five objections with the result that nothing was accomplished.

In an interview with the writer this week Clerk Macer admitted the hopelessness of the situation from the standpoint of his department and declared they would have to depend on the honesty of the moving picture men not to run films on Sunday unless they had received the official sanction of the state police.

A NEW COUPON BILL.

Exhibitors Fear Cavanagh Measure May Stop Lucky Contests.

Boston, Mass.—Several moving picture exhibitors in this territory are wondering what effect the Cavanagh anti-trading stamp bill, which is now before the Massachusetts legislature, will have on the moving picture business in Massachusetts in case the bill is enacted into law. The bill as it stands at present prohibits the use of distribution of trading stamps, coupons or similar devices as premiums, and it is over the meaning of the word "coupons" that the exhibitors are ill at ease.

It is expected that if this becomes a law it will put a stop to the lucky contests and county fairs that exhibitors in various parts of the Commonwealth have made weekly features in their playhouses. This is not the intention of the proponents of the bill, but whether it is or not, the fact remains that many persons believe it will have a serious effect on this phase of the moving picture industry and the progress of the bill is being closely watched. In many of the smaller and poorer communities the county fairs and lucky contests have been first-class box office attractions, and if these assets are taken away from them many exhibitors will suffer a dent in their receipts.

JOHN W. GORMAN DIES.

Well-Known President of Local Amusement Co. Succumbs to Operation.

Boston, Mass.—John W. Gorman, president of the J. W. Gorman Amusement Company, with offices in the Colonial building in Boston, died last week at the Brooks hospital in Brookline, Mass., following an operation for stomach trouble. Mr. Gorman had been in ill health for some time. He went South during the winter and on his return to Boston was apparently feeling well. An old malady came back on him, however, and an operation was performed from which he never recovered.

Mr. Gorman had been prominently identified with many moving picture and other amusement enterprises in New England and other parts of the country for a great many years. Practically his entire life was spent in promoting amusement ventures, and for the most part he was successful. He was born in Foxboro, Mass., 61 years ago and received his early education in that town. He came to Boston while still a young man and was a pioneer in the summer park amusement plan in which he featured moving pictures. Mr. Gorman grasped the opportunities of the moving picture field at an early date and to this is attributed much of his success as a promoter.

Changes in World Film Staff.

Boston, Mass.—The new Brady-Made World service is meeting with much success, according to Frank J. Grady, New England manager of the World Film Corporation. Grady says several of the leading picture houses of New England are booking this service and are pleased with the results. Thomas F. Murphy, former manager of the Boston branch of Beekman's Tourist Agency, has joined the local World road staff and will travel Massachusetts. Miss Loretta Stein of the local World office has severed her connection with that company and is now the confidential secretary to the president of one of the largest leather houses in the United States, with a home office in Boston. Her place is being filled by Mr. Edward J. Saunders, Jr., an enterprising young man of whom much is expected.

Park Theater Manager Believes in Advertising.

Boston, Mass.—Thomas Soriero, the hustling manager of the Park theater, is showing the other exhibitors in this territory something in the line of advertising and is getting results for his energy. His publicity campaign to put over "The Reapers," a Word release with John Mason, has made a few people sit up and take notice. Soriero is a firm believer in advertising and his success with the Park theater in no small measure is due to the fact that he persists in telling the people in one way or another what he has got.

MAINE EXCHANGE MAN DROWNS

George H. Newhall of Bangor General Film Dies on Fishing Trip.

By John P. Flanagan, Special Correspondent, 147 Parkview Ave., Bangor, Me.

BANGOR, ME.—Maine moving picture exhibitors were shocked beyond expression at the death by drowning on Wednesday morning, May 17, of George H. Newhall, Maine manager of the General Film Co., at Big Houston Pond, Katahdin Iron Works, where he was on a two days' fishing trip with Charles M. Stern, manager of the New England Universal Film exchange at Bangor. Mr. Newhall was known to all the exhibitors in the Pine Tree state and he was thoroughly well liked for his fine qualities.

George H. Newhall.

Mr. Newhall had left camp early in the morning with the guide. At 6 o'clock he ventured out on the pond alone in a canoe. A sudden gust of wind and the rough water capsized the frail craft and in an instant he was struggling for his life in the pond. No one was around at the time of the accident and he soon went under.

The deceased was the first manager of a moving picture exchange in Bangor and thus practically introduced the wholesale film business to this thriving eastern Maine city, which has now grown to such proportions that 90 per cent. of the film exchange business in Maine is now transacted here. He was the first manager of the General Film Co. exchange opened here in 1913. He was succeeded by A. L. Ehrgott, then returning to the Boston office of the General. A few months ago he succeeded Mr. Ehrgott as manager of the Bangor office.

Edward J. Farrell, New England manager of the General Film Company; Frank J. Grady, New England manager of the World Film Company; Joseph Mack and a host of other exchange men and exhibitors from Boston and other parts of New England attended the funeral, while floral tributes were sent by scores of others who were unable to be present. A body of Elks was also present at the services.

Mr. Newhall was a prince and he will be mourned sincerely by all who knew him. The writer can testify to his genial and friendly qualities. The World correspondent was talking with Mr. Newhall so recently that about one-half of the other news items from Maine in the World this week were obtained during a conversation with Mr. Newhall, who always gave your correspondent the glad hand and furnished all the news he could possibly think of. He made good in the film business. Friends will extend sympathy to Mrs. Newhall, who is almost prostrated by the calamity.

New Theater in Keegan.

Keegan, Me.—Frank L. Watson of Keegan is using General Film service in his new theater, which has not been named as yet. Mr. Watson is going to conduct a contest among the school children to name his theater, giving $5 prize to child who selects best name.

Censorship Authority

In Newark, N. J., Vice-Chancellor Howell Forbids Police Interference With Showing of Film—Says All Police Can Legally Do Is to Bring Cases of Wrongdoing to the Grand Jury and in Proper Form.

By Jacob J. Kalter, Special Correspondent, 51 Strand Theater Bldg., Newark, N. J.

NEWARK, N. J.—Vice-Chancellor Howell, recently issued an order restraining Chief of Police Long from interfering with the production of the photoplay, "Damaged Goods." The order was issued in advance as the film is scheduled to be shown during the week of May 22 at the Orpheum theater, 383 Washington street. The film is shown under the direction of Emanuel A. Schiller, of Bayonne, whom Chief Long told he would arrest him if he attempted to run the picture in this city.

The vice-chancellor in granting the order stated that the police have no right and no authority to interfere with the production of any dramas or photoplays. The vice-chancellor is quite emphatic on this point of the right of the police to act as censors. He said that the police could only bring an alleged objectionable production to the grand jury, and that in due order. When informed of the chief's official veto of the play, the vice-chancellor said: "He has no authority whatever in the premises—not even the semblance of authority. The right of censorship is not vested in the chief of police."

Chief Long said that he would not interfere with the film in advance, but if after the exhibition it proved objectionable, the police would arrest the producer on the charge of keeping a disorderly house. He asserted that his information in regard to the play was that it was morally objectionable to the public.

The only other instance of a restraining order being given in advance of the presentation of the play was in the case of "The Birth of a Nation." Here also the court held that the police could not take legal action before the presentation of the picture.

Meisel Opens Office.

Newark, N. J.—Irving Meisel, formerly roadman with the Pathe exchange, 6-8 Mechanic street, has opened offices at the Strand theater building with Greene's Features. Mr. Meisel has just closed negotiations with several firms whereby he is able to supply service. The reports as to business indicate a successful Newark branch.

Coquet at Regent.

Kearny, N. J.—Eugene E. Coquet, former manager of the Garden theater, Passaic, N. J., has assumed a like position at the Regent theater, Kearny avenue, opposite the Town Hall. The Regent is a 1,600-seat house, and one of the finest-equipped houses in the state. The playhouse is owned by the Kearny Amusement Company, of which Max Gold is president; Harry Hecht, secretary, and Benjamin Zinn, treasurer. A technical description and write-up of the house will appear in an early number of this paper.

M., at the Parkway theater, 3-9 West North avenue, the program included "Molly Make Believe," with Marguerite Clark in the lead and Burton Holmes's travel pictures. The Parents' League usually calls attention to these matinees through their column which is published in the Evening Sun.

VIRGINIA NEWS LETTER.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth St., N. E. Washington, D. C.

Better Prices at the Crossman.

NORFOLK, Va.—The Crossman theater, on Granby street, located near the American and Strand theaters, has become a ten-cent house, showing V-L-S-E. and Bluebird features. Larry Finley, owner of the Crossman, is the latest convert to the better-prices, better-pictures creed, and the five-cent theater in Virginia is fast becoming a thing of the past.

Rex Theater of St. Petersburg, Fla., Sold.

St. Petersburg, Fla.—The Carroll Amusement Company has pleasure in announcing the acquisition, by purchase, of the Rex theater of St. Petersburg, Fla. There will be no change in admission price, the motto being "5c—ALWAYS—5c."

The local management will be under the direction of Mr. H. L. Gambate, who is experienced in conducting successful moving picture houses.

Ghent Theater Is Dark Again.

Norfolk, Va.—The Ghent theater here is again dark and Mr. Brennan, its former manager, is back on the road as a traveling representative for the Universal, a position he held prior to trying out his hand as an exhibitor. The exhibitors along the line will be glad to have him visit them again.

Casino Ready to Open for Summer.

Ocean View, Va.—The Casino reopens for the summer season on or about Decoration Day having been put in fine shape for the accommodation of the crowds of visitors expected thereafter. It is to be under the management of L... Spain who was formerly in charge of the Wonderland theater, in Norfolk, Va. The Casino is operated by Otto Wells, who controls the entire Ocean View amusement park.

C. A. Somma Buys Hippodrome Theater.

Richmond, Va.—Charles A. Somma, of the Dixie theater, the home of refined colored vaudeville and first run pictures, has assumed the management of the Hippodrome theater, having acquired it from Mrs. A. E. Thorp, the pioneer woman exhibitor of this section of the country, on May 15. Mr. Somma, in announcing the change in management, states that the policy of both houses will continue as in the past.

The Boston to Be Enlarged.

Roanoke, Va.—The Boston, the only colored theater here, now having a seating capacity of three hundred and fifty, is soon to be enlarged to a size that will give, it is reported, a seating capacity of approximately one thousand. This house is owned by A. Andrews and is managed by S. Andrews, they catering to the colored population of Roanoke.

Buys Pastime to Close It.

Marion, Va.—The Pastime theater has been acquired by C. B. Eccles, who operates the Marion, and has been closed up. The Pastime was the first theater in the field here, but it has been supplanted by the Marion, a new and very attractive one. The town is not large enough to support two such theaters and one had to go.

More Pictures for Wytheville.

Wytheville, Va.—The Opera House has just installed a motion picture projection machine and under the management of C. E. Jennings is showing feature films twice weekly, doing quite a business.

The Bijou theater here, formerly strictly a program house, is also showing features and is uniformly successful.

Academy Sold and Closed.

Suffolk, Va.—The Academy, formerly operated by Matrix & Spense, has been acquired by Mr. Everhart, who operates the Fotosho here, and has been closed. The former owners still control the Virginia, the show house, but they do not now run photoplays. Mr. Everhart has put on an all-feature program and is reporting a steadily improving business. The Fotosho has a seating capacity of about seven hundred.

Will Build in Lawrenceville, Va.

Lawrenceville, Va.—This place is soon to have a new and modern motion picture theater as a result of a fire in the operating room of the Opera House during which the five reel subject "The Sins of the Mothers," V-L-S-E., and a single reel Universal was destroyed. The owners of the building, which also houses a bank, refuse to allow the exhibition of motion pictures there in the future. E. K. Fox, who has been operating in the Opera House and who also has the Opera House at Snow Hill, Va., is fixing up a tent to use during the summer. He expects to have his new house ready early in the fall.

Will White Managing Local Theater.

Abingdon, Va.—Will White, a man who has had many years of experience in the motion picture business, has assumed the management of the Opera House in this place. E. A. Hines is the proprietor of this enterprise and he states that since the new manager has gotten on the job his business has increased in a most satisfactory manner. Mr. White is an all around man; he can operate a projection machine, has a good knowledge of electricity, and can play the piano for the pictures if his services along that line are required.

Fire in Crowded Hall Show.

Norfolk, Va.—More than a score of negroes were killed, and a like number very seriously injured in a fire in a crowded hall in Wallaceton, where they were witnessing a motion picture exhibition. The building was used by the employees of the Norva Land & Lumber Company for entertainments and lodge meetings. The assembly hall was quite small and could only accommodate about eighty people when crowded together. James Duffy, who was manager of the show, was fatally injured. The show was scarcely under way when there was a flash of flame, supposed to have followed an explosion of the gasoline tank that supplied the light for the building.

Jake Wells Gets "Gloria's Romance" Rights.

Richmond, Va.—Jake Wells has acquired the exclusive right for the showing in the State of Virginia of the twenty-part serial "Gloria's Romance," starring Billie Burke. This serial has created a great deal of interest throughout the State. Mr. Wells here, and Otto Wells, in Norfolk, have been besieged with mail and verbal requests for information as to when the first installment will be made in the respective cities. Both of these gentlemen predict an exceptionally heavy run for the serial.

Allentown's Lyceum Burns

Leading Picture Theater in Allentown, Pa., a Total Loss from Fire—Cause of Conflagration Unknown—Is the Second in Recent Weeks—House Was Leased by Frank Emmet—Was Insured.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

ALLENTOWN, PA.—The Lyceum theater, Allentown's leading moving picture theater, was recently totally destroyed in a conflagration which threatened to demolish the entire northern business section of that place. The blaze was first discovered late Saturday night, May 13, and continued to rage with unabated fury until Sunday morning, despite heroic efforts upon the part of the fire department. Due to high winds and other adverse conditions it was thought that the surrounding business establishments would surely become ignited and efforts were made to save articles of value contained in adjoining properties. However, the blaze was mostly confined to the theater and at midnight the south wall and roof of the stage fell with a crash, sending blazing embers and sparks high into the air. A few minutes later the north wall crashed in and the entire building was a mass of wreckage. This is the second time within recent weeks that the Lyceum theater, owned by Messrs. Channock and Sanderowitz and leased by Frank Emmet, was threatened by flames, but in the previous instance the fire was extinguished before any serious damage was accomplished. Mr. Emmet is at a loss to explain the origin of the blaze, claiming that everything inflammable had been removed from the booth before closing the theater. The entire loss is covered by insurance.

Imperial Theater Sold.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Imperial theater, located on the east side of 60th street, 119 feet south of Walnut street, has been conveyed by Meyer Magill to Robert Bloomgarden, subject to a mortgage of $72,500. The property is assessed at $70,000.

It may be of interest to members of the moving picture industry in Philadelphia to know that Harry Hirschfield, formerly trading as the Philadelphia Moving Picture Supply Company, has been discharged as an involuntary bankrupt.

Are They Going to Have the Picnic?

Philadelphia, Pa.—Numerous inquiries have recently been circulated among the industry in Philadelphia as to whether or no the Philadelphia Exhibitors' League are going to conduct an excursion to the shore this summer. As there have been no definite announcements concerning this trip and as the members of the League have been exceedingly inactive of recent date, any suggestions made along this line will be heartily welcomed. It has long been rumored that the League has disbanded, but officers of the organization upon being approached will neither confirm nor deny the rumor. It has been suggested that the Moving Picture Operators' Local No. 307 take up the excursion and become active along this line. Success is assured as many Philadelphians look forward to the excursion with pleasure.

F. G. Meyers Visits Philadelphia.

West Chester, Pa.—F. G. Meyers, proprietor of the Opera House theater, West Chester, Pa., was numbered among the recent visitors to this city and spent considerable time in the vicinity of "Film Row." Before departing for other regions he stopped at the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street, and purchased considerable new equipment.

Fine New Theater for Reading.

Reading, Pa.—The May building record for Reading received a considerable boost when the permit for the new Paramount moving picture theater, on Penn street, a few doors west of Seventh street, was announced. The new structure will cost in the neighborhood of $60,000 and will be one of the most modern and high class theaters in that section of Pennsylvania.

C. A. Baker Prospers.

Catawissa, Pa.—C. A. Baker, proprietor of the Opera House theater, Catawissa, Pa., announces that he had experienced a record volume of patronage of recent date and declares that he is looking forward to one of the best summer seasons in the history of the business. He has recently purchased considerable new equipment from the Calehuff Supply Company, including a new 6B projecting machine.

West Philadelphia, Pa.—Manager Reis, who has lately assumed his duties as director of the Dreamland theater, 36th street and Haverford avenue, West Philadelphia, reports having experienced a most satisfactory volume of business. Mr. Reis has made many improvements to the theater, including the installation of several No. 6A projecting machines.

Time for Summer Films

Pittsburgh's Grand Opera House Will Keep Bright Through Warm Season With High-Class Feature Pictures—This House Is Owned by the Harry Davis Enterprise Company, and Plays Stock in Winter.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The Grand Opera House, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, one of the theaters of the Harry Davis Enterprise Company, inaugurated its summer season of high-class motion pictures in an auspicious manner on May 22. This playhouse is one of the largest and finest in the city and during the past year has been the home of the Harry Davis stock company. The program of pictures has been arranged by W. F. Mason, manager of the pictures department of the Davis Enterprises, and promises to be the most attractive and portentous ever shown at the Grand. The first attraction was the World production, "Sudden Riches." This is followed by the Triangle play, "A Child of the Paris Streets," and Metro's "A Million a Minute."

Greensburg's Lyric Coming Along.

Greensburg, Pa.—M. Manos, proprietor of the Lyric theater, Greensburg, Pa., reports rapid progress on the erection of his large and modern photoplay theater in the central part of the town. The cost of the new theater will be in excess of $50,000, and nothing is being spared to make it one of the handsomest in this section of the state. The building is of fireproof construction, while the equipment throughout is to be of the most up-to-date type. It is planned to have the new house ready for opening about July 1. Mr. Manos recently underwent an operation for appendicitis, and his many friends in the trade are glad to know of his speedy recovery. He made a business trip to Pittsburgh several days ago.

The Movie Men in New Quarters.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Movie Men's Association, a social and beneficial club organized about a year ago, formally opened its handsome headquarters on the second floor at Diamond and Market street, on Wednesday evening, May 17. The new association was until recently composed mainly of operators and other workers connected with the film industry, but its scope has been broadened to include all branches of the trade. There are about four hundred members, including many exchange men and exhibitors of the Western Pennsylvania territory. F. J. McGinnis is president and John Richardson is secretary and treasurer. The attendance at the house-warming numbered between five and six hundred and the affair proved most auspicious for the future of the association. Following a dinner, there was a program of music and other entertainment by professional talent, a very enjoyable evening being spent.

J. W. Jackson Buys Theater.

Braddock, Pa.—The American theater, 1616 Braddock avenue, Braddock, Pa., formerly owned by J. A. Brown and managed by S. A. Gilbert, has been purchased by J. W. Jackson, formerly of East Liverpool, O. The American now has a seating capacity of only 300, but Mr. Jackson is completing plans for remodeling and enlarging it considerably, the alteration to be finished before July 1.

Eddie Balson Takes Over Cameraphone.

Sharpsburg, Pa.—The Cameraphone theater, Sharpsburg, Pa., has been taken over recently by Eddie Balson, a well-known business man and exhibitor of Braddock, Pa. Mr. Balson formerly conducted the Family theater at that place. He contemplates making a number of improvements in the Cameraphone.

Cox's Theater Improved.

Mt. Pleasant, Pa.—Cox's theater, Mt. Pleasant, Pa., has undergone a number of extensive improvements recently, and Manager J. B. Cox reports a gratifying increase in business as a result of the changes that have been made. The capacity was increased greatly by the installation of bleacher-style seats. Both exterior and interior of the theater were beautifully re-decorated.

New Company in Princeton, W. Va.

Princeton, W. Va.—The Royal Amusement Company, of Princeton, W. Va., has been granted a state charter of incorporation to operate moving picture theaters and other places of amusement. The authorized capital stock is $5,000. The incorporators are as follows: L. R. Taylor, A. M. Trangott, W. C. Pierce, W. H. Wallingford and W. S. Mahood, all of Princeton.

Majestic More Attractive.

Charleroi, Pa.—The Majestic theater, Charlerio, Pa., was improved during the past few weeks by Manager W. S. Sweeney who has added greatly to the comfort and attractiveness of his house. Among other changes a new ventilating system has been installed, making the Majestic one of the coolest and best-ventilated theaters in this section.

Feature Films at the Grand.

Indiana, Pa.—The Grand theater, Indiana, Pa., has recently inaugurated the showing of high-class feature pictures, which has enabled the house to boost both admission price and attendance. Beside the Triangle plays, just booked, the Grand program includes Paramount for two days a week and V-L-S-E for one day. Indiana is said to be the only town with a population under 10,000 showing Triangle features.

Paragon Features Moves.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Paragon Features Service, formerly located at 113 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, has removed to new and larger quarters at 111 Ninth street. Manager J. L. Fay reports rapidly increasing business, which necessitated more ample office space.

BUFFALO NEWS LETTER.

By Joseph A. McGuire, Special Correspondent, 611 Erie County Bank Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

Jerome Wilson, Road Man.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Jerome Wilson is well known among the exhibitors of New York state and north western Pennsylvania. He covers this extensive territory as road representative for the Buffalo branch of the Mutual Film. A picture of Mr. Wilson appears herewith. He is a persistent film salesman and digs up many new contracts for the Mutual. He has been with that company for the past five months. He represented the Essemar Film Co. of Buffalo for one year. For a long time he was road man for Sawyer, Inc., and later for the Metro Co. In booking Mutual contracts he attributes much of his success to the co-operation he receives from G. H. Christoffers, manager of the Buffalo exchange of that company.

Jerome Wilson.

"The entire Mutual program is popular with the exhibitors of my territory," said Mr. Wilson. "Of course the Chaplin pictures are going big."

Springfield, O.—The Sun Amusement Co., of this city, controlled by Gus Sun, and operating the New Sun and the Columbia theaters, has announced that it will enlarge both houses during the quiet summer season, practically rebuilding them, and greatly increasing their capacity and their facilities for the comfort and convenience of their patrons. Work will be handled on one building at a time, so that the other may be reserved for engagements, if necessary. The Columbia, which is now one of the finest picture houses in the city, will be given a seating capacity of 2,000, and work upon it will be started at once.

Arrested at Midnight

Cincinnati Film Man, Among Leading Exhibitors in Ohio, Arrested on Charge of Disobeying Censor's Elimination Orders on Fox Picture—Reformer Waited Till Middle of the Night and Took I. Libson from His Bed.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 First National Bank Bldg., Cincinnati Correspondent.

CINCINNATI, O.—I. Libson, one of the most prominent moving picture men in Cincinnati, and active manager of the Strand, the Family, the Walnut and other houses here and elsewhere, was a victim of the overheated zeal of self-styled reformers a short time ago, when he was literally taken from his bed at midnight and placed under arrest on warrants charging him with exhibiting pictures without eliminations ordered by the Ohio Board of Censors. The warrants were sworn to by a Cincinnati minister, who claims to have the backing of the churches, and he secured the arrest at the same time of A. M. Muller, manager of the Fox Film Corporation. The picture objected to was "The Eternal Sapho."

Mr. Libson was extremely indignant at the treatment to which he was subjected, declaring that he had no information to the effect that the film contained matter ordered eliminated, and pointing out that it was odd that the ministerial censor should wait until midnight of the last day of the picture's run to make any objection. He cited the high character of the houses with which he is connected, in proof of his desire to handle high-grade films only.

According to Mr. Muller, the charge that eliminations ordered were not made is without foundation. A representative of the attorney general's office was in Cincinnati to handle the cases, and the matter has excited much interest, especially among exhibitors, who are wondering just how they are to protect themselves from midnight arrests on similar charges, inasmuch as they have no means of knowing whether eliminations ordered have been made in films furnished to them.

THEATER MASHER PUNISHED.

Annoyer of Girl Gets Three Months and a Heavy Fine.

Cincinnati, O.—Exhibitors who have had called to their attention instances of attempted improper conduct on the part of men in picture houses were delighted last week at the action of the Municipal Court in the case of an old man charged with attempting to attack an eleven-year-old girl in a local theater. He had been before the court a year ago on a similar charge, and, recalling this fact, the court imposed a fine of $100 and costs and a jail sentence of three months. Exhibitors have frequently declared that if severe sentences were imposed on such offenders it would be no difficult matter to deal with those who attempt to take advantage of the gloom of a picture theater, and that they are more than willing to give the needed co-operation for the protection of their patrons.

STRAND THEATER IN DANGER.

Blasting for Excavation Nearby Causes Crowded Restaurant to Collapse.

Akron, O.—That the Strand theater might have been the victim of a disaster of sinister proportions is indicated by the collapse of a restaurant on the other side of a building excavation adjoining the theater. The blasting done during the work of excavation gave some alarm to the management and to patrons of the house, but no serious damage was done; but on May 15, on another side of the excavation, immediately after several consecutive blasts, a crowded restaurant collapsed, killing nine people and injuring a number of others. An inquiry is in process to fix the exact responsibility for the tragedy, and to determine whether more stringent regulations for the government of work of that nature may not be necessary for the protection of the public. It is a warning to managers in like danger to be watchful.

CLEVELAND NEWS LETTER.

Exhibitors Will Help Babies' Dispensary.

LEVELAND, O.—Charles H. Weston, director general of the Reserve Photoplays Company, is busy "taking" pictures depicting the activities of the Babies' Dispensary and Hospital on a film to be shown by the Cleveland exhibitors in furtherance of a campaign to raise funds for the institution.

The pictures probably will be shown early in June in more than 150 houses in Cleveland and vicinity. Mr. Weston has written a scenario to make the pictures attractive and Johnny Ray of the Reserve Company has donated his service to inject a bit of comedy into the action.

The Cleveland exhibitors agreed to devote their time to pushing the campaign, after a conference with trustees and directors of the hospital, which cares for the babies of parents too poor to pay for medical services.

George Ridgewell Signs With Sunbeam.

Cleveland, O.—Wilbur Dunham, president of the new Sunbeam Motion Picture Corporation, has just announced that George Ridgewell, New York scenario editor and studio director, has signed a contract with the Sunbeam Company. Mr. Ridgewell will be a director in the corporation and will have charge of the studios just leased at Fort Lee, N. J.

Censors Held "Peg o' the Ring."

Cleveland, O.—The Universal's circus serial, "Peg O' the Ring," has been held up by the Ohio Censor Board and other pictures were substituted in several Cleveland houses where the film was to have been shown the week of May 15.

New Midland Film Directors.

Cleveland, O.—Stockholders of the Midland Film Manufacturing Corporation, a local company just organized, elected directors recently. They are: George W. Scribner, president of the Scribner-Loehr Company; Thomas H. Nash, sales manager of the Cleveland Provision Company; George C. Stoneman, of the Stoneman Hardware Company; J. W. Wilson, manager of the Prudential Life Insurance Company; P. Epstein, clothing merchant, and W. T. Findley, American Can Company. James A. Fitzgerald is manager for productions for the new concern.

Manager Mullen Makes Changes.

Cleveland, O.—The offices of the Mutual Film Company have just been remodeled and new furniture and equipment installed. The work was done under the direction of J. M. Mullen, new manager of the Cleveland office. The sales office has been moved to the Prospect avenue entrance of the plant.

New Theater in Euclid Avenue.

Cleveland, O.—Real estate men are negotiating for the lease of a part of the building at East 18th street and Euclid avenue, to be remodeled for a motion picture theater to seat 300 persons.

Will Help Child Workers

Indiana Exhibitors Will Boost Child Labor Measures Now Before National Congress—Officials of State League and Indianapolis Association Make Decision After Conference on Matter.

Special to the Moving Picture World from the Indiana Trade News Service.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—Indiana moving picture theater owners are to take a hand in obtaining the passage in Congress of laws, now pending, pertaining to child labor. This conclusion followed a conference between Miss Kate Davis t Cleveland, president of the International People's Aid Association; Frank J. Rembusch and Dr. J. M. Rhoades, president and secretary of the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and Ike Beitman, president of the Indianapolis Motion Picture Association. The moving picture men will throw slides on their screens asking mothers and fathers to communicate with their representatives in Congress.

PRAISES INDIANA EXHIBITORS.

State Fire Marshal Has No Trouble with Picture Theaters.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The state fire marshal has issued a bulletin calling attention to the case with which his office has protected the patrons of the moving picture theaters of the state. In the report he says it has been necessary for him only to call the attention of theater owners to dangerous spots in their theaters and that they readily and willingly make such repairs or improvements as are necessary to provide safety for heir patrons. The moving picture men of the state realize that adequate protection is essential for the patrons of the theaters, if the patronage is to be maintained. The report is otherwise complimentary to the moving picture men and shows them to be alive and up-to-the-minute owners.

Mossman Brothers Buy the Isis.

Kokomo, Ind.—The Isis, Kokomo's largest moving picture heater, has been purchased by R. K. Mossman and H. F. Mossman, experienced theater owners, from Cecil and James Wells. The theater has been operated on a five-cent basis, but the Mossman Brothers immediately increased the price, together with an increase in the number of feature films shown and since the change in management the house has been showing to turnaway houses.

Veedersburg Is on the Map.

Veedersburg, Ind.—Veedersburg is "tickled to death" because one of its beauties Bernice McCord, has been selected by the World-Equitable beauty and brains contest judges as a representative of her district in the elimination trials. The contest, has caused much excitment in Veedersburg, because it has been one of the things which helped to put the town on the map.

Program for Children Succeeds.

Brazil, Ind.—The Paramount program for children, shown at the Colonial, was a success, and it is likely to be repeated within a few days. There is a likely prospect that it will become a regular weekly feature.

Sacred Pictures Make Acceptable Sabbath Show.

Princeton, Ind.—The Sunday moving picture show is here again, but with restrictions. The Yale and New Star theaters opened recently on Sunday, showing only sacred pictures, and were not interfered with. They were arrested when they tried it a week before. When the announcement that the theaters were to open was made there was instant objection, but when it was reported that pictures of a sacred nature only were to be shown the objection disappeared.

Children's Hour in Ft. Wayne.

Ft. Wayne, Ind.—Ft. Wayne is to have its "Children's Hour" moving picture shows. Following the lead of Indianapolis the club women and those interested in the various phases of child welfare have organized a committee to carry out the plans that have been completed in other cities. The exhibitors have been interested in the project and will co-operate. It is possible that there will be a children's hour on Saturday afternoon in every moving picture theater in the city.

Wilson Grove Buys the Star.

Van Buren, Ind.—Wilson Grove, former city treasurer of Bluffton, has purchased the Star and will take over immediately the operation of the theater. While Mr. Wilson is a new comer in the moving picture exhibitor's world, he is well known throughout this section of the state and his welcome will be hearty.

New North Vernon House.

North Vernon, Ind.—The North Vernon Amusement Company has let the contracts and work has begun on the new $15,000 moving picture theater which the company will erect. When completed the theater is expected to be most beautiful.

E. F. Galligan Will Manage the Grand.

Terre Haute, Ind.—Edward F. Galligan, the popular theater manager of Logansport, will come to Terre Haute to take charge of the Grand of this city. Galligan is connected with the Carruthers, Smith and Colby Company.

L. J. Dunning Buys Back Orpheum.

Plymouth, Ind.—The Orpheum of this city has changed hands. Mr. Stove, the former owner is succeeded by L. J. Dunning, a former owner of the theater. He will at once redecorate and repair the theater and it will be closed until this work is finished.

Princess Airdome Opens.

Monon, Ind.—The Princess airdome was thrown open to the public for the first time recently. It is Monon's first experience with the open air theater and the favor with which it met indicates a prosperous season.

Bluffton, Ind.—Manager Wallace Sawyer of the Grand announces that repairs and improvements costing $5,000 will be made to his theater during the summer.

Can Censors Long Agree?

Members of Local Censor Board of Holland, Michigan, Tender Resignations, Following Disagreement.

By Frank H. Madison, Special Correspondent, 6747 Emerald Ave., Chicago, Ill.

HOLLAND, MICH.—There is discord, to put it mildly, among Holland people who have to do with moving pictures. As in many other cities, local censorship has engendered ill-feeling. Also as in other cities it is found that all cannot agree as to what should be eliminated from a picture. The principal result was that the censor board members tendered their resignations to the city council, but they were not accepted.

Scenes in Part 4 of "Trilby" were offensive to one member of the censor board. Manager Newman of the Apollo theater asked the members of the council to attend a private showing of the film and decide for themselves. He also wanted an opportunity to show the public all of the disputed part, declaring that any fair, impartial person would sustain his position that the picture is not immodest. He readily agreed to make cuts ordered by the common council.

Pontiac's New Censor.

Pontiac, Mich.—Henry M. Lenanbury has been appointed moving picture censor and also a member of the police force by Mayor R. J. Lounsbury under the ordinance recently passed. He will draw the same salary as any other policeman.

Patriotic Film and Amusement Co.

Benton Harbor, Mich.—The Patriotic Film and Amusement Company of Benton Harbor has been incorporated with capital stock of $5,000.

Owosso's Strand Almost Ready.

Pontiac, Mich.—Henry M. Lenanbury has Company has filed articles of incorporation with capital stock of $10,000 to operate the Strand theater on North Washington street in this city. The incorporators are Eugene Brewer, Dr. Gaylord N. Finch, Frank Rayen and Major M. J. Phillips. The Strand, the new theater seating 650, will open sometime between June 15 and July 1. Brewer will be manager; Rayen, who is connected with the Citizen's Savings Bank, will pay especial attention to the financial affairs, and Major Phillips, who is field director of the Military Movies Company of Port Huron, will co-operate upon the program.

Theater Changes in Michigan.

Flint, Mich.—W. S. Butterfield proposes to add the Palace theater to his other interests—the Majestic and Garden theaters—in Flint. This will be the name of a new vaudeville and picture house for which he has purchased a site at Kearsley and Harrison streets. It will cost about $75,000 and will seat 1,450. When the new theater is ready the Majestic will be devoted to feature pictures, road shows and all rental attractions.

Mt. Pleasant, Mich.—Martin Howe of Owosso has purchased the Lyric theater here from Manager Kenney.

North Adams, Mich.—L. L. Westerland, owner of the Star theater at Almont and part owner of he Princess theater at Chelsea, purchased the Family theater here from Don H. Finkle. He will divide his time between the Almont and local houses. The house was reopened May 16 with "The Spoilers."

Newaygo, Mich.—The remodeled Vaudeville theater was opened by Manager J. M. Meade with "The Girl and the Game."

Grand Ledge, Mich.—George O. Schultz of Owosso is now manager of the Palace theater succeeding Guy Goodrich, who has been transferred to Cadillac Monenci, Mich.—Manager Gay has opened the new Gem theater. The house, which seats 288, is equipped for theatrical performances as well as pictures.

Philo, Ill.—The Philo airdome has opened for the summer season.

Somonauk, Ill.—H. L. Thompson, new manager of the Elite theater, will operate it as a ten-cent house.

Worth While Noting.

Decatur, Ill.—"The Dumb Girl of Portici" was shown at the High School Auditorium as a benefit for the city Pan Hellenic.

Monmouth, Ill.—How would you like to have every telephone girl for miles around boosting your house? When the operators for the Monmouth district were at a school of instruction here Manager Stults of the Princess theater put on "The Modern Seven League Boots," an appropriate film.

Princeton, Ill.—Favors of carnations were given all adults who attended the opening of the Triangle program at the Eagle theater.

Pinckneyville, Ill.—Manager G. A. Goddard of the Harriet theater has installed a new Simplex projector, a Martin rotary converter, a diamond disc phonograph and an electric piano.

Pekin, Ill.—The Capitol theater has installed a new ventilating system as a measure of "preparedness" for this summer.

Monmouth, Ill.—Monmouth had a clean-up day. Manager Stults of the Princess offered to admit any boy or girl who brought ten tin cans tied on a string. Two wagons were required to haul away the three thousand noisy tickets.

Alton, Ill.—"The Little Girl Next Door," the film produced to exploit the unsquelchable Illinois Vice Commission, appeared at the Hippodrome theater here the week of May 14—the first showing outside of Chicago. As Mayor Edward Beall of Alton was head of the so-called investigators and there was promise of seeing the film "just as it was produced." Prices were advanced to twenty-five and fifty cents.

Pontiac, Ill.—F. M. Bond, manager of Bond's theater, contemplates the installation of a pipe organ sometime this summer. He has made a number of changes to increase the seating capacity between 75 and 100.

St. Louis Airdomes Bloom

Summer's First Touches Set Out-of-Door Theaters Blossoming Hereabouts—Among Those Noticed as Beginning to Thrive Are Lyric, Crystal, Lee, Maple, Monroe, Mozart—A New Airdome Coming.

A. H. Giebler, Special Correspondent, 236 Vanol Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—The weather man in charge of the thermometer in the St. Louis territory has delayed the outdoor theater openings for several weeks this season. There have been only one or two nights suitable for outdoor shows during the entire spring, and although the theaters have been doing their regular share of business the poor airdomes not connected with any theater have been compelled to postpone date after date for opening days.

Lyric Skydome.

The Lyric skydome, one of the Cornelius group of theaters, opened on Monday, May 15, with a splendid program and a splendid audience, although it turned cold enough during the evening to make overcoats feel comfortable. David Silverman's orchestra of ten pieces was moved out to the Skydome, on Delmar and Taylor avenues, from the downtown Lyric, for the occasion, and the audience was enthusiastic over the entertainment, despite the cold weather.

The Crystal.

The Crystal airdome, 5946 Delmar avenue, in the extreme west end of the city, opened on May 12 with feature pictures and Victor Hugo's orchestra, another popular local orchestra. The Crystal is a pretentious place, situated as it is in one of the most exclusive residence sections of the city, and having to keep up with the cultivated tastes of its patrons.

The Lee.

The Lee airdome, Lee and Turner avenues, also opened on the 15th. The Lee is a five-cent place and shows short subjects with occasional big features.

The Maple.

The Maple airdome, Kings Highway and Page boulevard, opened the same night with a daily change of program of big features.

The Monroe.

The Monroe airdome, on California and Chippewa, run in connection with the Monroe theater, just around the corner on Chippewa street, opened last week for the summer. Mrs. L. D. Stoddard, proprietor of the two places of amusement, is one of the most successful woman exhibitors in St. Louis, and the constancy and appreciation of her patrons prove that she has made a study of their tastes. Mrs. Stoddard judiciously mixes her program with features, serials and comedies, and manages to please all classes and ages of her patrons.

The Mozart.

The Mozart airdome, in the 4600 block on Delmar, opened on May 15 under the management of Hector Pasmezoglu, with an all picture bill. Pasmezoglu is the manager of the Congress, on Olive and Sarah streets, and has built up a remarkable patronage for his house during the past season. The Congress had been a posing proposition for a long time when the present management took charge of it, but it has now become one of the most successful houses in the city.

A New Airdome.

The Columbia Novelty Company have bought another lot on North Twelfth street, for the enlargement of the airdome which had been begun on the lot adjoining the Webster theater. The work on the airdome had been going on for a few weeks when it was finally decided that the original plans would make the place too small to accommodate the crowds in that section of the city. The site as now enlarged to 150x150 feet will permit more seats to be installed, and more space for plants and other decorations. D. T. Graham is president of the company operating both theater and airdome.

Boosting "Peg o' the Ring."

St. Louis, Mo.—Barney Rosenthal, manager of the Universal exchange, at 2116 Locust street, says he is going to break all records and make rings around all previous showings on the new Universal serial, "Peg o' The Ring," and Harry Rosenberg has been appointed special serial representative. Mr. Rosenthal is sending out advance cards announcing Rosenberg as the "Circus Movie Man;" then when Rosey gets in a town all he will have to do is to call on the exhibitor and book him and be on his way.

No Flowers at Its Funeral.

St. Louis.—The censorship bill, which has been hanging fire in St. Louis for so many months, has at last been laid to rest by the Board of Aldermen. Alderman Barney Schwartz was the principal opponent, and by his sincere and convincing arguments against the bill, has done much to prevent its becoming a law. Several exchange men and others interested in the film industry aided materially in the defeat of the bill.

Kleine Opens Local Office.

George Kleine has opened a branch office in St. Louis to distribute the films put out by his company for the territory covered by the St. Louis exchanges. Manager Rosenberg, who has been put in charge of the branch, installed in the Empress theater building at 3618 Olive street, had has wide experience in the film business and is well known to the trade.

Manager George W. Fuller of the World Exchange, gave a private showing of the new World releases at the New Grand Central theater, on May 16. A large number of exhibitors took advantage of the opportunity and went to see the films before making bookings.

High Tax in New Orleans

Exchange Managers Startled by City Tax Assessor's Idea of the Value of Film Stock in Local Exchanges—Has Read Glowing Stories and Thinks About $50,000 Each Would Do—Film Men Will Fight It in Court.

By George M. Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—One fine morning recently when film exchange managers got down to work they didn't succeed in accomplishing much for a while. Each one of them found a tax assessment list in his morning's mail that called for a payment on approximately $50,000 worth of film, regardless of whether his particular exchange handled one thousand feet or film of a hundred thousand.

They have hired attorneys and will go to court before June 1. Numerous meetings have been held; a committee has visited the mayor and commissioners of New Orleans, the Association of Commerce, and other civic bodies. Nothing much has been accomplished so far, except that the film men were granted a dispensation by the City Council to file a suit before June 1, when, under ordinary circumstances, such a suit could not be filed after March 1.

A long list of grievances, extending over six or seven years, or since the film exchanges were first established in New Orleans, is charged against the tax assessor's office. This is not the first time the exchanges have gone to court over inflated film values. According to the tax assessor, an exchange must pay on $50,000, regardless of the quantity of film disposed of yearly. But little satisfaction came from a visit paid to the tax assessor's office by the film men. The conversation went something like this: "Mr. Assessor, our shops aren't big enough to hold that much film." "But you call yourself a film exchange?" "Yes." "Then it's $50,000." And at that figure it stood, until the arguments of the film bosses finally induced the assessor to lower his figures for eight exchanges from an average of $50,000 for each exchange to an average of $22,000. The latter figures proved not a bit satisfactory, so the film men hired Edward Rightor, a prominentt local atorney, to represent their interests in a court battle that will begin this month.

According to this onerous taxation, every foot of film in some exchanges is worth $5 or $6 a foot. Just what induced the tax assessor's office to set such a high valuation is not known, but it is a matter of hearsay that the tax assessor said to one film man: "These newspaper accounts I read certainly make me believe that your films are bringing great big prices."

Each film exchange in the Crescent City is yearly taxed both city and state taxes. There is no kick on the state taxes, as these are based on a fair price per one thousand feet of film. Years ago the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, managed in New Orleans by the veteran film man, Al. G. Shear, "went to the mat" with the tax assessor over a little matter of onerous taxation, and won their case in court. The judge in this case decided that a reel of film was worth from $15 to $30, the exact valuation being based on the physical condition of the reel.

The companies protesting in the court suit are the General, Consolidated, V-L-S-E, Paramount, Mutual, Fox, Pathe and and World.

H. F. Wilkes Weds Atlanta Girl.

This week a mysterious-looking document was shunted back and forth among the offices in Film Row. It was brought to each office by a messenger, and the "business" consisted of reading the document, after which each manager was seen to reach for his check book. The secret came out later when a hilarious party descended upon the New Orleans office of Paramount and presented to H. F. Wilkes, manager for a month and blushing benedict for a day, a handsome silver present. Mr. Wilkes had, not three hours before, been married to Miss Imogene Simrile at the Catholic church in Algiers, La., just across the river from New Orleans. Miss Simrile comes from Atlanta, in which city Mr. Wilkes held the Paramount fort for several years before coming to New Orleans, and it is hinted that there is just a wee bit of the runaway act in the romance. At any rate the last chapter of the film does not read "Passed by the Board of Review," but instead is labeled: "Papa forgives; and They Live Happily Ever Afterward."

C. W. Harden Takes Charge.

New Orleans.—Prior to the arrival of Charles W. Harden, the new Southern division manager for the Fox Film, the New Orleans offices of Fox were rearranged and additional working space added. Mr. Harden is strictly on the job at present. Film exchange managers along the row have made him welcome in a right royal fashion.

C. B. Gondolfi, booking clerk in the Fox lair, has been promoted by Manager R. E. Barron to a position as traveling salesman.

Local Fidelity Office Closes.

New Orleans.—The Fidelity Film Company, which for the past three months has had an office in Baronne street, booking independent film, has closed its office, A. C. Bernard, its manager, going to Houston, Texas, where he will open a Fidelity branch in that city. Mr. Bernard declared that arrangements will be made to book Fidelity films in this city through a booking office which he will establish shortly.

F. F. Creswell Heads Local World Film

New Orleans.—There have been a number of important changes in local film circles. F. F. Creswell, well known in New Orleans, but more recently of the Memphis office of Paramount, is the new manager of the New Orleans office of the World Film. He succeeds Ross Hardenbrook, who, however, it is announced, remains with the company.

Elmer Smith With Local Kleine.

New Orleans.—Elmer Smith, formerly with United Film, is handling the Billy Burke serial in this territory. The Billy Burke serial, backed up by extensive local advertising, is going strong in New Orleans and contiguous territory.

Joe Klein in Atlanta.

Joe Klein, formerly the Southern division manager for the World Film, with headquarters in New Orleans, now is with Pathe in Atlanta as special representative.

The Portola Opens.

New Orleans.—The Portola, New Orleans newest photoplay house, and one of the most attractive to date, opened on May 10. J. J. Fabacher & Son, owners of the Wonderland theater and of the Portola, received many congratulations and numerous flower tokens from their film friends in New Orleans on opening day. The new theater is in Canal street, at University place, and its appointments are exquisite. A new lighting system, never before seen in a local moving picture house, has been installed. The lights are inclosed in glass pillars, and give a subdued effect that permits patrons to easily find seats, and at the same time does not affect the showing of the pictures.

A New Orpheum Coming.

New Orleans.—Charles E. Bray, representing Martin Beck, head of the Orpheum circuit, this week closed a deal for the Denegre property, fronting 120 feet in University place, which will be the site for a new Orpheum theater to cost $400,000. Construction of the new theater will begin in October and it will be finished in time for the opening of the 1917-1918 season. It is probable that the old Orpheum theater will be converted into a picture house.

Harcol Film, a New Company.

New Orleans capital is back of the Harcol Film company, which organized on May 15, with John F. Collins, president, and A. Harrison, Jr., vice-president and manager. Heretofore the company has been known as the Paragon Film company. The new studios of the company will be at 1921 Palmyra. The company has produced several commercial films and is under contract with the New Orleans Times-Picayune to film a five-reeler which will have as actors the winners of the newspaper's moving picture contest, which came to a close on May 15.

DETROIT NEWS LETTER.

By Jacob Smith, Special Correspondent, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

A. I. Shapiro Comes to Head Local Triangle.

DETROIT, MICH.—A. I. Shapiro, former manager of the Detroit branch of the Fox Film Corporation, and who for the past few months has been doing special work in the east, is back in Detroit—this time as manager of the Triangle exchange. Although located at present at 183 East Jefferson avenue, the new permanent location is to be 73 Broadway, which will be ready by the latter part of May. The company has leased the entire top floor of the new building at that address and will fit it up very handsomely. Mr. Shapiro is welcome back to Detroit where he has a host of good friends. Good luck, Shap. Don't forget the World office at 503 Free Press building.

F. Rutledge Opens Local Kleine Office.

Detroit, Mich.—Frank Rutledge, Michigan representative for George Kleine, has opened an office at 207 Broadway Market building Detroit. When the writer dropped in there this week, Mr. Rutledge was extremely busy answering letters from exhibitors in all parts of Michigan who were asking for bookings on the new Billie Burke serial. The first-run of this serial has been placed with the Majestic theater, Detroit, starting May 21.

Local Mutual Doubles Office Space.

Detroit, Mich.—The Mutual Film Corporation has considerably enlarged its Detroit exchange, which is under the management of G. Spencer Trask. As much space again has been added by taking over the fifth floor, this additional space being used for the poster and advertising department. There is an overhead skylight which gives the force of employes plenty of daylight; all racks are double-decked and there is a mezzanine around the entire floor. It will materially relieve the strain on the second floor. The Detroit exchange handles Michigan and seven counties in northern Ohio. Manager Trask reports excellent business, particularly on the new Charlie Chaplin comedies and "Girl in the Game" and "Secret Submarine" serials. Six Chaplin prints are working every day in Michigan.

New Assistant at the Lair.

Detroit, Mich.—Harry Brennan has been appointed assistant to Neil Kingsley, manager of the Detroit exchange of the Fox Film. Mr. Brennan was formerly in the theatrical business having been a performer for a number of years with high-class musical comedies.

H. W. Smith to Represent Mutual Film.

Detroit, Mich.—H. W. Smith, who was for five months manager of the Garden theater, Detroit, has been appointed special local representative for the Mutual. The employes of the Garden on the evening of Mr. Smith's departure presented him with a beautiful silver loving cup on which was engraved "To H. W. Smith from the boys at the Garden theater, May 6." Signed A. J. Meville, A. B. Ketchum, L. Welch, A. Bradley, W. Pear and G. P. Applehoff.

Picture Playhouse Opens Exchange.

Detroit, Mich.—The Picture Playhouse Film Co. has opened an exchange at 92 Griswold street, Detroit, with A. Lee in charge. W. W. McEwen will be special representative.

L. W. Foster Representing Triangle.

L. W. Foster will continue with the Detroit branch of the Triangle Film Corporation as special representive.

Ed. E. Kirchner at the Family.

Detroit, Mich.—The manager of the Family theater, Detroit, is Ed E. Kirchner, who has been associated with the house as auditor since it opened eight years ago, May 2. During his connection with this house Ed has never lost one day. He told the World correspondent that the entire first floor was to be reseated at once and that later the balcony would be reseated. Many other improvements are also to be made throughout the Family which will practically conform it into a new theater. Mr. Kirchner says that the picture policy is to remain permanently, and that business is getting better every week.

LOUISVILLE PICTURE NOTES.

School Fund Benefit at the Aristo.

Louisville, Ky.—Under the auspices of the Parent Teacher Association of the Gavin H. Cochran school a special film exhibition was handled at the new Aristo theater, Second and A streets, on Saturday, May 20. The bill included the interesting film "The Patchwork Girl of Oz." Leading residents in the neighborhood arranged for selling popcorn, ice cream, etc., and also a grab bag. Mrs. Fred Levy, head of the local children's censor board, and other leading ladies received tickets. The proceeds of the exhibition went to the benefit of a special school fund.

Parkland Theater Closed.

Louisville, Ky.—T. H. Johnson has again closed the Parkland theater, and is preparing to go West to enter another line of business. The Parkland has been offered for rent.

Joseph Goldberg Gives a Lecture.

Louisville, Ky.—Joseph Goldberg, manager of the Hippodrome theater, recently delivered a talk at the Y. M. H. A. on "Sidelights of the Motion Picture Industry." Mr. Goldberg is well informed on the subject. He recently spent several days in Chicago, and made a trip through the plant of a company. For some time he has been the moving picture editor of the Louisville Evening Post and conducts a column of queries and answers concerning moving picture stars, etc. The public was invited to attend the meeting.

New House in Nashville

Crescent Amusement Company, Now Operating 22 Picture Houses in Kentucky and Tennessee, Plans a Fine New Theater for Nashville—Will Cost $100,000 and Be Ready by September 15.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Announcement has just been made by the Crescent Amusement Company, of Nashville, to the effect that work will be started at once on a new moving picture house. The new theater will be known as the "Majestic," and will occupy the present site of the Rex and Alhambra theaters. The old buildings will be torn down at once, and the new building is to be completed about September 15. The theater will have a seating capacity of 1,500, the seats to be twenty-one inches wide, and thirty-two inches back to back, and there will also be fifteen private boxes.

The plans, which have been drawn by Marr & Holman, architects of Nashville, call for an expenditure of $100,000, and it is the aim of the company to erect the most modern and comfortable theater that can be constructed. The plans call for a refrigerating system in connection with the ventilating system, and for the air to be drawn over brine coils in the summer. An air washer and three large suction fans will be part of the equipment. Arrangements will be made to warm the air in winter by drawing it over tempering coils. The building will be absolutely fireproof in construction and will contain many novel features.

Immediately inside of the entrance there will be a waiting room which will be equipped with a wide log fire place, telephones, etc., for the convenience of the patrons. Ladies rest rooms and men's smoking rooms will be installed at either side of the building. The four stairways leading to the balcony will be of marble with bronze handrails. The screen will be placed at the stage wall, with scenic effects built around the picture and a garden at the front of the stage, and the first row of seats will be twenty-five feet back from the screen. A large pipe organ, with two echo lofts will be a part of the equipment.

The lighting will be of the semi-indirect type, and the fixtures will contain varicolored lights to produce special electrical effects. These fixtures will be suspended from the ceiling which will be fifty feet from the auditorium floor line.

The Crescent Amusement Company has been operating in Nashville for ten years, and is now operating twenty-two houses in Nashville, Tennessee and Kentucky. The new theater with its large seating capacity will enable the company to put on the most extensive photoplays that are at present manufactured.

Got the Kids Coming to See "Myra."

Knoxville, Tenn.—Manager George N. Shorey, of the Gay theater, of Knoxville, recently handled one of the keenest advertising stunts on record for the purpose of getting a serial well started. Mr. Shorey sent out ten thousand copies of Charles W. Goddard's facinating story "Myra," and announcement was made to the effect that every boy and girl bringing one of these copies to the theater would be admitted free of charge on Saturday, to see the story continued in pictures. In addition to the serial an excellent Mexican war story, Keystone comedy and "Sunday Supplement" Cartoons were offered. To such children as did not get the paper delivered at their homes the management offered to furnish one up to Friday night if they called at the theater. It is needless to say that the house was packed by eager youngsters who will undoubtedly force their fond parents into furnishing the necessary coin with which to see the rest of the serial.

FILMING THE GREAT DERBY.

Camera Men Hustle and Show Race in Louisville Theater Next Morning.

G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Nearly every camera man in a radius of 150 miles of the city was present on Derby Day, May 13, to take pictures of the famous old Kentucky Derby, at the historic Churchill Downs track, where the event has been run off for forty-two consecutive years. The Derby, by Kentuckians, seems of more importance than gubernatorial or presidential elections, especially the Bluegrass, and there were eight moving picture cameras and many others trained on George Smith, the winner, as he shot across the wire in one of the most exciting finishes in years.

The race was fifth on the card, and the films were rushed out on night trains to Chicago and Cincinnati. Following the Derby the moving picture men ran some little race of their own in getting the films completed for showing in the local theaters. The race was won by the Pathe operators, who managed to get the films developed in time to show the Derby scenes at the first Monday shows at the Majestic theater, Louisville.

Local Mutual Offices Improved.

Louisville, Ky.—A number of improvements have just been completed at the Louisville office of the Mutual Film by Percy L. Smith, the local manager. The office and work rooms have all been repapered throughout, a private telephone exchange installed and connected to the various departments, and a number of lockers and new shelves installed for posters, supplies, etc. The exchange is now the most complete one in the city.

Will Take Colored Local Films.

Louisville, Ky.—The Broadway Amusement Enterprises, operators of a string of theaters in Louisville and out in the State, has just purchased and installed a 1916 Pathe camera with which to take local color pictures to be used in the company's theaters. There is a steadily increasing interest in local pictures and the company decided that it would facilitate matters considerably by the purchase of the machine.

News Notes from Louisville.

L. J. Ditmar, president of the Majestic Amusement Company, recently left the city for New York, where he will spend about ten days or two weeks on special business.

Louisa, Ky.—D. J. Burchett is making arrangements to move his picture show into larger quarters, the business having outgrown the present building. He has also made arrangements to start a new pool room.

Winchester, Ky.—R. L. Badger, of Sardina, O has opened the Colonial theater as a moving picture house.

Richmond, Ky.—Extensive improvements are under way at the Alhambra theater, where the main building is being extended 50 feet and a new balcony installed. The seating capacity will be about 600 when completed. Leather chairs will be installed on the lower floor, electric fans, exhaust fans, two new moving picture machines and a gold fibre screen. Miss Anna Bell Ward is manager of the theater.

Serials More Popular

Kansas City District Very Favorable to Serial Motion Pictures—Newspapers Find That the Stories Printed with the Weekly Installments Are Circulation Boosters and Are Eager for Them.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—The serial seems to be coming into its own in the Kansas City district, and is spreading with a rapidity that is almost beyond the grasp even of the men who have boosted it. One of the most interesting indications of the popularity of the serial, is the eagerness of the newspapers to publish the stories. The country editors have been made to feel that the publication of the serials is a circulation-winner—and they are finding this to be a fact. The readers are asking for moving picture news, and they are inquiring about the serials—so the editors have to come across. One salesman reported recently that he was surprised to find how glad the editor of one newspaper was to pay for the plate matter of a serial.

Charles Newman, Leonardville, Kan., is one exhibitor who had no difficulty at all in getting the "Exploits of Elaine" published in his local paper. C. L. Simpson, editor of the Monitor of that place, met him more than half way—he was about to urge Mr. Newman to put on such a serial, so he could run the story of it!

In Kansas City the "Iron Claw" is proving a winner; and it is booked in 37 houses in Missouri and Kansas served from the Kansas City exchange.

J. S. Stout Promoted.

Kansas City, Mo.—A much deserved promotion recently announced is that of J. S. Stout, who is now manager of the Salt Lake City branch of the World Film Corporation. Mr. Stout has for the past eight months been working as traveller under Mr. Robertson, manager of the Kansas City office of the same company, and his promotion comes as the result of his excellent work in that position. No one has as yet been appointed in his place here.

D. O. Reese a Bluebird Road Man.

Kansas City, Mo.—D. O. Reese is the latest addition to the Bluebird Company's Kansas City office, succeeding the place vacated by W. B. Emrich, after his appointment as manager of this company. Mr. Reese is by no means a newcomer in the film industry, having acted for some time as traveller for the Kansas City Feature Film Company. He has recently been identified with several stock companies in the Southwest.

Universal's Educational Department.

Kansas City, Mo.—The latest plan to be worked out by the Universal Film and Supply Company is that of a Juvenile Performance Department, which is being conducted in this territory under the direction of "Marty" Williams. Letters are being sent out to each exhibitor in this territory, suggesting the adoption of a Saturday morning children's program and suggesting, of course, appropriate films which the Universal can offer for such entertainments.

Howe-McMillin Wedding.

G. B. Howe, assistant manager, and Miss Leola McMillin, assistant booker, both connected with the Universal Film and Supply Company of this city, were married here on May 18, in an apartment which they had fitted up before the ceremony. Miss McMillin has won a reputation over the city for the character of her work, and Mr. Howe is one of the hustlers in the local industry. A large floor lamp was the gift of the office force of the Universal. In Miss McMillin's place Mrs. W. B. Emrich, wife of the manager of the Blue Bird Photoplay Company, was installed. Mrs. Emrich is also experienced along this line, having resigned from the Fox exchange to go with the Universal.

W. P. Cuff Buys the Best.

Topeka, Kans.—The Best theater at Topeka changed hands last week, when W. P. Cuff, former manager of the Orpheum at that place, took it over from Lew Nathanson. No radical improvements are contemplated at present.

Alhambra at Springfield, Mo., Opens.

Springfield, Mo.—The "Battle Cry of Peace" was the first attraction of the Alhambra theater, at Springfield, Mo., which recently opened its doors after an extensive series of alterations and improvements. The new house is one of the most modern in the Southwest and has many interesting features.

W. S. Quade Traveling with Unicorn.

Kansas City, Mo.—A new traveler with the recently-organized Unicorn Film Service is Walter S. Quade, who will have as his territory Kansas and Oklahoma. Mr. Quade is one of the oldest exhibitors in the local field, having managed the Olympic, one of the oldest houses here, before it was torn down. He recently has had charge of the Bonaventure, a Kansas City house.

W. B. Emrich Promoted.

Kansas City, Mo.—W. B. Emrich is now manager of the Kansas City branch of the Bluebird, being appointed to the position left vacant by A. G. Hull, who recently left for the East. Mr. Emrich is an experienced man in the moving picture game, being connected with the Fox Film Corporation, both in the Kansas City and Chicago office. His excellent record while on the road for the Bluebird company earned for him this position. He won five out of a possibl six prizes offered by the local office of the traveler turning in the largest number of contracts at weekly intervals.

Among the Kansas City Exchanges.

Richard Robertson, local World Film manager, still enthuses over the great reception given the Brady-Made-World pictures, declaring at they are going in wonderful shape. The Colonial, at St. Joe, Mo., the Novelty in Topeka, Kans., and the Palace at Wichita, have all booked these releases for two days per week, which Mr. Robertson declares is good. A recent contract he closed is with the Apollo, the highest type of suburban theater in Kansas City, which will run these pictures each Monday night. "I am more than pleased to think that they have taken my stuff for the hardest night in the week. That shows that it is good," recently said Mr. Robertson.

Although he was here but thirty minutes, Harry Nolan, of the Nolan Supply Company, Denver, Colo., had a pleasant visit in Kansas City. Mr. Nolan, who was en route to New York from El Paso, telegraphed his old friend "Pat" Hall, and the latter was on hand at the depot to greet him.

Lee D. Balsley, publicity manager of the Kansas City Feature Film Company, has been in Des Moines and Omaha attending the conventions of the Des Moines and Omaha Screen clubs. The Kansas City Feature Film Company had booths at both shows, and Mr. Balsley and R. C. LeBeau, manager of the Des Moines office, were the representatives in attendance.

Harry Drum, assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation, visited Richard Robertson, Kansas City manager, recently, making this one of the stops on his tour of the branch offices of that company in the United States.

The fourth monthly contest of the Universal office for a $25 prize to the salesman bringing in the most business during that time went to J. Erwin Dodson. This is the last of this series which the Universal will conduct.

A series of Saturday night salesmen's meetings has been started by C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager of the Pathe exchange here. This is for the purpose of exchanging ideas, discussing mutual questions, "swapping" experiences and for a general betterment of the Pathe's business. Winning methods used by one traveler will be suggested to the group and the same plan will be tried out if it is thought that it will work in other territory. Mr. Edwards, by his expert handling of his travelers, has developed a set of salesmen who are making great records for themselves, and incidentally for Pathe.

ATLANTA NEWS LETTER.

By A. M. Beatty, Special Correspondent, 43 Copenhill ave., Atlanta, Ga.

Screen Club Gives Special Show.

ATLANTA, GA.—The Screen Club of Atlanta offered a rare treat to motion picture followers Sunday at the Grand theater. A program selected from first run subjects which have just reached this southern distribution point was given to a crowded house.

Paul Engler Heads Local Fox.

Will Make Home Talent Picture.

La Grange, Ga.—The proprietors of the Ideal and Grand theaters at La Grange have made arrangements to stage a photoplay in which young people of the city will participate. A prize of $75 will be offered to the young lady who is selected for the leading role in the unique production. All those who enter the contest will be given an opportunity to take part in the picture.

J. Marius Olsen Here.

Atlanta, Ga.—J. Marius Olsen, prominent in the screen world, who arrived in Atlanta last week from Florida, is so well pleased with Atlanta and its moving picture interests that he declared he is going to enter the film game in this city.

Mr. Olsen opened the first motion picture theater in Glasgow, Scotland. He has since managed several film houses in Florida.

"The Feud Girl," a Georgia Picture.

Atlanta, Ga.—The photoplay for which all Georgia has been looking, "The Feud Girl," the Hazel Dawn production, that was staged in the mountains of North Georgia, is being shown in Atlanta this week.

It will attract more widespread attention through the south than any picture in months, due to the fact that hundreds of Georgians appear in character roles.

Most all the scenes are laid in the Georgia hills around Gainesville, Rome and Helen. The natives of those vicinities take the parts of feudists and clansmen, and performed their work better than any class of non-professional extra folk with whom Director Thomson has ever had to deal.

What Makes the Strand Flag Fly?

Atlanta, Ga.—An unique contest is being held by the Strand theater. An American flag flies each day on the roof that stands out as if in a gale, when at times scarcely a breath of air is stirring. To the uninitiated its a puzzle. A prize of $10 is offered to any one not connected with moving picture interests who writes the best description of how this flag feat is accomplished.

C. W. Harden Goes to Metro.

C. W. Harden, district manager of the Fox Film for the Atlanta and Southern district, has resigned his position to accept the management of the Metro Picture Corporation for the district of Kansas City and surrounding territory. Mr. Harden is one of the original screen club boosters. His departure will be regretted by the Atlanta film men.

Beautified Bonita Reopens.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Bonita theater, on Peachtree street, which has been closed several weeks for improvements, opened Monday completely remodeled and fitted with the modern photoplay house equipment.

In remodeling the theater $10,000 was spent on interior and exterior work with the view of securing maximum comfort and beauty. A new player has been installed in front of the theater. A five-piece orchestra will furnish music on the inside of the house.

The Bonita will show General Film productions and Triangle-Keystone comedy.

PRAIRIE STATE NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Decision Favors "Nation" Films.

DES MOINES, IA.—"The Birth of a Nation" was shown in Des Moines without violating the law. Judge Meyer in the municipal court decided the film did not come within the scope of the ordinance which prohibited performances which are "indecent or would tend to incite riot." This opinion was given at the trial of Harold Cavanaugh, house manager of the Berchel theater and two operators who were yanked out of the theater.

IN MINNEAPOLIS.

Officers of New Federal Features, Inc.

Minneapolis, Minn.—E. Oddy Freedman, formerly manager of the Seville, Main, Milo and Gopher theaters in Minneapolis, is now head of the new Federal Features, Inc., which has been organized here and taken quarters at 404 Film Exchange Bldg., 18 North Fourth street. The first release of the new feature company is "Defense or Tribute." Associated with Mr. Freedman are A. M. Gruenberg, Peter Markus, Sam Freedman and Meyer M. Isaacs.

Why Picture Was Banned

Minneapolis Board of Censors, Advisory to Mayor, Gives Its Reasons for Not Recommending "The Eternal Sapho"—Care for the Young Spectator and the Unintelligent Spectator Its Aim.

By Perry S. Williams, Special Correspondent, Address Minneapolis Tribune.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—The Minneapolis Board of Censors, composed of about 50 men and women representing the civic organizations of the city, and which guides Mayor Wallace G. Nye in his actions on motion picture films, has barred "The Eternal Sapho." The film had been shown for half a week at the Lyric theater before the board by unanimous recommendation brought out Mayor Nye's ban on further displays of it. In taking action on the film the board issued its first comprehensive statement giving its methods of censorship. The board's statement may be stated briefly as follows:

Pictures must appeal to good citizenship and especially avoid having evil influences on the audience. Particular care must be taken to avoid evil effects on young people because three-fourths of all picture audiences are persons under 35 years and a large number of this percentage are under age. In the case of "The Eternal Sapho," the board holds that in depicting the character of a child, Theda Bara's "skirts are perhaps commercially exaggerated." General objection is made to the scenes of drunkenness, the idea of the married man's visits to the model and the scenes in the haunts of vice. Especial objection is had to the staircase scenes when the married lover sees his mistress clandestinely. The board holds "There can be only one conclusion as to the purpose of the ascent of the staircase. The life led by the artist, the girl, the married lover, the degraded father, the murderous thief, is an evil life marked in no case by extenuating circumstances." The hint at "easily-earned luxury" also is objected to.

In conclusion the board says: "It portrays sensuality, it is suggestive, it leads the spectator to contacts and associations—pictorially speaking—which no parent would permit a son or daughter to seek. No really intelligent person is likely to be led astray by this film, but whether it be persons in their twenties or men and women of middle or old age, there can be no mistake as to the relations between the evil characters of the film play, and hence no moral gain or even maintenance of moral level in witnessing the exhibition of lovers and mistresses. It is beside the point to reply that this is to deny existence of such relations in real life; it is not beside the point to assert that the pictured contributing elements of such relations are far from true to life."

Correcting an Error.

In the list of our correspondents recently printed in this paper the address of Mr. Perry S. Williams, our Minneapolis correspondent, was given wrongly. His address is the Minneapolis Tribune.

Granstrom's Special Juvenile Shows.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—George W. Granstrom, a Minneapolis exhibitor, has joined the move backed by parents of this city to furnish special films for children. His program in co-operation with the mothers and fathers includes "Rip Van Winkle," which he will show at the Garrick, 26th street and Nicollet avenue, and "The Wizard of Oz," which will be an attraction at the University theater, University avenue and 4th street southeast.

Mr. Granstrom says he has found not only the parents, but the school authorities anxious to show their appreciation of his efforts to cater to the children's wants.

Screen Club Profited by Convention.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Although only about a month old, the Twin City Screen Club, whose membership comprises exhibitors, exchange men, road men, newspapermen and other real fellows engaged in or in contact with the picture business, now boasts of a membership of about 150. The convention of the Northwest Exhibitors at the Armory few weeks ago furnished the opportunity for winning over a number of out-of-town members. It was easy work, too, once the boys had glimpsed the fine club quarters in the Radisson Hotel, where they could make their headquarters when in Minneapolis.

Zenith Opens New Quarters.

P. S. Cary, manager of the Zenith Feature Film Company, which is a Duluth company, reports he is ready to meet his trade at his new quarters, sixth floor, Produce Bldg.

F. L. Andrews Goes to Friedman Film.

F. L. Andrews, formerly with the Supreme Feature Film Company, has accepted territory in North Dakota and Montana for the Friedman Film Corporation.

Fred S. Meyer Becomes Daddy.

Fred S. Meyer, local manager for the Universal, is no longer worrying about being awakened from a sound sleep in the early morning by the neighbor who cuts his lawn at dawn. Fred is now daddy to a daughter.

Denver's New Theater

A Half Million Paid for Site for Magnificent New Picture Theater by Bishop-Cass Investment Company—Will Stand at Corner of Sixteenth and Curtis Streets —Named the American—Locality Business Analyzed.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DENVER, COLO.—This city's "Movie Row," long the marvel of every big man in the film industry who chanced to see it, and claimed as the greatest in the United States, is only in its infancy, judging from plans revealed this week. With five high-class photoplay houses now doing business within a radius of two city blocks and a sixth nearing completion, announcement has been made of another.

This seventh theater is to be higher and better than any of those now on Curtis street or "Movie Row." It is to be known as the American. It is to be built on the corner of Sixteenth and Curtis streets. The Bishop-Cass Investment Company, back of the project, purchased the site for $500,000. An old building now on the ground will be razed and in its place will be erected a three-story structure, 100 feet wide by 125 feet long.

The theater will be located in the center with store rooms around the outside. The plans as now drawn call for entrances to the theater from both the Curtis and Sixteenth street sides. These are Denver's two principal business thoroughfares. The theater will have a seating capacity of 1,800 and will have elevator service to the balconies.

Fisher & Fisher, architects, are in charge of the plans and they declare that "The America" will be the best ventilated, most brilliantly lighted and the most commodious in the United States. It will be entirely fireproof and it is promised will embrace a number of new features the nature of which are being withheld pending the completion of details.

Business Statistics for Neighborhood.

With the opening of The American the seating capacity of the Curtis street houses will have reached a total of approximately 15,000. This includes in addition to the seven high class or 10 to 25-cent houses, four second class or nickel theaters.

Each of these houses runs 12 hours a day. Six daily performances is the minimum and figuring that all showed to capacity at every performance it would be possible to accommodate 90,000 people in a day or almost half of the city's population.

This takes into consideration only those houses in the heart of the business district and does not include five nickle theaters on Larimer street, in the lower part of the downtown district, nor any of the 20 or more houses in the residence districts.

Most of the latter are now running full ten-cent programs or get an admission of ten cents on four or five nights a week.

Unicorn Office Opens.

Denver, Colo.—Louis Goldstein, late manager of the Universal in Denver, has altered his plans for opening a private office for the exclusive distribution of big feature pictures, and instead has accepted the management of the Unicorn exchange. An up-to-date office has been opened at 1442 Welton street.

Coincident with Goldstein's retirement from the Universal service comes the announcement that Carl Stern, manager of the Denver Bluebird office, has gone to Unicorn and will be in charge of one of the offices on the Pacific Coast.

W. P. Moran Managing Denver Universal.

Denver, Colo.—W. P. Moran, formerly in charge of the Mutual interests in Salt Lake City, has been made manager of the Universal exchange in Denver. He has assumed his new duties.

Moran is not new to Denver, but it has been several years since he worked in this city. He was initiated into the film industry, being one of the aides of H. H. Buckwalter when the latter was manager of the General Film Company exchange, and when this was the only film distributing agency in Denver.

L. E. Schaeffer Made Assistant Manager.

L. E. Schaeffer, road man and special representative of the V-L-S-E in the Denver territory, has been called into the office and given the position of assistant manager of the local exchange under Frank Harris.

BASEBALL, TALK OF DALLAS.

City Major League Creates Much Interest—Enthusiasm Runs High.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Special Correspondent, 618 Comal St., Dallas, Tex.

DALLAS, Tex.—The City Major League, consisting of the Consolidated Cats, Motion Picture Cubs, Hurst Bros Bears and McGoldrick's Panthers, are at present playing some very interesting games, and each one is confident of being the winner.

Great enthusiasm was displayed among the exchange men of Film Row prior to the big game played Sunday, May 14. The Consolidated Cats and the Motion Picture Cubs were the contestants. A very fast game ensued in which the Cubs were winners, with a score of 2 to 0. This game ties the Cats and Cubs for second place.

Bears, 4; Panthers, 2. In the game of May 14, between the Bears and Panthers at Sears-Roebuck Park, the game resulted in favor of the Bears with a score of 4 to 2.

Cats, 2; Panthers, 0. On Sunday, May 7, the Consolidated Film & Supply Co.'s baseball team, known as the "Cats," defeated the McGoldrick's Panthers in a beautiful game, the final score being 2 to 0. At that time the Cats were leading the league. "Smiling Jimmy" Kelly, manager of the Cats, has great aspirations to winning the city championship.

Cubs, 3; Bears, 2. The Motion Picture Cubs beat Hurst Bros. Bears, Sunday, May 7, in a hotly contested game, the score being 3 to 2. The game was played as scheduled in the City Major League. The Bears were leaders until defeated in May 7 game, while the Cubs were tail enders in the league.

Corsicana, Tex.—M. Levine of the Ideal theater visited Dallas during week of May 8-13.

Plano, Tex.—The Palace theater was represented in Dallas during the week of May 8-13 by D. L. Wood.

Bowie, Tex.—S. C. Dodge of the Gem visited Dallas during week of May 8-13. Mr. Dodge is one of the oldest exhibitors in the State.

McKinney, Tex.—Chas. Kimball, owner of the Happy Hour and Pope theaters at McKinney, was a visitor to Dallas recently.

Sulphur Springs, Tex.—The manager of the Bufort theater, in the person of Mr. Geo. T. Stephens, visited Dallas week of May 8-13.

Sherman, Tex.—G. W. Batsell, of the King theater, was in Dallas week of May 8-13, rearranging bookings.

Cleburne, Tex.—J. F. Green of the Yale and Majectic, at Cleburne, paid the exchanges of Dallas a visit the week of May 8-13.

Houston, Tex.—Miss E. Johnson, of the Key theater, was a visitor in Dallas week of May 8-13, and while in the city gave the United Seating Co. an order for new chairs for her theater.

Cuero, Tex.—V. J. Grunder, of the Dreamland, one of the few exhibitors who very seldom visits Dallas, was in Dallas week of May 8-13.

Orange, Tex.—Hershel Thomas of the Airdome, accompanied by his wife, paid Dallas a visit during week May 8-13. This is his first visit to Dallas in several years.

Heard in San Francisco.

J. Knowles of the New York Amusement Company of Sonora, Calif., was a recent visitor here.

Otto Laurelle is preparing to start out upon the road with "East Lynne," visiting the small towns in the northern part of the state and making the trip by auto.

M. E. Cory, who recently became local manager for the World Film Corporation, has severed all connections with the exhibiting end of the business and the Fairyland and Cory theaters are now being managed by his brother, W. A. Cory. He has resigned from the Exhibitors' League, but is continuing his work against censorship, in which he has long taken an active part.

Marc Klaw of Klaw & Erlanger was a recent arrival here from Honolulu on the steamer Matsonia.

California News.

Fruitvale, Calif.—The Family theater has been reopened by Chris F. Otto and a Simplex machine has been installed by G. A. Metcalfe.

Marysville, Calif.—J. Edward Evans has purchased the Liberty theater from K. A. Adelberg.

Politicians Fear Hearst

San Francisco Agitation for Stricter Censorship Due to Fear of Prohibition Films —Hearst Expected to Use Power of Film to Advocate a Dry State—Real Forces Lined Up Over Matter.

By T. A. Church, Special Correspondent, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif.—Within the course of a week exhibitors, producers and exchange interests of this city will know whether or not a strict board of moving picture censors will be in power here. The Police Committee of the Board of Supervisors, has recommended the passage of the ordinance prepared by the California Club and other interests, and it is now up to the board as a whole. At a recent meeting of the Board of Supervisors this matter came up for discussion, but upon the request of Attorney John T. Williams, representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, a postponement of one week was granted as the attorney had just been called into the case and wished to prepare himself. The understanding was reached at this meeting that there would be no further postponements.

Fear Prohibition Films.

For some time the moving picture interests of the city have ben endeavoring to get to the bottom of the agitation for the creation of a board of censorship, but not until the last meeting of the Board of Supervisors were they able to understand it. At this meeting Cornelius Deasy, a member of the Police Committee, which had recommended the passage of the censorship ordinance, unwittingly exposed the whole scheme and made it very apparent that insofar as this committee was concerned the protection of public morals was not an issue and that the entire matter was merely a question of politics.

When a motion was made by one of the supervisors as an amendment to the ordinance under discussion that the Board of Censors be abolished Mr. Deasy arose and said: "I will say this to the members of the Board of Supervisors, although I did not say it in committee. I was in favor of abolishing the Board of Censors, but I understand that Mr. Hearst is interested in the moving picture business. There is to be a fight on prohibition in this city and state next fall. It is said that Mr. Hearst intends to use the moving pictures to put forward his propaganda in favor of prohibition. I, therefore, am not in favor of abolishing the Board of Censors."

This frank confession that a Board of Censors is desired for its power over political questions has been seized upon by film interests as a most convincing argument why the ordinance should not be passed and has brought forth a flood of editorials in the daily press opposing censorship in all forms. The Iroquois Club of San Francisco and the Carpenters' Union, each with a large membership, have passed resolutions against the proposed censorship ordinance and have so advised the Board of Supervisors.

Film Stars Appear in Person.

San Francisco, Calif.—The management of the Imperial theater makes splendid use of its large stage and with each Paramount picture shown an elaborate stage set is featured. Recently it has been enabled to present several film stars in person, two of these having appeared within a week. Anita King, "The Paramount Girl," appeared during the engagement of "The Race," in which she starred, and she was followed by Sessue Hayakawa, whose portrayal in "The Cheat" created a sensation here a short time ago.

Visits Los Angeles Branch.

San Francisco, Calif.—E. H. Emmick of the Peerless Film Company has left for Los Angeles to make a stay of two or three weeks and assist in stimulating business at the southern branch. During his absence the business of the local exchange will be looked after by H. Solmson.

Visiting Coast Branches.

San Francisco, Calif.—W. O. Edmonds, who has charge of the George Kleine interests on the Pacific Coast, made a short visit recently to Los Angeles to get the branch opened there in working order and has since left for Seattle and the Northwest on a similar mission. Business has been coming in in fine shape and the first showing of "Gloria's Romance," at the Tivoli theater, has proved to be a great success.

Nat A. Magner Goes East.

San Francisco, Calif.—Nat A. Magner of the Nat A. Magner Company, Pacific Bldg., is making an Eastern trip for the purpose of securing new feature films. His latest purchase, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," is still being booked heavily in this territory.

Walter Preddey Establishes Plant.

San Francisco, Calif.—Walter Preddey, who conducts a large supply business on Eddy street, has established a plant at Berkeley, Calif., for the refilling of mercury arc rectifiers and for all kinds of glass work connected with the moving picture business. He has been handling this class of work for some time, but is now engaging in it on a larger scale than ever.

Producing Company Very Busy.

San Rafael, Calif.—Marked success has been met with by the California Motion Picture Corporation in booking "The Unwritten Law," direct to exhibitors in California. Three prints are now working in the northern part of the state and long runs are the rule. At Sacramento, for instance, where three or four days are considered a long run, the production has been booked for a solid week at the Strand.

"Myra" Dinner Planned.

San Francisco, Calif.—Plans are being made for a "Mysteries of Myra" dinner and high jinks to be tendered the one hundred and more exhibitors in the San Francisco territory, who have booked this serial. Those who attend will be garbed in weird costumes and both the dinner and the entertainment will be thoroughly in keeping with the mysticism of the serial.

New Concerns Incorporate.

San Francisco, Calif.—The Animated Cartoon Film Corporation has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000 by F. W. Burgh, J. F. Forbes and T. L. Ford.

Articles of incorporation of the Stereoscopic Motion Picture Company have been filed by J. D. Grant, J. T. Edwards, V. L. Dumen, H. N. Duhem and Purcell Rowe. The capital stock is placed at $50,000.

"Battle Cry of Peace" Scores Hit.

Berkeley, Calif.—For four days the "Battle Cry of Peace" was shown to capacity houses at the Berkeley T. & D. theater, scoring one of the greatest successes ever witnessed in the College City. The production was well advertised and the plans for a number of novel stunts were worked out by former Manager M. O. Leonhard before his departure for Portland, Ore.

New Theaters Open

T & D Theater and A & H Hippodrome Inaugurate Their Shows With Fine Success—M. O. Leonhart Manages T & D—Municipal Red Tape and Censorship Are Disagreeable Features Encountered by New Enterprises.

By Abraham Nelson, Special Correspondent, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, Ore.—Two big theaters have been added to the city's list of photoplay houses. The Ackerman and Harris Hippodrome, featuring photoplays and filling in with vaudeville, opened May 10. Although the opening day was in the middle of the week, the house enjoyed excellent patronage. About noon a line formed at the box office and by 1 o'clock, the opening hour, it was nearly two blocks long. The "Hip" has enjoyed S R O business since the opening day. The opening picture program consisted of the Gold Rooster play, "Big Jim Garrity," a "Lonesome Luke" comedy and a Pathe scenic. The vaudeville acts are booked through the Affiliated Booking Corporation and the Western States Vaudeville Managers' Association. Irving Ackerman of San Francisco and Adolph Ramish of Los Angeles were in Portland for the opening of the Hippodrome. The theater men already established in the city forgot their feeling of rivalry, if any existed, and joined in sending the Hippodrome a floral offering for the opening. The tribute was in the shape of a horseshoe bearing a legend of good wishes and was large enough to occupy a big portion of the Hippodrome's spacious lobby.

T. & D. Opens with Straight Pictures.

The T & D theater, Portland's biggest straight photoplay house, opened Sunday, May 14, to record breaking business. The Billie Burke serial, "Gloria's Romance," was featured together with Lubin's "Dollars and the Woman." A twelve-piece orchestra, the largest theater orchestra in the city, accompanied the pictures and an elaborate stage set was prepared for the Lubin feature.

M. O. Leonhart is manager of the new T & D. He hales from Berkeley, where he managed the local T & D house, and has been associated with Turner and Dahnken for four years.

Among the many changes that have been made to turn the T & D into a stright picture theater, the changes in the lamp room are important. This has been nearly doubled in size, new ventilators constructed and two Power's machines installed. The throw is 135 feet to an 18x24 screen.

Red Tape and Censors Bother.

The two new theatrical enterprises were confronted by the necessity of being compelled to unwind an excess of municipal red tape that the present administration has sought to wrap about the permission to transact legitimate business in Portland. The men who assisted in getting the two theaters ready for opening spoke not pleasantly of their dealings with the city administration and one man declared that with the batteries of municipal inspectors and investigators it was a wonder to him that the theater was ever opened at all.

The censor board initiated the T & D right off the bat. The board's viewers refused to pass "God's Country and the Woman," which was intended for the opening and the picture was put to the regular censor board on the Saturday afternoon before the Sunday show. Bruce Johnson saved any unpleasantnes with the board by substituting "Dollars and the Woman" at the last minute. Tom North made a flying trip down from Seattle when he heard of the board's action.

Audiences Want Mixed Programs.

Oregon City, Ore.—W. A. Long, manager of the Star theater here, recently took a vote from his patrons on the length of pictures they preferred. The result was big odds in favor of mixed programs of one, two and three reels. However, preference was shown for features one or two days a week. The growing tendency in the West to mix pictures with vaudeville also received attention from Mr. Long in his quest for opinions and he stated that the number of people who wanted vaudeville with their pictures and those who did not were about equal.

Business Good in Central Oregon.

Portland, Ore.—H. H. Brownell, travelling for Pathe out of this city, recently returned from a trip through the central part of the state, a territory not often made by road men, and stated that nearly all the theaters there were enjoying prosperity. At Bend there are now two theaters, the Dream, R. C. Rudow, and the Bend, Caltow and Donner. At Redmond a theater is operated by Mrs. Dobbs and at Heppner J. B. Sparks's house, the Star, is the only one in operation. C. C. Ghormely has leased his theater at Enterprise to S A. Gardinier, formerly of the Arcade at La Grande.

Service Film Company Moves.

Portland, Ore.—The Service Film Company is now established on Film Row next door to the General Film exchange. The number is 393 Oak street. Manager Pumphrey stated that the company would handle equipment exclusively and did not intend to enter into the exchange end of the business. The company has arranged to handle all machine parts in stock, obviating the long delays to which the exhibitors were formerly subjected in being required to send away for parts. The Service Film Company is the Pacific Northwest distributors for the American Standard machines and agent for other companies.

The Reliable Film, a New Exchange.

Portland, Ore.—The Reliable Film Service, organized by C. H. Johnson and E. A. Stone, has occupied the former quarters of the Service Film Company at 66 Broadway. The storeroom has been remodeled and enlarged and new fixtures have been installed. W. A. Stone, formerly president of the Service Film Company and well known in the film rental business in the Pacific Northwest, will handle the film department of the new concern. Peerless and United Service has been lined up. The new company will also handle films for outright sale and D. J. Chatkin, vice-president of the United Service, will visit Portland soon on business in connection with this department of the new company. An adequate projecting room will be maintained for outside films as well as for those of the company. Mr. Johnson, the president of the new company, was formerly a contractor in Portland.

Theater Notes of Interest.

Centralia, Wash.—The City Commission here appointed a censor board at the request of the Women's Civic Club. The board consists of seven members headed by Rev. C. W. DuBois.

Albany, Ore.—E. W. Hughes has sold the Opera House to C. W. Repass, formerly a real estate man of Portland.

Portland, Ore.—Lou Camplan, who with Zola Brooks conducts the Star theater at Goldendale, Wash., and J. H. Rose, owner of the Dome theater, Toledo, Ore., were in Portland recently booking service.

Portland, Ore.—Pete Sabo recently sold a new Power's 6A to the People's theater. The People's has another Power's 6A they have used for four years.

Portland, Ore.—H. W. Francis of the Pathe serial department was a recent visitor in Portland in the interests of Pathe's new serial, "The Grip of Evil." The story will run in the Evening Telegram.

BIG ORGAN'S PREMIER.

Salt Lake City's American Has Immense Instrument.

By H. W. Pickering, Salt Lake Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—An audience of 3,500 people, the largest ever assembled at a motion picture theater in this city, was present at the American on Tuesday night, May 9, at the dedication of the gigantic new pipe organ.

The occasion was made notable through the presence of Governor William Spry of Utah, members of the military staff, Mayor W. Mont Ferry of Salt Lake, the city commissioners and other officials of the state and city government. President Joseph F. Smith and other authorities of the Mormon Church and many pastors of leading denominational churches were also present.

The formal address of the evening was made by Governor Spry.

The program began with a short speech by Maurice Tobin, the new manager of the American, Rex and Liberty theaters. Mr. Tobin introduced William H. Swanson as "the first exhibitor of motion pictures in the United States and the founder of the Universal Film Company."

At the conclusion of Governor Spry's speech, Prof. John J. McClellan, who is also organist at Mormon tabernacle, played the "Grand Toccata in F," by Widor, followed by "The Rosary," and "My Old Kentucky Home." All three selections were tumultously applauded and the organist responded with "The Star Spangled Banner" as an encore, during which the audience arose and the flag was flashed on the screen.

Summer Films at the Orpheum.

Salt Lake City.—Beginning May 27, the Orpheum theater will show motion picture features throughout the summer, with the exception of a week or so of a brief grand opera season next month. The pictures will continue at the big vaudeville house until the resumption of the regular circuit season next August.

C. W. Meighan With Swanson Circuit.

Salt Lake City.—Charles W. Meighan is now publicity director for the Swanson circuit houses in Salt Lake and is manager of the Rex and Liberty, under direction of W. Maurice Tobin. E. C. Schmidt continues as editor of the Swanson Circuit News, the weekly newspaper of the three houses.

IN NEBRASKA.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Filming Local History.

OMAHA, Neb.—Historical events of Nebraska are being reproduced in moving pictures by Frank A. Harrison, a newspaper man, under the auspices of the Territorial Pioneers' Association. He visits the scenes and wherever possible secures actual participants in the events and uses local residents to play the other parts. Simultaneously he is writing a series of articles dealing with these historical events. The series is being published by the Omaha News. None can estimate the value as the years go by of these events caught while the memory is fresh.

Oxford, Neb.—J. B. Reed has purchased the Gem theater.

OLD-TIME FILM MAN.

Long Service of J. M. Robertson of the Dominion.

By E. C. Thomas, Special Correspondent, 821 Rogers Bldg., Vancouver, B. C.

VICTORIA, B. C.—J. M. Robertson, manager of the Dominion theater in Victoria, is in point of service the oldest employee of the J. R. Muir of the Dominion Theater Company, having been associated with him in the early days of the industry in this province, when Mr. Muir conducted an exchange in Vancouver, handling Kleine releases. When the General Film Co. came into the territory and absorbed the exchange, Mr. Robertson took a position with them, and continued there for a year. On the completion of the Dominion theater in Vancouver he returned to the service of Mr. Muir, and when a year and a half later the Dominion in Victoria was built, he was placed in charge of that house.

Mr. Robertson is probably as well qualified to manage a moving picture theater as any man in this territory, as in addition to acting as manager for several years he is a qualified operator, an accomplished pianist and organist, and in the early days was a singer of illustrated songs, having taken up this work shortly after his arrival here from Scotland. He is a firm believer in the value of personal acquaintance with his patrons and in personal attention given to anticipating their desires, and the line of automobiles in front of the Dominion seems to indicate that his policy is the correct one.

Paramount pictures are shown at the Dominion, and Mr. Robertson reports that business is very satisfactory.

Earnest British Columbia Censorship.

Vancouver, B. C.—The Universal feature, "The Campbells Are Coming," has been rejected by the British Columbia censor, and it is stated that the reason behind the move is that Indian troops are shown in revolt against the British, whereas they are now fighting for the Empire. In view of the fact that the picture has been passed in other provinces, and has been used for recruiting purposes by the military authorities, its rejection for this cause seems somewhat inconsistent.

Vancouver Notes.

Winnipeg, Man.—The Starland theater is becoming widely known as the house of serials. Having completed "Graft" early in the month, the ones now being shown are "The Iron Claw," "Peg o' the Ring" and "The Red Circle."

Nelson, B. C.—The O-Row-Nay theaters, comprising the Gem at Nelson, the Star at Trail, and the Orpheum at Fernie, have contracted for Triangle features, and will run them for two days at each house. A few Big Four productions, which the Triangles are superseding as the program handled by the National Film Service, will be shown at these houses, and the feature admission price of 25 cents will be reduced temporarily to 15 cents on the balance of the Big Fours.

"Sixty Years a Queen" was run at the Gem in this city on the late Queen's birthday, and on the following day at Trail. "Tillie's Nightmare" is booked for an early showing.

Winnipeg, Man.—The Orpheum theater, playing Orpheum Circuit vaudeville, closed the 1915-16 season here May 6, and Manager E. J. Sullivan has left for New York.

Vancouver, B. C.—Manager James Pilling of the Orpheum theater did his best week's business in many months during the recent engagement at his house of "Canada's Fighting Forces," the official Canadian Government films, which were shown for the entire week of May 1 at prices ranging from 25 cents to $1.

Taxing Theater Patrons

Ontario Authorities Issue Tax Tickets to Go with Regular Admissions—Rates Are One Cent for Seats Costing to Ten Cents; Two Cents, Up to 50 Cents; Five Cents, to One Dollar; Ten Cents for Higher Priced Seats.

By W. M. Gladish, Special Correspondent, 1236 Garrard St., Toronto, Can.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.— Moving picture and theater patrons of Ontario from May 15th have been astir, because of the enactment of the Amusement Tax Act for the Province and also because of the application of important amendments to the Theaters and Cinematographs Act.

Starting that day the theater-goers purchasing an admission ticket not in excess of ten cents are required to pay a tax of one cent. For admission tickets, the price of which does not exceed 50 cents, the schedule of war tax rates calls for an assessment of two cents. Tickets of from 50 cents to $1 call for an extra 5 cents. On all tickets over $1 the tax is 10 cents. As a start the Government, through the provincial treasurer's department, made and distributed 10,000,000 tickets in reels of 2,000 each, the great majority being the one and two cent denominations. The authorities, incidentally, expect to dispose of at least 60,000,000 tax tickets during the coming year.

Arrangements have been made whereby a local officer in each city and town will look after the sale of the pasteboards to the exhibitors, but the moving picture exchanges at Toronto have also been given the privilege of distributing the coupons to the theater managers. The exhibitors are given a commission of ten per cent. and seven and one-half per cent. to enable the show managers to cover the cost of extra help at entrances if necessary and to pay the cost of a chopping machine in the lobby, which is now required by law.

Exhibitors will be required, under the new act, to make weekly reports to the Government of attendance figures and the number of war tickets sold during the week. With the use of turnstiles, which register the number of people admitted, no tax tickets need be sold to patrons, although the tax must be collected from the people in some way. In this instance sworn returns must be made to the Department at the close of each day.

Pass Holders Also Pay.

Under the provisions of the act passholders are not exempted—in fact the only persons who escape, beyond the employes in a theater, are the Government inspectors. In case a theater proprietor runs out of his supply of tickets, he must still continue to collect the tax by taking the money from the patrons. In this event he must make a return of the actual money so taken to the department at Toronto. By arrangement with the Government it will be permissible for the ticket-seller in the box office to deposit the war tax tickets in the chopper in which case the theater patron will not handle a tax coupon at all.

The decision of the Government is that patrons of fall fairs, country exhibitions, patriotic and church concerts are not affected by the act. In the event of patriotic events, however, the promoters must show that the proceeds are really for the announced purpose.

The Provincial Treasurer is empowered to revoke the license of any theater where a contravention of the act is proved. There are minor penalties for offences against the law, however. The responsibility of collecting the assessment is placed entirely on the shoulders of the exhibitors and show managers, however, who will, of course, have to pay for the tax coupons in advance.

Exhibitors Must Buy Two Licenses.

On the same day that the Amusement Tax Act went into force in Ontario the changes in the act governing the operation of the theaters themselves also became effective. An important feature of the modifications is that municipalities are now not only authorized to license local moving picture theaters when the latter are licensed by the Provincial Government, but they are obliged to do so. Every exhibitor in Ontario will, therefore, be required to pay for two licenses, a provincial and city or town license, in future. Many, so far, have escaped with only one license. The municipalities, further, are empowered to supervise and restrict the constructional features of new picture houses while the inspection department of the Provincial Hyro-Electric System, a Government corporation, now has charge of the installation and inspection of wiring, generators, transformers, etc.

The changes also provide for the equipment of theaters with standpipes whereever there is not a local water system.

The act now provides that no municipality shall issue a license to any theater until a Provincial license can be produced and also that no municipality can refuse to issue a license to any holder of a Provincial certificate.

Oh, wonderful and comprehensive is law!

Summer Films at Shea's.

Toronto, Ontario.—J. Shea, manager of Shea's theater, Toronto, the finest vaudeville house in Canada, has turned to moving pictures for the summer season in place of the usual stock company engagement. The prices will not exceed twenty-five cents for the evening shows.

Universal's Essay Contest.

Toronto, Ontario.—During the past six weeks the Canadian Universal has conducted an essay contest for boys and girls, through the medium of the Toronto Star Weekly, to ascertain what style of pictures the children liked to see.

Rebuilt Theater Burns.

Orillia, Ontario.—After L. W. Robbins has just completed the transformation of the Orillia hockey rink into an attractive moving picture theater at a cost of $2,500, the building was destroyed by fire. The theater had not yet been opened. The insurance amounted to only $900.

Schreiber House Opens.

Schreiber, Ontario.—The Princess theater, the only amusement house in this village, has been reopened as a picture house after being dark for many weeks.

Toronto World Has Film Section.

Toronto, Ontario.—The Toronto World, a local morning paper, has adopted the policy of running a motion picture section every day. The Sunday edition of this publication has long published a moving picture department which invariably occupies three whole pages.

New Incorporations.

Toronto, Ontario.—The Maple Leaf Amusement Company, Limited, has received its incorporation papers to own and operate moving picture theaters throughout the Province. The authorized capital is $40,000.

Canada Amusements, Limited, is the name of another newly incorporated company with the same amount of capital and organized for the same purposes.

VIM.

BABY DOLL (May 25). Business having slackened with Plump and Runt, our small friend decides to write to his uncle for a little cash. Uncle tells him to make a man of himself by marrying. To this, Runt immediately replies saying that he has taken a spouse, and arranges with Plump to impersonate the lady.

Uncle leaves the farm to visit his new relative and on his way is inveigled into a flirtation with Plump who is returning from the costumer arrayed in female attire. So delighted is Plump with his powers of deception that he encourages the old man to the point where the gay old sport will not quit. Time is passing and Plump has to rid himself of his too ardent admirer by dropping him into the river.

Poor Runt, meanwhile, is in a fever of anxiety at his proud wife's non-appearance. Finally, Plump arrives and relates his experience as a female impersonator. On the point of giving up hope of the uncle's visit, Plump is about to disrobe, when Uncle arrives and meeting his erstwhile charmer, bursts out into rage. Unhappily for him, his wife, who has also determined to visit her nephew, appears on the scene. Caught between two fires, poor Uncle has to keep quiet and incidentally part with the $5,000.

KALEM.

A ROGUE'S NEMESIS (Episode No. 7 of the "Social Pirates"—Two Parts—May 8).—The cast: Mona (Marin Sais); Mary (Ollie Kirkby); Goodwin Clay (Thomas Lingham); "Buck" Minter (Frank Jonasson); The Judge (Edward Clisbee). Directed by James W. Horne.

At the trial of the Clay divorce suit, Mona and Mary have their sympathy aroused for the wife who is being cast off by means of perjured testimony. Learning that she has been left penniless, they set about to teach Clay a lesson and also secure funds for the wife. Mary arouses Clay's interest, but appears to be intensely afraid of her jealous husband, whom she describes as an eccentric musician. The trap is laid, and with Mona masquerading as the husband, Clay is forced to pay a bitter penalty for his wrongs.

THE TANK TOWN TROUPE (May 9).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); The Sheriff (A. Edmondson); His Daughter (Norma Nicholls). Directed by Harry Edwards.

Ham and Bud are seen as "The Balance Brothers," a traveling acrobatic act. When they stop at the sheriff's house on their way to the village the music of their bass drum and trombone causes the sheriff to ask, "Can it be angels playing?" Especially do they score with the sheriff's fair daughter. Her stage ambitions, given new flame, she steals away from the homestead the following morning to follow the "actors." The sheriff also follows, with dire thoughts concerning Ham and Bud, who are entirely innocent. In the midst of their vaudeville act—which, by the way, is a scream—the sheriff and his cowboy friends bust up the show. A chase follows that brings one exciting happening after another clear up to a smashing finish.

NOT WHAT THE DOCTOR ORDERED (May 10).—The cast: Jennie (Ethel Teare); Monty (Jack MacDermott); Brown (Victor Rottman); The Butler (Gus Leonard); The Nurse (Myrta Sterling). Author, Burk Symon.

Brown thinks he is sick—until the doctor writes out a yard-long prescription and says that he is sending a nurse around to keep the invalid in the house. The real nurse has an engagement so she consents to let Jennie, who would be a nurse, take her place. Monty arrives on a visit to Brown just in time to see the pretty nurse on her way, and when he hears Brown's complaint readily offers to be a substitute invalid. All works well until Brown also gets a view of the nurse, and then there is a fight to see just who will be the invalid. Brown plans revenge and before long everything is in a tangle and poor Jennie has a hard time tending all the invalids in the house.

A LUNCH ROOM LEGACY (May 12).—The cast: Sis Hopkins (Rose Melville); the chef (Henry Murdock); the proprietor (Richard Purdon); the cashier (Mary Kennedy); the dancer (Olive West); the lawyer (Frank Minzey); his clerk (Arthur Albertson). Author, Samuel J. Taylor. Director, Robert Ellis.

Word that she has inherited a restaurant causes Sis to pack up and leave the farm. On her arrival in the city the lawyer's clerk takes her to the restaurant which turns out to be a fashionable cabaret palace. Sis proceeds to clean up according to her own quaint ideas of what a restaurant should be. The cabaret dancer is put to washing the dishes, the waiters quit because they are not allowed to take tips, the substitute waiters' incompetence and Indifferent Ignatz's mixtures as chef cause the newspapers to glory in the new foreign restaurant novelty.

THE BRIDGE OF DANGER (No. 79 of the "Hazards of Helen"—May 13).—The cast: The Operator (Helen Gibson); Superintendent Thomas (Roy Watson); Bob Bates (P. Pembroke); "Pop" Bates (G. A. Williams). Author, Herman Blackman. Producer, James Davis.

The new superintendent is an apostle of Efficiency. His first order on taking the post eliminates the men whom he terms old, which costs "Pop" Bates his job as Helen's relief operator. His next declaration is that active railroad work is no place for women, and Helen is also dropped from the service. While Helen is breaking the news to Bob Bates, the new superintendent is bustling about the road yard speeding up the work. "Put more snap into your switching," he tells the men.

A minute later, while he is making an inspection inside a box car with defective airbrakes, a switching engine rams the car. The force of the impact—heightened by the recent orders—throws the superintendent to the floor stunned, and starts the car on the down grade. In a few moments it is speeding along the road and there is consternation among the men for a washout down the road means that it is headed to certain destruction.

Helen prevails on Bob to set out in pursuit in his engine on the parallel track for a daring plan has suggested itself to her. After a thrilling pursuit they arrive alongside the box car and Helen throws a lasso over the brakebeam. Climbing out from the cab she then goes hand over hand to the box car. There is a tense struggle with the brakes before the car is brought to a stop within inches of the washout point. Needless to say, the superintendent's ideas of efficiency are somewhat altered by his experience.

LUBIN.

FRILBY FRILLED (May 29).—The cast: Svengarlic (Davy Don); Frilby (Patsy De Forest); Diggo (George Egan); Gilly (Charles Ebbinger); Sculptor (Bernard Siegel). Written and directed by Edwin McKim.

Svengarlic, a German musician, discovers by accident that he is a human magnet. While playing the piano at a friend's studio he meets Frilby, the artist's model, who insists he hear her sing Ben Bolt. Her singing is bad. Svengarlic tries his powers. While under the mesmeric spell she sings so well everyone is held under the spell.

Svengarlic arranges a concert to make her debut. Frilby enters, but cannot sing. Svengarlic from a box makes the mystic passes, but his power is waning. He hurries away to the city power house to absorb more of the deadly current, only to find the engineer on the lookout.

Frilby's young lover having watched Svengarlic on a previous trip to the power house bribed the engineer not to allow Svengarlic in, and to stop the dynamo at 9 o'clock. Svengarlic rushes madly back to the theater, where everything is in an uproar. He enters, but his power is gone. Frilby's lover jumps upon the stage takes her in his arms and rushes out.

THE FINAL PAYMENT (Two Parts—May 30).—The cast: Richard Ayres (L. C. Shumway); Effie—his wife (Helen Eddy); Mrs. May Benton (Velma Whitman); Douglas Benton (Melvin Mayo); The Burglar (George Routh). Written by Maude Thomas. Directed by Leon D. Kent.

Richard Ayres, a young clerk, gives his butterfly wife, Effie, for safe keeping, the final payment on their bungalow. Effie is invited to an afternoon party by her rich friend, Mrs. Benton, and takes the money with her. Mrs. Benton's guests indulge in a game of bridge. Effie is surprised to learn that they are playing for money, but with foolish pride, pays what she owes, although it take all her savings. Mrs. Benton slips the money in her purse. In the purse is a pendant which Mr. Benton has that day given her. Mrs. Benton hastens to keep a dinner engagement with her husband at the country club, and in her hurry leaves her front door ajar.

Effie stops to rest in the park, and discovers that she has left her scarf at the Benton home. She returns for it and, finding the door open, enters. She calls for Mrs. Benton, and receiving no answer, gets her scarf from the bedroom. There she sees Mrs. Benton's purse. There is a struggle with temptation, but she finally succumbs and puts the purse in her bosom. She then disarranges the room to give the impression that burglars have broken in. Then she goes home. A burglar watches her from the window.

Effie is horrified to find that the purse contains not only the money but the pendant. She puts it in her dresser as she hears her husband coming. He notices her agitation, and she feigns illness. That night the burglar enters Effie's room and steals the purse. He is chased by a policeman, and throws the purse under shrubbery in the park. The next morning, Ayres shows his wife the paper which gives an account of how a burglar entered the Benton home. Effie is agitated. She goes to her room and finds the purse gone. Her husband telephones that he forgot to take the money with him, but will be home promptly at noon.

Effie wanders to the park. A child finds the purse under the shrubbery and Effie sees her. After a little persuasion, the child gives her the purse. Effie's better self then awakens, and she determines to go to Mrs. Benton and make a clean breast of everything. But her courage fails her, and she sends a newsboy with the purse instead. Mrs. Benton is overjoyed at the recovery. Effie goes home to await her husband. He enters and she is about to confess all as she sees him going to the hiding place for the money, when there comes a ring at the door. She opens it and there is Mrs. Benton's maid with a note. Effie opens the envelope feverishly, and there is the cherished money. The note states that Mrs. Benton knows that Effie's position is not such that she can afford to lose such a sum as this, and that Mrs. Benton meant to return the money the day before, but had forgotten to do so. Effie goes to her husband, and with a glad smile hands him the money, saying, "Here it is! Haven't I taken good care of it?"

THE CODE OF THE HILLS (Three Parts—June 1).—The cast: Jim Lane (Melvin Mayo); Matt Lane (Millard Wilson); Mrs. Lane (Adelaide Bronti); Judge Cary (Bird Hopkins); Robert Emerson (Cecil Van Auker); Nan Lane (Lucy Payton); Grace Caldwell (Evelyn Page); Nan—the daughter (Lucy Payton). Written by Millard Wilson. Directed by Melvin Mayo.

Robert Emerson, a rising young District Attorney, is ordered to the mountains for his health. While hunting one day he accidentally wounds Nancy Lane, adopted daughter of Mrs. Lane, and a love affair springs up. Nan is loved by Jim Lane, the leader of the Lane Clan, who, with his younger brother, Matt, is jealous of the "furriner." The girl loses her heart to the stranger and after an impetuous wooing a wedding takes place.

Back in the city, the mountain girl soon feels the difference between her husband's friends and herself. Unused to society ways, Nan's mistakes embarrass her husband and his lack of patience starts a coolness between them. Unwittingly she offends a political power, whose assistance Emerson was seeking, and the breach between husband and wife widens, until finally stung by her husband's indifference, Nan returns to the mountains not telling Robert of her approaching motherhood.

The baby girl arrives but Nan does not recover and in her delirium constantly calls for her husband. Believing his presence might pull her through, Lane travels to the city and forces Emerson to come to his wife. They arrive too late. Nan has died, exacting a promise from Mrs. Lane not to tell her husband of the arrival of the baby. Emerson returns to the city alone and ignorant of his parentage. Back in his home, he realizes Nan's true worth and his own shortcomings and devotes himself entirely to his profession.

The daughter, Nan, grows to girlhood, ignorant of her father's name. She is worshipped by her "Uncle Jim and Uncle Matt" and one day insulted by a member of the opposite clan she tells them about it. Jim's gun is taken from the mantel and the man is killed. Jim is arrested for the murder, and through the strange workings of fate the two enemies, Lane and Emerson, come face to face at the trial, Emerson being the Judge. Lane is found guilty and sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary.

The news of his conviction is brought to the hills and Nan filled with rage and hate against the man who sentenced her Uncle Jim, starts to the city to kill him. Unknown to her, Matt has also gone to the city, where, seeking out Emerson, he confesses to the murder of Powell, explaining the circumstances. The Judge immediately writes the Governor, requesting Lane's pardon, when Nan enters and is about to carry out her threat and kill Emerson when Matt explains the relationship between the two.

PICKLES AND DIAMONDS (June 3).—The cast: Adolph Pfefferschnitzel (Francis Joyner); Louisa Pfefferschnitzel (Florence Williams); Lena (June Daye); Elliott Leffingwell (Kempton Greene). Written by Dave Reed. Directed by Clay M. Greene.

Adolph Pfefferschnitzel, proprietor of the once prosperous Peerless Pickle Emporium, finds his business on the verge of failure. Consultation with his wife results in the decision that the only remedy to avoid ruin is to find a rich husband for their daughter, Lena, and inveigle him into buying a half interest in the pickle factory. Lena protests but when she sees father's bank book showing a cash balance of $1,000, she approves of the plan. Father agrees to place Lena on exhibition as the daughter of the "Peerless Pickle King," hoping to attract the desired rich husband. They finally become established in sumptuous quarters in Atlantic City.

Conspicuous among the guests of the hotel is Elliott Leffingwell, who poses as owner of vast diamond fields in South Africa, but who is merely a fortune hunter there on the same mission as Lena. Attracted at once by Lena's striking appearance, he immediately lays plans to annex himself to the old man's money. A dance at the hotel that night brings about the meeting. Father, fooled by Elliott's appearance and talk, thinks he has landed the object of his search, so does all in his power to hasten the match. But the pace finally becomes too speedy for father, his money giving out, so he suddenly returns with his flock to their city home. Elliott follows.

One night Elliott decides that the time is ripe to test his chances of separating father from some of his coin so decides to sell him an interest in his business for the paltry sum of $10,000, and by a strange coincidence, father has devised the same scheme at the same time and for the same amount of money. They meet at father's office. Father boasts that he has just received an order for a million pickles. Elliott, not to be outdone, boasts that he has just filled an order for a million diamonds. Father, awed by Elliott's bluff, hurriedly signs a check for Elliott, expecting his money in return but Elliott assures him he will settle his obligation as soon as the steamer arrives bringing his draft from London. Father is suspicious after Elliott leaves, calls up his bank to ask them to "swing" the amount, but the president angrily upbraids him. Finding the check "N. G." Elliott returns and threatens father with violence for trying to cheat him.

Lena, meanwhile, having called at the office tries to pacify Elliott. Father shows him a bona fide large order he has just received, promises to make good, and tells him to take Lena as security. He then asks Elliott for his money. Elliott replies, "The steamer has been sunk by a German submarine." Father glad to lose his money for the German cause promises Elliott a half interest in his business for a wedding present, and tells him he may perhaps make a good pickle salesman.

SELIG.

SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 37 (May 8).

With the U. S. Troops in Mexico.—After a long hot march through the sand and cactus, with the alkali dust grinding into every pore, a bit of a stream like this seems mighty welcome.

Ft. Bliss, Texas.—Sending these troops into Mexico and leaving the border unprotected, results in a raid by Villa bandits at Glen Springs, in which three troopers and one boy are killed.

San Francisco, Cal.—Spring is ushered in here with a street pageant and unusual attractive May-pole dances by the children.

THE HARE AND THE TORTOISE (Three Parts—May 29).—The cast: John Drake (Harry Mestayer); Sidney Drake (Edw. J. Piel); Richard Drake (Harry Lonsdale); Marion Lee (Fritzi Brunette); Mrs. Lee (Lillian Hayward); Ethel Martin (Edith Johnson); Guy Benedict (Wm. Scott). Written by Wm. Anthony McGuire. Directed by Wm. Robert Daly.

Brothers and classmates, John and Sidney Drake are opposites. John is studious—a plodder, while Sidney thinks only of his own pleasure. While John plods along working hard for success on graduation day, Sidney springs lightly here and there like the festive hare. The result is that Sidney Drake shines at football, but fails to receive his diploma.

Richard Duke, the millionaire father of the boys, resolves to start them in his steel mills and learn the business from the ground up. "If I must toil with my hands," exclaims Sidney, "I shall not work."

Both boys love beautiful Marion Lee—John secretly, but no less earnestly—Sidney, with that glittering superficiality that marks him. John has always stepped aside that his more brilliant brother may have his way. More and more does Sidney Drake waste his time in riotous living, and when the father of the boys dies, the result is that the steel mills go to the more steady son, John, while Sidney is given a hundred thousand dollars.

Sidney squanders his money in the wheat pit, and returns to his brother with a plea for funds. Desperate, because the money is not forthcoming, Sidney says, "John, you love Marion. You can have her if you will give me money." John draws a check, saying, "I shall give you the money in order to save Marion from you." The girl overhears the pact, and from that minute holds Sidney Drake in contempt.

Sidney squanders his newly acquired wealth just as he did his inheritance, and in the end becomes penniless and a wanderer, while John Drake, who has been held in such disdain, wins Marion. Written and produced by Tom Mix.

CROOKED TRAILS (June 3).—The cast: Dick Taylor (Tom Mix); Irene Norris (Victoria Forde); Wm. Norris (Pat Chrisman); John Robertson (Sid Jordan); Poncho (Joe Ryan). Written and produced by Tom Mix.

Irene Norris returns to the ranch from boarding school. She sees Dick Taylor, ranch foreman, win over Poncho, a half-breed, in a bucking broncho contest. She admires Dick's ability as a rider, and a friendship springs up between them much to the rage of Poncho, who loves the girl.

Robertson, a cattle buyer, visits the ranch with a large sum of money. Poncho resolves to get this money, and with confederates, captures Robertson, but not before Irene, who is with him, makes a sensational escape. Dick and the cowboys seeing Poncho in pursuit of Vicky, capture him. They then go in pursuit of the other outlaws, surround them and after a battle in which Dick is wounded, the desperadoes are overcome.

ESSANAY.

THE CONDEMNATION (Two Parts—May 23).—The cast: Clara Stewart (Nell Craig); John Stewart (Darwin Karr); Roger Noel (Edmund F. Cobb); Guilberta Allen (Jane Thomas).

John Stewart is greatly jealous of his wife. That she danced twice with Richard Noel, fiance of a girl friend, Guilberta Allen, while the four were together in a cafe, made him furious. However, next day he invites his wife to take lunch with him downtown as a peace offering. She pleasantly declines, pleading indisposition. Guilberta calls to exhibit flowers sent her by Roger and persuades her to meet him at lunch. John is absent from his office and they cannot locate him to include him in the party. He happens to drop into the same cafe just as Guilberta goes to telephone, leaving Mrs. Stewart and Roger seated at the table.

Only the return of the girl erases his sudden fury. But the pang of jealousy has not yet been eradicated from Stewart's make-up. The day following the girl again visits Mrs. Stewart to tell of a lovers' quarrel. The latter attempts to arrange matters. She dresses the younger woman in one of her prettiest frocks and phones Roger to come to her home immediately. Crossed wires put Stewart on the line and he is vivid with rage. He rushes home and seeing Guilberta in his wife's dress clasped in the arms of Roger, in the room beyond, points a revolver at them. His wife rushes in before he shoots. The young couple are unaware of the action. John Stewart, prostrated by the narrowly averted tragedy caused by his ungovernable jealousy, has learned his lesson and his wife is content.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL NO 10 AND SCENIC (May 24).—Miss Stake, a society girl who makes a pet of a monkey, is pictured in the Canimated Nooz of this issue. Because of a certain resemblance the artist nnds it necessary to indicate which is the pet monkey. Pete and his "Kelly" get caught in the rain and another argument against buds for masculine hat trimming is furnished. Kernel Willyum Jenninks Bryan demonstrates how our defenses are adequate. The pop-gun, which is absolutely harmless, is a very effective means of fighting the enemy, he maintains.

When the pop-gun does not frighten them away more violent means are resorted to—the squirt gun and grape juice. When the juice fails to blind the advancing enemy dash a number of cream puffs in their faces and shout, "So there! Take that—and that!"

THE SCHEMERS (Three Parts—May 27).—The cast: Roy Jones (John Junior); Bill Barton (Harry Dunkinson); Grace Melville (Elizabeth Burbridge); Mrs. Melville (Francis Raymond).

Roy Jones and Bill Barton, money gone, leave college. The boys dislike to see them go as they were great favorites. One young Frenchman especially is perturbed. A letter reaches the boys at that moment telling that an obscure uncle has left them his estate. They hasten to the village where he lived and discover the estate consists of a general store, submerged in debt. Percival Van Bergen, a young millionaire, drives into the village after a wild night and is so hungry he buys the whole store for $300 to get something to eat.

The boys take the money and go to the city. They become stock brokers. Roy spends most of his time making love to Miss Jane, the stenographer, and Barton is keeping off the bill collectors. The young Frenchman bursts in on them and announces he has a commission from his government to purchase two million dollars worth of ammunition. The boys persuade him they are the proper persons to execute the order. From Van Bergen, who does not recognize them, they obtain an advance of $1,000. The war order is forgotten and they go to a winter resort and Barton poses as Van Bergen, with Jones as his secretary.

Barton and Grace Melville fall in love and elope. Van Bergen comes in time to discover the deception and have Jones arrested. Barton confesses all to the girl and she marries him anyway. However, they haven't any money to pay the justice and he has them arrested. At the jail they meet Van Bergen, Jones and Mrs. Melville. As the boys are about to be thrown into cells the Frenchman and Miss Jane appear and square everything with Van Bergen. The young millionaire and the boys decide to form a company to manufacture the war supplies and connect with the $2,000,000 of the French Government. Miss Jane and Roy indicate that another wedding will follow.

THE SONG IN THE DARK (Reissue—2 parts—May 30).—The cast: Richard, Angela's fiance (Richard Travers); Angela (Gerda Holmes); George, her brother (Bryant Washburn); John, a bird vendor (John Cossar).

It was quite natural that Angela and Richard should be engaged. They have been sweethearts since childhood. Angela, who loved nature, purchases a canary from a bird vendor. When she discovered the bird to be blind, she seeks out the vendor. He explains that all birds are blinded purposely, as they sing better thus. She becomes furious and has the vendor arrested. Her brother, George, an attorney, prosecutes the case and the vendor is severely punished. Then fate took a hand. The day was set for the wedding. Everything was in readiness. An accident cost Angela her eyesight. Would Richard forget he had asked her to become his wife? She was blind—never to see light again. But with all she found herself strangely happy with the canary as her only companion.

Richard's ardor had cooled of late. But one evening he was at her home playing chess with George. She stole softly down the stairs and found her way to the piano. When the music reached Richard's ear, he came quietly to her side and said, "It is I who am blind; I love you."

THE FABLE OF THE WILLING COLLEGIAN WHO WANTED TO GET A FOOTHOLD (May 31).—Once there was a young Man with a College Education. He wanted to break into a Learned Profession and get the Coin without working hard for it. The Medical Profession, as a dignified snap, struck him as soft. The Graduate went to the Family Physician for a few tips. "We have in this country," said the "Doc," "four Medical Degrees to every case of Tonsilitis and are kept so close to the Carpet that we buy last year's Magazines to put in the Waiting Room." So the Collegian hurried over to old Judge Caveat to get a side-hold on the Law. "The only ones who get there," said the Judge, "sell their Souls to Corporations and can be elected anything but Senators. Don't join us." The young man sought the Chief of a Big Concern. "We'll start you juggling boxes," he said. "In ten years you will rise to $60 a month, and then at the Wind-up get a Floral Pillow from your Fellow-Employes." "Speculation is very Demoralizing," said the stockbroker to whom he went next. "Buy outright. You can do this after you have earned your first Million as a stenographer." He tried to be an Actor and was told he was a Ham—a sugar-cured Ham. Then a Hunch—Matrimony. Many a girl has money and needs some one to help her count it. All right, be a Gentleman and help her.

MORAL: Every Man knocks his own Line of work and sticks to it like Glue.

OUR PEOPLE (Three Parts—June 3).—The cast: Ed. Bryce (Bryant Washburn); Ellen Calhoun (Gertrude Glover); John Calhoun (Thomas Commerford); Hank Goliday (Richardson Cotton); Aunt Hattie (Florence Oberle).

Ed. Bryce is editor of the Ninevah Free Press. Ninevah is of such size that Ed. can be a regular Horace Greeley. He believes the citizens of the little town to be his people and labors to establish his ideals. "My people" becomes "our people" with the acquisition of Ellen Calhoun, daughter of John Calhoun, the town banker and leading citizen, as his chief assistant and only reporter.

The banker is incensed at the selection of occupation by his daughter, but she likes to meet people and ask them questions so she wins his consent to continue. But when she and Ed. fall in love with each other the old man objects strenuously. He forces Ellen to leave her work. Ed. barred from the Calhoun home, takes up cards and there is constant a midnight session in his office. The constable arrests the party finally. When the case comes up next morning Aunt Hattie, sinfully rich and from the city, goes to see the young man who is in love with her niece, Ellen.

The resourceful aunt finds ways for the two to meet and the courtship progresses. A time of panic comes on, the village feeling its effect. Hank Goliday, the town miser, puts $70,000 in the bank. He is alarmed when the unusual deposit is announced in Ed.'s paper. He hurries back to the bank next day and demands his cash. It is more than the bank can produce and Hank's crazed talk creates a run. The bank is in danger of collapse and John Calhoun is stricken by the shock..

Aunt Hattie comes to the rescue, however, on condition that he give his consent to the marriage. The only way to announce that the rich woman will pay the frightened depositors is through Ed.'s paper. He rushes out Ninevah's only extra in record time. But his word, it seems, is sufficient with the people of Ninevah. The run is frustrated and Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Bryce continue to edit the Free Press for "our people."

THE COWARD'S CODE (Three Parts—May 23).—The cast: Daniel Gordon (Curtis Cooksey); Alice Gordon, his wife (Helen Fulton); Lillian Scott (Grace Williams); Frank Warren (Billy Sherwood); James Scott (Robert Brower); George Barr (later Bentley) (Augustus Collette); Bill Wick (John Sturgeon). Directed by Frank McGlynn.

James Scott, suffering for the crime of another, is sent to the penitentiary for life. George Barr, the guilty man, is blackmailed by Bill Wick, who has seen the crime committed, but has failed to testify at the trial. Anxious to get Wick out of the way, Barr sends him West where, trying to avoid the sheriff, he is mortally wounded. Wishing to clear himself of his terrible secret, he crawls to the cabin of Daniel Gordon, a prosperous miner. Here, before, dying, he makes a complete confession, accusing Barr and telling Gordon how he may be identified.

After having acquired riches in the West, Gordon makes for New York. He marries a worldly society woman, but finds her false to him. Barr meanwhile, unmolested by Wick, has become a wealthy financier and social lion. Through his wife, Gordon meets Barr, now known as Bentley. Unconscious of Bentley's real identity, he becomes his partner in business. Scott has escaped from prison and is living in seclusion with his daughter, Lillian. By a strange twist of circumstances, she is working as stenographer in Gordon's office.

Desirous of winning the affections of Gordon's wife, Bentley attempts to show her that Gordon is unfaithful. He points out the little stenographer and accuses her of having an affair with Gordon. But the justice of God is all-powerful, and ever present. Gordon discovers the villainy of Bentley who has tried to invade his home and to rob him of his fortune. A duel in the dark, and Bentley in death makes amends for his sins in life.

HELEN OF THE CHORUS (Three Parts—May 30).—The cast: Helen Toussot (Sally Crute); Jimmy, a fireman (Herbert Prior); Etien Toussot (Charles H. Martin); Jean Desias (Robert Kegerreis); Lizette Desais (Eldean Steuart); Francois Desais (Loel Steuart); Ed. Morton (Harry Eytinge); Harrigan, ward leader (Bob Harvey); fire chief (John Sturgeon). Author, William Addison Lathrop. Director, George Ridgwell.

Living happily in the same rooming house, Jean Desias and Etien Toussot are disturbed by the news of war. They must return to France to fight for their country. Lizette and Francois, Jean's motherless children, are left in the care of Helen, Etien's daughter. Together with Jimmy, a fireman, rooming in the same house, Helen bids farewell to the two patriots at the steamer's dock. On the way home Helen's purse is stolen and all the money left her to tide over the stormy times of war is gone. She is left penniless. Forced to earn a living for herself and the kiddies, she accepts a position as chorus girl in "Big Ed" Morton's theater. In her innocence, she does not understand the meaning of Morton's attentions to her.

Jimmy has been assigned as fireman to Morton's theater. Helen and he have become fast friends, and spend many evenings together, enjoying the pranks of the kiddies. He welcomes the opportunity of being near her at the theater. Morton has invited his friend, Harrigan, the ward leader to the theater. In a rage, Jimmy watches their ugly advances to Helen. As Harrigan embraces her and whispers an insulting offer, Jimmy springs upon him and soundly thrashes him. Morton, attempting to assist Harrigan, also feels the force of Jimmy's wrath. In revenge, Harrigan exerts his political influence and secures the discharge of Jimmy from the fire department. Morton, enraged by the failure of his aim, discharges Helen.

Little Lizette, searching for her doll, sets the house afire and before long the frame structure is a mass of seething flames. Jimmy, returning from a search for work, sees the fire and, with the instinct of a true fireman and heedless of his own safety, he rushes into the building. Jimmy is in the hospital. In saving Helen and the children, he has been injured, but not without reward. His bravery has won back his position in the department and, more important yet, it has won him the love of Helen. Jean and Etien are returning and soon the little family will be together to see the beginning of a journey which will take Jimmy and Helen through a happy life, made beautiful by an undying love.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE.

SPELLBOUND (Five Parts—May 17).—The cast: Elsie York (Louis Meredith); Harrington Graeme (William Conklin); Major Cavendish (Bruce Smith); Katti Hab (Edward J. Brady); Mematu (Frank Erlanger); Azetic (Edward Peters); Graham (R. Henry Grey). Direction H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

Major Cavendish returns from India, bringing with him an idol he has picked up. His ward, Elsie Yorke, is in love with Harrington Graeme. The major asks her to marry him, and she laughs at the idea. Graeme, in ill favor with the major, asks Elsie to elope with him. She is to meet him in the grounds at midnight. As she passes through the library she is fascinated by the ugliness of the idol. Her guardian enters and startles her. Graeme, through a window, sees the girl in the major's arms, and goes away, thinking he has lost her.

Later he returns from abroad and, having learned that Elsie is still unmarried, ventures to call. Elsie is receiving friends whom she has invited to hear a lecture on Indian morals by the noted yogi, Katti Hab. She is impressed by his statement that even inanimate objects have a strange power. Katti Hab sees the idol and gives a start of recognition. Graeme wins Elsie's forgiveness. The major enters and orders him from the house. He returns that night to walk under Elsie's window. Katti Hab and one of his servants enter the house to steal the idol, and kill the major. Graeme puts them to flight and is found on the scene with the knife in his hand. Held for trial, he is freed on the testimony of yogi's servant, who bears against his master a grudge.

Graeme and Elsie are married. Elsie undergoes a change. Graeme discovers that she is gambling and pleads with her to stop. She flouts him. An admirer abets her and lends her money. Graeme, also changed, has an affair with an actress. Katti Hab, in hiding, resolves to risk all on another attempt to steal the idol. Elsie's physician informs her that she is about to become a mother. She rebels at the thought, and hates her child when it is born. Katti Hab, surprised in the house, conceals himself in a closet and is imprisoned by a spring lock. He calls on the god for deliverance, and the idol moves, upsetting a lamp which sets fire to the house. The valet telephones Graeme, who rushes homeward.

Elsie, returning from a ball at which her admirer has revealed his true character, sees the fire, and her maternal instinct is aroused. She saves the child, but is herself overcome. Graeme rescues her. Katti Hab is killed by the fire. The image is broken, and Graeme finds jewels in its head. Both feel that a sinister influence in their lives has been removed, and they are happy with their child.

THE FLIRTING BRIDE (Three Parts—May 26).—The cast: The bride (Jackie Saunders); Her husband (William Conklin); Count Max (Edward J. Brady); The commandant (Henry Stanley). Direction of H. M. & E. D. Horkheimer.

From the moment when, at the conclusion of the ceremony, the bride's old flames come forward to kiss her, she starts on a flirting campaign that causes her husband to gnash his teeth. On the start of the wedding tour there are complications; the bride is left at a station where she insisted on getting out for refreshment. She is accompanied by an old admirer.

Once more united with her husband, she accompanies him to a little European kingdom, where fresh trouble starts. The commandant of the garrison and his officers become her slaves. Count Max, detailed to the garrison, falls a victim. The bride goes boating with him and he gives her a packet, requesting her to forward it to his mother if he falls in battle.

A spy informs the commandant that the bride is a fellow conspirator with Count Max, who is suspected of being a foreign emissary. She flees from arrest and is captured by brigands. Count Max is also caught, but released when he proves that he is an enemy of the government. The soldiers, raiding the bandits, rescue the bride. She is chained in a dungeon. Her husband arrives with the American consul, and she is released on condition that her husband take her out of the country before she makes a victim of the crown prince. Tearfully she swears never again to look at a man.

A TOYLAND ROBBERY (May 18).—Dolly is a telegraph operator; and Jerry, the engineer, is his sweetheart. He always stops at her station on his return to greet her. She has a little dog, of which she is very fond. One day Jerry tells her that on the next trip he is going to bring the pay-roll. Black Mike, the villain, who has a gang of train robbers, overhears him, and determines to get the money. When Jerry is gone, he enters the telegraph office with his gang and, overpowering Dolly, he cuts the wires. Then he leaves her bound. But her dog comes to her rescue, and gnaws her bonds in two. Dolly, realizing that the wires are cut, knows that she must find some other way of warning the train that the robbery will be attempted. She sets out on a handcar to meet the train at the bridge.

Mike and his men are on the trestle, preparing to saw the timbers through, so that the train will be wrecked. But Dolly reaches the train at the junction, stops it and gets into the cab with Jerry. Jerry and his fireman, warned in time, fire at the crooks, and to escape their fire, the gang runs away over the trestle, and, falling through, are buried under the broken timbers. The passengers cheer the lovers, as the picture ends.

7,000 POLICEMEN PARADE (On the same reel as foregoing).—More than 7,000 New York policemen marched in the annual parade of the force on Saturday, May 6. Among those who were in the reviewing stand were Police Commissioner Woods and his staff, Governor Whitman, Major General Wood, Mayor Mitchel and all the heads of the municipal department.

The policemen assembled at Eightieth street and Fifth avenue and proceeded south about 1 o'clock. The procession was led by the police band, followed by Chief Inspector Max F. Schmittberger and his staff. The parade passed the reviewing stand and U. K. Whipple, the Animated cameraman at Fifth avenue, between Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth street, about 2 o'clock. In a mock hold-up before this reviewing stand a policeman, posing as a thug, was accidentally shot by a patrolman, who thought the "hold-up" was a real one.

IT CAN'T BE TRUE (June 1).—The cast: The Kids (Irma Sorter, Gordon Griffith, Frank Butterworth and Ernest Butterworth); The Manager (H. Griffith); His Wife (G. Griffith).

The manager sent his company to the park to make some exterior scenes, and they did not notice that the children had tied their wagon on behind the auto. The manager was rather jealous of the attentions of his leading man to his wife, who played the feminine leads. The company rehearsed the scene of an elopement, watched intently by the children.

As the boss was not present, the director and his staff decided to take time off for a "little game." The leading man urged the leading lady to come and rest with him under a neighboring tree. The children got hold of the camera and decided to make a picture on their own account. They acted a burlesque of the scene they had just seen, and then fate inspired them to experiment with the panorama handle.

The next day the company was invited into the projection room to see yesterday's results. The kids managed to sneak in, too. Then was revealed how the actors wasted their time, and the pressing attentions of the leading man to the Manager's wife gave that gentleman a painful shock. Everybody was fired, but the children were rewarded with slices of pie by their loving mother for having kept their clothes so clean!

A BUSTED HONEYMOON (May 24).—The cast: The Bride (Alice Howell); The Groom (Ray Griffith); The Bad Man (Fatty Voss).

It was his wedding day, but he wandered from the wayside and dropped into one of his old haunts, where he partook of a little more than was good for him. The bride, knowing his haunts, after an hour or two of waiting, decides to call up his old place and find if he is there. She begged him to hurry home, but he was in no condition to be called sweet names and resented her interference.

He wandered out into the park, where he found some girls to his liking, but hardly had he got started to making love before the husband of one of the girls, a very bad man, came on the scene and it was curtains for the groom. He hurried to the side of his fiancee whom he knew he could bluff. The wedding was hastened with all speed and the groom immediately appropriated his little wife's hard-earned savings and back to Mike's place he went. The bride gives up her flat and returns home.

The mercenary landlady soon afterwards rented the flat to a man who happened to be the bad man the groom had encountered that morning in the park. Later at night the groom, after a hard evening, decided that he would return home to his little wife Not knowing that his flat had been rented to others, he entered and got into bed with the bad man. There was some excitement. Wife and brother entered just in time to avert a murder.

GAMBOLING ON THE GREEN (May 28).—The cast: The husband (Gene Rogers); the wife (Elsie Cort); the lover (Reggie Morris); his sweetheart (Ann Darling).

Paw and Maw were all right till Paw started to flirt with Reggie's sweetheart. Then Reg got peeved and Paw ran away with his girl. A queer intruder, known as "Squirrel Food," stole Paw's watch and sold it to Reg for the price of a feed. Then, with a full stomach, he got himself a job as janitor in Paw's office.

Reg came along, saw his girl with Paw and made a vow with Maw to "get" them. They got them all right, but The Nut, grasping his opportunity, copped a watch and Maw's purse, and then flew the coop. Paw and the bunch gave chase and overtook The Nut in time to see him sell Maw's purse for one dollar to a pawnbroker. The latter opened the purse and found a fortune in it. The Nut saw this and died of heart failure as a penalty for his crimes.

TOUGH LUCK ON A ROUGH SEA—(Two parts—May 31).—The cast: Commodore Alimonio (Dan Russell); His Son (Sammy Burns); The Girl (Carmoll Meyers).

Is it polite to tell your son's fiancee that the man of her choice is subject to chronic measles? Is it polite to try to grab off your son's fiancee? Is it polite to shove your poor old Dad out to sea? And is it polite to shove another guy overboard because you think he knows something about you? Decidedly not.

But the gentlemen concerned in this tale were neither polite nor well mannered. On the contrary, they were positively downright rude and overbearing, and it was a question who was the rudest. Anyway, the son who did all the above dirty work, took passage to escape the consequences of a little crime of his. The ship, however, picked up the father he had set adrift, and father was in a rip roaring frame of mind and thanked heaven he had lived for vengeance. The son might have stayed safely hidden in his stateroom, but there was a wild sea that night and son got pitched right in on top of father.

The scene that followed between father and son had best be left untold. Suffice to say that the storm got heavier and the ship went down. Father and son forgot their enmity in trying to get into a lifeboat. Unfortunately, the Captain said "women first" and father and his offspring tried to impersonate ladies to save their skins. They were very poor female impersonators, however, and the Captain's spare eye was their downfall. Anyway the lifeboat went down safely, but the ship didn't. She went down unsafely, and father, son and another female impersonator went with her. The only pleasant thing about the whole affair was the girl's escape. She got away in a lifeboat and made eyes at a strange gentleman, who afterwards married her and with whom she lived happily ever after.

THE HEALTH ROAD (May 23).—The cast: Stephen Van Dyck (Allen J. Holubar); Daphne Purcell (Jean Webster); Tom Stanhope (George MacQuarrie); Jimmy (Willie Bergh). Written and produced by Allen J. Holubar.

Stephen Van Dyck's heritage at birth was that of a weakling. His way of living and overindulgence in cigarettes helped further to undermine his weak constitution. Daphne Purcell has a sentimental regard for him, but he is compelled to share her regard with Tom Stanhope, an athlete. Tom calls on Daphne and impresses her with his handsome presence. While he is waiting for her Stephen arrives with a bouquet of flowers to lay at Daphne's feet. Tom sneers at Stephen's sentimentality.

While weak in body, Stephen's spirit is strong, and resenting Tom's sneers, the two men are about to come to blows when Daphne enters. She reminds them that "In day of old, when knights were bold, they fought for their lady loves"—adding significantly, "to the victor belong the spoils." So her two ardent admirers retire to an open space in front of her window to battle with their fists for her favor. Tom has little difficulty in besting the weakling. Stephen is helped to his feet by MacFadden's class of marathon runners, who have witnessed the contest while engaged in their daily sprint. They advise Stephen to go into training and one of them suggests that he get MacFadden to fix him up.

Later we see Stephen at the office of MacFadden, who tells him that in the first place he must leave off smoking cigarettes. Six months later we see Stephen no longer a weakling, but a clean-up athlete.

Daphne is unable to get the weakling out of her thoughts, wondering whether he has recovered from the unequal contest with the brutal athlete, and realizing that it is Stephen that she really cares for. Daphne goes to MacFadden's gymnasium and there finds Stephen has not only fully recovered, but has developed into an athlete. She tells him how proud she is that he has made good, and now admits she was mistaken in bestowing her favor on Tom. As the picture fades out we see Daphne smuggling close to Stephen, who enfolds her in his muscular arms.

THE UNCONVENTIONAL GIRL (Two parts—May 26).—The cast: Mrs. Joy (Mrs. J. H. Brundage); Mr. Joy (Joseph W. Girard); Helen Joy (Edith Roberts); Dorothy Joy (Mary Moore); Sylvia Brentano (Sydell Dowling); Dave Brentano (Stanley Walpole); Frank Worthing (Anthony Merlo). Written and produced by Robert F. Hill.

Helen Joy, the daughter of wealthy parents, is thoroughly unconventional, to the despair of her fashionable mother. The guests have assembled in the Joy drawing room for a dinner party, but are detained by Helen's absence. Helen, meanwhile, is having a glorious time coasting down hill on a bob-sleigh with about six or seven boys. She succeeds in pacifying her indulgent dad, who goes out to look for her, and she finally arrives home and seats herself at the dining room table ahead of the guests with her two Pekinese dogs in a high chair beside her. Mrs. Joy enters with the guests and is horrified but in spite of her protests the dogs remain and the dinner is served.

The scene then shifts to a kitchen and general living room in the slums, where Sylvia Brentano is trying to quiet her baby. Seeing her care-worn expression, her brother, Dave, assumes a determined look as he moved toward the window, where he picks up a screw driver and places it in his pocket with a knowing look. At the dinner in the Joy mansion Helen is seen to cause a sensation as she announces to the assembled guests that she would like to be a burglar. Frank Worthing, who is engaged to Helen's sister, Dorothy, tells Helen that burglary is not a woman's job.

Back in the tenement house Dave tells Sylvia that he must raise money somehow to keep them from starving. When he has left Sylvia comes to a sudden determination as they are in desperate straits. She hastily writes a note, then leaves the house holding her baby under her shawl.

While the guests at the Joy mansion are engaged in a game of bridge, Helen goes, unobserved, to her bedroom, takes a cloak from the closet and glides down into the hallway, where we see her removing some keys from the overcoat belonging to Worthing, and goes to his home. Suddenly she turns to the window where, to her horror, she sees silhouetted in the moonlight the figure of Dave, who is opening the window with a screw driver. He moves toward the center of the room and Helen shrieks with fear as he drags her into the firelight. He takes her for Worthing's sister and laughs fiendishly as he exclaims: "His sister shall pay as mine has." Helen shrinks from him as he betrays his purpose of lustful revenge. As they look into each other's eyes Dave realizes that he has made a mistake, and tells her that a year ago he was an expert accountant at the office of Frank Worthing, where he introduced him to his sister, Sylvia. Worthing ruined Sylvia and she left home.

He went to Worthing and asked him if he was going to marry his sister. When Worthing answered his question with a sneer he pulled his gun and shot at the betrayer of Sylvia's honor. Owing to Worthing's recovery and the extenuating circumstances of his assault the judge at his trial merely sentenced him to a year's imprisonment on Blackwell's Island. On the day of his release Sylvia was waiting for him with a baby in her arms. Suddenly they hear a noise outside and on going to the window they see Sylvia placing her baby on the front stoop. Pinned to the baby's dress is a letter from Sylvia notifying Worthing that he must take care of the child, as she cannot support it any longer.

Helen and Dave rush downstairs and Helen takes the baby from Sylvia, who, not understanding her motive, snatches the baby back. Dave reassures his sister, however, and then they all enter a taxicab which Helen engages. Meanwhile, in the Joy household they discover Helen's absence and are getting somewhat worried when the taxicab drives up and Helen, followed by Dave and Sylvia carrying her baby, breaks into the drawing room.

Helen denounces Worthing. Dave assumes a threatening attitude as Helen tells Worthing he must marry Sylvia to legitimatize the child. Worthing protests, but Dave, exhibiting a pistol, warns him that this time he will make a sure job of it if he doesn't do the square thing by Sylvia and her child. Dorothy is overcome by this revelation of villainy on the part of her fiancee. Among the guests is a clergyman, who is called upon to marry Worthing and Sylvia. Sylvia only consents to the marriage for her child's sake and on condition that she shall be Worthing's wife in name only. The couple then step up to be married, and after the ceremony Worthing is ignominiously ordered out of the house. As the picture fades out there are indications that some day the "Unconventional Girl" may become Dave's wife.

A DOUBLE FIRE DECEPTION (May 30).—The cast: Sam (Matt Moore); Polly (Jane Gail); Marion (Clara Byers); Gideon Gault (Allan Holubar). Scenario written by Norbert Lusk. Produced by Matt Moore.

Polly, the cook's hoyden daughter, is to get the chance of her young life when Miss Marion Earle, her mother's mistress, proposes to train her as her maid. Marion, her future benefactress, while awaiting them in her drawing room, repulses an earnest young man who is proposing to her, making it clear that she wants money rather than love, every time.

About this time, word comes from an attorney announcing that the latest of the many codicils of her late uncle's will stipulates that she is to receive one-half of his fortune only on condition that she marry his protege, Gideon Gault. The lawyer goes on to say that he has arranged for Mr. Gault to visit her in order that they may become well acquainted. Marion's delight turns to fury. She wants all the fortune.

Meanwhile Gideon Gault is starting for Marion's home, accompanied by his valet, Sam. The valet has high social ambitions, the master has none. The valet dresses as well as he dares, while Gideon wears the plainest black of severe cut. Gideon is interested in "uplift" work, religion and missions. Polly is brought before Marion, and, with the coming of the gawky girl, Marion gets a startling idea. She announces that, for the time, Polly must be the heiress, while Marion will be her maid.

Gideon and Sam stop on their way to Marion's. Gideon is attracted and shocked by the sight of a crowd of boys shooting craps on the sidewalk. He gets out of the machine and tells Sam to inform the heiress he will follow. Sam drives on to Marion's suburban home, where, on account of his smart appearance, he is mistaken for his master and received by Marion, dressed as a maid, with all honors. He is introduced to Polly. Sam realizes what he's fallen into, and determines to take all that's coming to him—until something happens. Marion slips Polly a note, "Make him love you—he's a millionaire." Polly in her clumsy way begins to try her powers of fascination upon the puzzled Sam.

He sees Gideon calmly walking up the path and tells his master what has happened. Gideon mildly remarks, "Keep up the deception, Sam, it may give me the chance to do great good." Gideon, the supposed valet, is introduced into the servants' hall, where he proceeds to reform everyone. Marion, listening at the keyhole, overhears Sam making love to Polly, and thinks her deception is progressing splendidly. Under the influence of Gideon's saintly personality, the servants get religion in various ways. Gideon at last has come to the right place.

Sam proposes to Polly and they are quietly married that night. In the drawing room, Marion has had prepared a supper, waiters having come in from a caterer's. She invites all the servants into the drawing room, and they come marching in single file, led by Gideon, singing "Onward Christian Soldiers." Polly rushes to the big fat cook, crying, "Mother." Sam begins to see light. Something is wrong.

While Sam rages, Marion pertly says: "I'm the heiress, your wife is my maid—and you lost your share of the fortune." Sam bursts out laughing. Marion looks troubled. Then Gideon comes to the rescue. "Thanks for finding my valet a wife—I am Gideon Gault," he says. Marion is dumbfounded.

At this instant a messenger boy enters with a telegram. He hands it to Marion. She reads: "Last codicil to uncle's will leaves all to put up a monument to himself."

Marion swoons dead away and Sam promptly uncorks a bottle of champagne in her face. Gideon and the servants congratulate Sam and Polly, as, after all, no harm seems to have been done by the wholesale deception.

JOKER.

A DARK SUSPICION (June 3).—The cast: Bill Binks (William Franey); His Wife (Gale Henry); Sam Green (Milburn Moranti); His Wife (Lillian Peacock); Policeman (Charles Conklin). Written and produced by Allen Curtis.

Bill Binks is a married man, and a very much "henpecked" one at that. As Bill is preparing the noonday meal he enters his wife's room and finds her primping to go out. He upbraids her for making him do all the menial work. He lays down the law to her and tells her that she will hereafter do the housework or they will move to a hotel. The wife thinks this will be a good idea and persuades Bill to accompany her to the hotel.

At the hotel live Sam Green and his wife, and they are a typical couple of newlyweds. They have troubles of their own. While Sam is taking a bath the tub springs a leak and he tries to stop the flow of water with his wife's new hat. The wife is pressing his trousers and in the excitement they become severely burned. They are arguing with the hotel clerk when Bill and his wife arrive. Mrs. Green recognizes an old sweetheart in the person of Bill and there is a happy meeting between the two. Mrs. Binks and Mr. Green are very much surprised at the meeting and both become jealous of their respective mates. Green takes his wife back to their room, while Mrs. Binks orders her husband into their apartments.

Green decides that a public hotel is not a place for a pretty newly wedded woman and decides to seek out a bungalow. Mrs. Green meets Bill and tells him of looking for a place. Bill suddenly thinks of his own home and tells her that he has the very place they are looking for. He suggests that she accompany him to look it over. Mrs. Binks misses her husband and Mr. Green misses his wife at the same time and they come out of the hotel just in time to see Binks and Mrs. Green leaving in a taxicab. Both, believing their "better halves" are eloping, set out in pursuit. Binks and Mrs. Green arrive at the house, not knowing they are pursued, and Binks is showing her about the place.

Green and Mrs. Binks have many mishaps, but finally arrive at the house. Mrs. Binks tells Green that she has long suspected her husband of chasing "chickens" and she is glad to find him out at last. They take refuge in the cellar while trying to catch Binks and Mrs. Green spooning. While they are thus hiding the delivery man begins to unload the ordered coal and it is all dumped in the cellar. Binks and Mrs. Green hear the scrambling down stairs and believe it is burglars. They call for the police. Poor Green and Mrs. Binks are buried under the heap of coal. Binks and Mrs. Green, unable to bear the idea of remaining in the house with burglars, jump out of the window just as the cops arrive. All are taken in charge by the cops and leave to catch the burglars.

Green and Mrs. Binks finally wiggle out from under the coal and knock on the door for assistance. The cops open the door, but before Green can explain the cop bangs him on the head with his club. Mrs. Binks grabs her husband and then turns upon Mrs. Green and demands to know what she has been doing in the house with another woman's husband. Mrs. Green calmly pulls out a slip of paper and opening it displays to the astonished eyes of Mrs. Binks a receipt for six months' rent. Mrs. Binks and Mr. Green are ashamed of their unjust accusations of their respective husband and wife. In desperation Mrs. Binks tells the crowd that she was endeavoring to rent the house to Mrs. Green. Mr. Binks and Mrs. Green never found out that they had been followed by an avenging husband and a desperate wife.

THE LIMOUSINE MYSTERY (Two Parts—May 24).—The cast: James Crosby (Joseph W. Girard); Mrs. Crosby, his wife (Mary Fuller); George Kingsley (Anthony Merlo); Fownes (Bert Busby); the chauffeur (William Welsh). Scenario written by Catherine Carr. Produced by Lucius Henderson.

Mrs. Crosby, a society favorite, drives out with her husband in a closed limousine. The husband gets out to enter a jewelry store and tells the chauffeur to drive on. George Kingsley, a well known clubman, enters the limousine from the other side of the street and the chauffeur drives on unawares of his new passenger. Presently Kingsley alights and Clymer Blakford, a fellow-clubman, notes that he came out of the Crosby car. On arriving home the chauffeur opens the door of the car. Mrs. Crosby seems to have fainted. The chauffeur and butler carry her into the house, where Dr. Benton, accompanied by the noted criminologist, Fownes, makes an examination and declares that Mrs. Crosby has been stabbed to death.

The chauffeur testifies at the inquest that the last person seen with Mrs. Crosby was her husband. Crosby doesn't deny that he was with his wife, but indignantly proclaims his being put under arrest. Fownes gets permission to view the body of the victim, while Blackford appears at police headquarters and reports that he saw Kingsley come out of the car after Crosby had left it. On the strength of Blackford's testimony Crosby is released and Kingsley faces a charge of murder. Fownes, determined to solve the mystery, offers his services to Kingsley, whom he believes to be innocent. Kingsley admits to the detective that he was Mrs. Crosby's lover and that she had promised to leave her husband for him, but insists that when he left the car she was alive and happy.

The detective picks up a dagger-shaped paper cutter during an interview with Crosby and pockets it unseen by Crosby. At the ensuing trial, the detective is placed on the stand and informs the court that the late Mrs. Crosby, upon his investigation, had been a dancer who appeared under the name of Yola in an East Side dance hall, and that her lover at that time was a young gangster known as Budd Kennedy. Subsequently, she made a hit at an uptown cabaret. It was there that Crosby became acquainted with her and paid her marked attention, thus arousing the jealousy of her lover. Believing in the girl's innocence, Crosby asked her to marry him and she thereupon indicated to Budd that she was tired of wearing cheap clothes and that he never gave her any jewels. This caused Budd to commit burglary in order to provide her with a diamond necklace and other jewels.

Yola, however, learning that he had stolen them, was afraid to keep them. Accordingly, she dropped the diamond necklace into his pocket. Budd, subsequently, while under the influence of liquor, had a fight with another gangster in an East Side saloon in the course of which the diamond necklace had dropped from his pocket causing his arrest and subsequent sentence to a term in prison, Budd being fully convinced that Yola had betrayed him.

After getting rid of Budd, Yola married Crosby. Five years later they had a quarrel when she told him frankly that she had only married him for his money and the social position he could give her. After making this statement, Fownes says: "According to my deduction, the following events occurred upon the fatal day. A new chauffeur drove the car. Crosby and his wife had a violent quarrel. Upon the husband leaving the car, the lover, Kingsley, took his place. The murder was committed after Kingsley had left the car by a man who used a knife affected by a certain set of gangsters on the East Side."

Fownes then takes a gangster's knife from his pocket and accuses the chauffeur who drove the car. The chauffeur arises indignantly and denies the accusation. Fownes insists that the chauffeur is no other than Budd Kennedy, who, after his release from prison, was consumed with a desire for revenge on the woman who had thrown him over. The detective asks for the arrest of Budd, who tries to make his escape, but is overpowered by the police. Slipping his hand into the chauffeur's pocket, Fownes pulls out a knife similar to that shown during his testimony.

Budd, realizing that his case is hopeless, laughs hysterically and says, "She double-crossed me. I waited and planned to get her. She had her day. You've got me—I got her. Everybody crowds around to congratulate Kingsley, who insists that the solution of the mystery is due to the cleverness of the criminologist.

LAEMMLE.

THE FUR TRIMMED COAT (May 30).—The cast: Walter McPhail (Rupert Julian); Adelbert (Douglas Gerrard); Clara McPhail (Elsie Jane Wilson); Nellie (Francelia Billington). Scenario by E. J. Clauson. Produced by Rupert Julian.

Mrs. Clara McPhail receives a beautiful sealskin coat. The note which accompanies the package is signed "Adelbert," and requests that it be worn for his sake, in remembrance of days past. Clara examines the coat, then sits gazing at it, lost in perplexed meditation. Finally she rises, packs the coat, puts on her wraps, goes out and pawns the coat.

That night at dinner, Clara hands her husband, Walter, a pawn ticket, explaining to him that she found it and asking him to look into the matter the next day and see if it amounts to anything. The following afternoon Clara makes a casual inquiry in regard to the pawn ticket. McPhail says he forgot about it, but will drop into the pawn shop and look it up. However, he does not mention the matter next evening on his return from work.

The next day she decides to go on a little shopping expedition, and calls at her husband's office with a request for some money. McPhail turns to the stenographer and requests her to get the money for him. With a superior air, Nellie calmly gets up from her desk, walks to the closet and a moment later appears gaily bedecked in the fur trimmed coat! McPhail contiuues turning over the papers on his desk, wholly unconscious of the shock his wife has received upon observing the coat in the possession of the stenographer. Clara says nothing, but she registers a vow that there shall soon be a settlement with Friend Husband.

TWO MOTHERS (Two Parts—June 1).—The cast: Richard Angus (Alfred Allen); Dick, his son (Gordon Griffith); Nina Angus, his wife (Virginia Southern); Violetta Andree (Dorothy Davenport); Violetta's Second Husband (Emory Johns). Scenario by Calder Johnstone. Produced by Lloyd Carleton.

The boy was a twelve-year-old edition of his father. The man was an invalid, and the boy's stepmother was an opera singer. Everything depended upon her securing a contract with the Grand Opera Company. When she returned home after the first trial, she told her husband that she had a rival—a woman who could sing much better than she; and after the boy had gone to bed, she told her husband who the woman was. Veroni, the rival singer, was no other than Violetta Andree, the first wife of Richard Angus and the mother of his boy Dick.

Late that evening, Violetta called upon Mrs. Angus, determined to have her boy back. She offered the wife any inducement, even going so far as to promise not to sing, and thus permit the wife to secure the engagement; but the wife refused, believing all that her husband had told her of how the other woman had wrecked his life and left him with the boy.

But the woman told her side of the story—of how the husband drank heavily, how she supported him for several years, and how the man came into her life who was now her husband, and of how her first husband had misunderstood their friendship. But Mrs. Angus realized what she had done for the boy, the sacrifices she had made, and the evil influence his own mother would now have over him.

The next evening in her dressing room, Violetta was surprised to receive a card from Mr. Richard Angus. She instructed the call-boy to show him in. A boy of twelve years, in a somewhat worn evening suit, stood before her. She then learned that he was her son. The boy plead for his mother; and slowly the woman drew the truth from him, realizing for the first time that the boy believed his own mother to be dead. The lad showed her a worn and faded photograph of his mother—her own picture when she was a young girl. She bade him return to his mother, and to tell her that she would do all she could to help them. When the boy was gone, she sent the manager word that she was ill and would not go on, and advised him to send for Nina Angus.

GOLD SEAL.

THE SILENT MAN OF TIMBER GULCH (Two Parts—May 30).—The cast: The Man (Robert Leonard); His Wife (Ella Hall); The Stranger (Marc Robbins); His Granddaughter (Ella Hall). Written and produced by Robert Leonard.

Like a wounded animal seeking the cover of the woods, the man had come to Timber Gulch. Taking possession of an abandoned cabin, he had lived a lonely existence. He was never known to say a word to the other inhabitants, keeping his business to himself and his queer actions had become the subject of speculation among the natives. At other times his nature would seem to change and the sound of a gun shot would have a strange effect upon him. He had been known to trace the sound of a shot and violently wrest the gun from the hands of the hunter.

One day a stranger and a child arrived in the camp. The boss of the camp meets the stranger and it turns out that he and the stranger are old friends. They talk of old times and the boss asks his friend about the child. The friend tells him that the child is his grandchild and that several years before a stranger had drifted into the home town, and after a rapid fire wooing had married his daughter. He was liked by all who knew him, but after the marriage the young husband got into bad habits.

At first his home life was happy, but the husband became addicted more and more to drink. It was an easy step from drink to gambling, and he went from bad to worse. In the meantime a child was born to them, and she was the bright spot in the mother's life. One night, while the husband is at the dance hall, one of the girls flirts with him and arouses the jealousy of her lover. A fight ensues and the lover is killed by the husband. The husband escapes, and that is the last that is heard of him. Meanwhile the little wife tires of waiting, and dies of a broken heart. The baby girl is left in the old man's hands to raise as best he can. He finishes the sad story and the boss tries to comfort him. They go out to find the little child, but she is missing.

The child has wandered on into the woods and becomes lost. All join in a frantic search for her, but can find little trace. The child wanders about until exhausted and then spies a cabin among the trees. She stumbles inside and falls on the bunk asleep. The silent man has wandered outside and, returning, sees the bundle on his bunk. He finds the child, and is struck by the remarkable resemblance to his dead wife. He clasps her in his arms, and opening the locket, finds the face of his wife inside. The stranger and the boss, hearing voices, come in. Recognition follows and the man is told of his wife's death, but finds consolation in the recovery of his memory and the presence of his little girl.

NESTOR.

ALL OVER A STOCKING (May 29).—The cast: Mrs. Newlywed (Ethel Lynn); Mr. Newlywed (Eddie Lyons); The Stenographer (Betty Compson). Written by Arthur Mackley. Produced by Al. E. Christie.

Mr. Newlywed's wife is extravagant. A notice of a bargain sale is to Mrs. Newlywed an invitation to buy, and she seldom allows one to pass without getting something.

One day she sees a notice of an extremely cut-rate bargain sale on stockings. She shows her husband the notice, stating that the guaranteed five dollar silk stockings will be sold for two dollars, and asking him for the money. Newlywed refuses her request. In spite of the fact that Mrs. Newlywed has several dozen pair of stockings, she insists on getting some at this bargain, and her husband leaves the house after the two have a fuss over the matter.

Arriving at the office, a stenographer requests leave of absence to go on an errand; and shortly after she leaves, Newlywed sees the same ad that provoked the discussion between his wife and himself. He decides to surprise his wife by buying a pair of stockings and takes them home as a peace offering. Not to be denied, Mrs. Newlywed borrows the necessary funds from the maid and sets out for the bargain counter. The stenographer buys her stockings, and is so pleased with them that she puts them on before leaving the store.

Ethel sees her husband at the bargain counter and is happy, believing that he is getting the stockings for her. To be on the safe side, however, she purchases a pair of the stockings and sets out for the office. Eddie has returned to the office, and is met by a customer, who desires to see some property. He leaves with the customer, and tells the clerk that should he not return before five, to close the office. He also leaves the package of stockings he has bought for his wife.

Finishing her shopping, Ethel returns to her husband's office and finds him missing. She determines to wait until he returns; and while waiting, discovers that the stenographer has on a pair of the bargain hose. Suspicion against her husband is aroused, and she awaits his return with injured feelings. When five o'clock arrives and Eddie does not return, the office is closed. Ethel is forced to return home alone. Shortly after she leaves, the stenographer, while placing some letters on Eddie's desk, discovers the package of stockings, and, written upon it is a little note stating it is for his wife.

The stenographer, thinking he has forgotten the package, determines to take it home. When Eddie arrives home that night he runs into a tornado in the person of his wife with her injured feelings. In the midst of her raving, the stenographer comes in with the package, and Ethel, in her frenzy, tries to beat up the girl. She finally sees the note on the package, and her anger subsides. Explanations follow, and Eddie decides that never again will he try the bargain counter.

GOOD NIGHT, NURSE (June 2).—The cast: J. Nutt (Neal Burns); Stella (Stella Adams); Billie (Billie Rhodes); Harry (Harry Rattenberry). Scenario written by Al. Christie. Produced by Horace Davey.

Neal, while sitting in his room, notices an accident in the street and kindly goes to the man's rescue with his car and takes him to the hospital. The nurse assigned to the case, Billie, makes a great hit with Neal.

That night at the club Neal cannot get the pretty nurse out of his mind. He pretends illness, and is rushed off to the hospital, but, much to his disappointment, Stella is assigned to him. He throws pillows at her and altogether gives the impression that he is violent. A new nurse is put on the case, but when Neal discovers that it is not Billie, he again raves. Harry and Stella try to soothe him and Harry promises to give him another nurse, but again Neal is disappointed, and the two start fighting.

He decides that he will leave the place. As they have taken his clothes he wraps a sheet around him and starts out. A chase follows through the ward which disturbs the patients very much. Billie is attending a woman in a private room. Harry and the others finally capture Neal and tie him in bed, but he manages to get loose again. In the hall he encounters one of the attendants and the two grapple. Another chase follows through the ward, and back into the hall, Neal knocking down a couple of cripples and Harry.

Neal finally manages to barricade himself within one of the rooms and escapes through the window, but his escape is soon noted and the attendants give chase. Neal hides in an apartment house, and from there runs to an alley. Billie, who has left her patient, is walking along the street when Neal spies her, and, oblivious to everything, rushes up to her and commences to talk. The attendants soon come on and they take him back to the hospital, where Billie is installed as his nurse.

BISON.

TAMMANY'S TIGER (Two Parts—June 3).—The cast: Jim Little (H. Griffith); Percy (Lee Hill); Arena (Marie Walcamp); Robt. Riot (L. C. Shumway); Spuds (E. N. Wallach). Written and produced by Henry McRae.

A committee of old-time Tammany leaders determine to revive the "Grand Old Party." The chairman of the committee, in an effort to make their emblem a feature of the revival, suggests they secure a stuffed tiger to be displayed during the reception. Jim Little, the former owner of a circus, sees a chance to make some money in securing an animal. Jim tells them that there is no such thing as a stuffed tiger in the country, but that he will get one and have it "fixed" so the animal will be perfectly harmless.

Jim has a daughter, Arena, who has a hobby for strange pets. Percy Peace, the son of Little's bitterest political enemy, is an ardent admirer of the girl, but not of her pets. Percy is caught love-making by Arena's father, who orders him off the grounds. Robert Riot, who is a firm political friend of Little's, is also an admirer of Arena's. Shortly after Percy's undignified retreat, Little takes up the question of securing a tiger with Robert. Robert suggests they visit a circus with quarters nearby and get a veterinary to dope one of the tigers. Percy has slipped back, but, seeing the two talking confidentially, he overhears their plot. He beats them to the veterinary's shop and fixes matters with that gentleman. Robert and Little make arrangements for the tiger to be doped for two hours. When the real doping takes place, however, influenced by Percy's previous visit, the veterinary gives the tiger only enough dope to last thirty minutes.

Little and Robert arrange to have the tiger brought to the hall during the middle of the meeting. The meeting opens with a rush. The doped tiger is brought in and placed in the middle of the crowd on a table. As the chairman ardently argues for the revival of the party, stating that now is the time to put life into Tammany, the tiger's eyes begin to blink and its tail to twitch. Percy makes a hasty retreat. Little and his friends are comparing the time. They figure that they have an hour left before the tiger will come to, but are nervous in spite of this fact. At the end of a particularly vehement outburst, the Tammany Tiger comes to life, and there is a mad scramble to get outside.

It is the custom of the Tammany party to have a parade each evening. The parade consists of several animal cages drawn by a huge elephant, and is in full swing passing the hall when the tiger bursts out. The elephant stampedes, the wagons are overturned, and the animals scatter in the city streets. There is excitement among the citizens. The elephant becomes thirsty, and, smelling water in a nearby house, runs his trunk through the window. Unfortunately, the room is occupied by an old maid taking a bath. She suddenly feels the water receding from about her, and upon turning around sees the elephant's trunk. When she becomes hysterical, the elephant grabs her with his trunk and jerks her out of the window.

In another part of the city a bunch of women are trying on gowns. Tammany's Tiger suddenly appears upon the scene—and there is a record race to see who gets out first. Some of the lions take refuge in a street car. The passengers are frantic, and the car runs wild. In the rush to escape the animals, Little is trampled, and the doctor orders him to be taken home and to have absolute quiet. For some unknown reason, the different animals make a bee-line for Little's home, and there is anything but quiet there for him. Numbers have proven too much for Robert, and he has taken refuge in a safe deposit vault.

Percy calls on Arena and finds the house filled with animals. Being cornered, there is nothing left to do except run the animals out of the house. Although his knees are violently shaking, he succeeds in driving the animals away, and Little grants his consent to the marriage of Percy and the girl.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE

PEG O' THE RING (Episode No. 5—"The House of Mystery"—Two parts—May 29).—The cast: Peg (Grace Cunard); Dr. Lund, Jr. (Francis Ford); Flip (Pete Girard); Marcus (Irving Lipner).

At the end of the fourth episode, we find Peg locked in the circus box in the burning tent, with her only friend, Dr. Lund, Jr., unconscious near her. Dr. Lund regains consciousness, only to find himself in the burning tent. Struggling to his feet, he looks for a means of escape, and is about to make a try for the entrance of the tent when he is attracted by the muffled cries of a woman in distress. He finds that the noise comes from the box, and learns it is Peg. Nearly suffocated with the smoke and fire, he succeeds in cutting a hole in the tent, and with his fast ebbing strength, he pulls the box through the hole and into the night and safety, while he falls exhausted nearby.

The circus people, attracted by the fire, miss Peg and search for her. Passersby see the unconscious Dr. Lund, Jr., and, failing to revive him, send him to the hospital. In the excitement, some roughnecks see the box in which Peg is hidden, and, thinking it contains circus goods which they can convert into money, they take the box to their counterfeiting den. Marcus, with the letter he stole from Flip, tries to locate Mrs. Lund and receive his reward. Failing to find her at her home, he starts out to look for her.

Peg, while in the box, feels herself taken through many passageways and secret entrances and finally laid in what seems to be a den of some kind. Listening, she learns she is in a counterfeiting den. She is not there long when her captors, or rescuers, try to open the box she is in. Breaking the locks, they are about to open it when several crooks run in and announce that the "Boss" has just been driven up outside. Leaving the box, they all rush upstairs. Feeling sure she is alone, Peg succeeds in getting out of her prison and hides behind a secret door. The gang enters with the "Boss," who is none other than Mrs. Lund. She warns them that the Secret Service are on their trail. In her hurry to leave, she loses her purse containing letters, etc., which are found by Peg after the roughnecks take Mrs Lund upstairs. Keeping the purse for evidence against Mrs. Lund, Peg starts to find a way out. Watching the others go through secret panels, she waits for an opportunity to do the same.

In the meantime Dr. Lund, Jr., escapes from the hospital, much to the worry of the doctors and nurses, and starts on a search for Peg. Arriving at the smouldering circus grounds, he makes inquiries regarding the box, and learns from some boys that the crooks took it to their den. Learning its location, he starts in pursuit. Peg, in the secret passage, starts to find a way out, when she feels a dampness and the floor slowly go down with her. Hearing running water she finds she is drawing near an underground river or sewer. Screaming for help, she is engulfed in the dark water as the episode ends.

BIG U.

THE ATTIC PRINCESS (May 31).—The cast: Hilda Dawn (Zoe Bech); Hiss Holt, her aunt (Marjorie Ellison); Warren Berghmann (Thomas Jefferson). Scenario by Calder Johnstone. Produced by George Cochrane.

Hilda's parents were killed in the Fayton Railroad disaster. She was five years old at the time, with no one in all the world to care for her except her aunt, and so to this relative she went to be cared for. Miss Holt was a prim sort of woman, hard at heart by reason of a life of self privation and self pity.

Then came a surprise to the unmarried, unloved aunt. In the will left by Hilda's father it was decreed that his entire estate should revert to his little daughter when she has reached her majority, but in the event of her passing away, the fortune was to go to the aunt. Miss Holt plotted to secure that fortune. And so, Hilda was relegated to the attic, fed on the leavings of the family table and clothed scantily.

But it chanced that a rich artist had long since used the attic across the way as a studio, where he came several days a week and painted at his leisure. And one evening, when he returned unexpectedly to remain for the night, he heard the little girl crying, and looking across the court he discovered little Hilda. He learned of her neglect, of her scant bedding, of her hunger. The next day he brought a warm blanket, and as the days passed he brought other things—the little girl believing that fairies visited her.

Then came discovery. Whereupon Miss Holt accused her of stealing the good things—but Mr. Berghmann, the artist, overheard the accusation and he climbed into the attic and defended the little girl. This was followed by his having her taken from the aunt and legally adopting her himself. And thus the child's unhappy days ended and she became a little Princess such as she dreamed she might be.

BROTHER JIM (June 1).—The cast: John Marsh (Tom Jefferson); Jim Marsh (Frank Newbury); Margie Marsh (Lena Baskette).

John Marsh is a farmer of Scotch descent. His wife is dead, but he has a son and a little daughter. The boy is in his teens and the father toils hard to educate the lad, sending him to an agricultural college away from home. The youth, Jim, who has never been away from home before, and who has known nothing but hard work all his life, begins his school work by making every day a holiday. He soon finds that his small income is insufficient for his needs and he writes home for more money. The father draws from the bank and sends what his boy asks. The demands for money become more frequent, and at last he has to refuse his son. Jim in debt from gambling, is tempted to steal, is found out and expelled from college. His father at this time decides to pay the boy a secret visit as a surprise.

He arrives at the college the day the boy is expelled; learns the cause, pays the sum stolen and returns home heartbroken. He tells Jim never to set foot across the threshold of his home again. Little Margie and her big brother were always boon companions, and as soon as she learns how to write a little she begs her father to show her how to write "Bruv'ver Jim." With an aching heart the old man traces out the letter, holding to the baby's fist, and so it goes on week after week, the little girl writing to the brother, the old man putting the letter in the rural delivery mail box, and when the child is asleep, slippling into the box a letter in reply which he has written. Then he reads the letters to her, each telling how finely Jim is getting on and telling her he will "soon come home."

Jim, on leaving college, loafs a little, despondent and hopeless. Then he goes down hill until he becomes a hobo. He wanders from town to town, taking odd jobs and drinking too much. The home instinct is too strong and memories of his father and sister bring back his manhood. He resolves to see the old home once again, even if he cannot enter it. He comes in the night, and as he leans against the old mail box his hand opens it. He finds a letter in baby handwriting to himself. It is from little Margie, and in baby fashion tells him how much she loves him and wants him to return, and ends with a funny little P. S., asking him to "be sure and bring me home the pony you promised.". The letter has a decided effect on him. He takes it and after leaving a reply, written in pencil on the back of an envelope.

Thus the father learns that he has been home, for Margie finds the letter the next morning and runs with it to the old man. Jim goes to the nearest city, gets a job, works hard for a small wage, saves one hundred dollars and sends it back to his father in part payment for what the old man has done for him. The money is received at a time of particular need, when a bill for farm implements is received with a demand for remittance, as the account is long overdue. It also gives his address and that night the father and baby write him a real letter which he really receives. Baby's birthday arrives, and with it the anticipation of receiving the longed for pony. But morning brings no pony, and the baby who expected the return of her brother is almost heartbroken. The father, too, is deeply affected and holds the weeping child to his breast.

Jim, meantime, has taken his entire savings, amounting to about fifty dollars, and has speculated with a bucketshop. He loses and later learns that the deal was a fake. He goes to the man and demands his money back, is refused, beats up the man, who forks over the money, plus what the stock, he was supposed to have invested in, really advanced on the market. Jim hurries out, buys the pony he had his eye on and rides him back to the old farm, arriving late the night of Margie's birthday. There is a happy reunion and the future seems bright for all.

WHERE ARE MY CHILDREN? (Five Parts).—The cast: Richard Walton (Jerome Power); Mrs. Walton (Helen Riaume); Mrs. Brandt (Marie Walcamp); Walton's housekeeper (Cora Drew); Lillian, her daughter (Rene Rogers); Roger (A. D. Blake); Dr. Malfit (Juan De La Cruz); Dr. Homer (C. Norman Hammond); Eugenic Husband (Wm. J. Hope); Eugenic Wife (Marjorie Blynn); Dr. Gilding (Wm. Haben). Scenario written by Lois Weber. Produced by the Smalleys.

Behind the Portals of Eternity, the soul of little children waited to be born. Within the first space was the great army of "Chance Children." Without a distinguishing mark they went forth to earth in great numbers. Then came those sad Unwanted Souls that were constantly sent back. They were marked morally or physically defective, and bore the sign of the serpent. And then in the Secret Place of the Most High were those souls, fine and strong, that were only sent forth on prayer. They were marked with a cross.

Richard Walton, District Attorney, was a great believer in eugenics. The sight of the poor defectives constantly passing through the police court always left him sad.

It was a great grief to the District Attorney that his wife was childless; but never dreaming that it was her fault, he concealed his disappointment. His sister has contracted a eugenic marriage, and Walton watched the result with interest. When her first child was born, his pride and delight in it was only equal to that of the parents themselves. As the child grew up, Mrs. Walton watched with surprise her husband's interest and pride in it. A faint regret stirred in her that she had deliberately elected to remain childless.

About this time, Mrs. Walton's chum, Mrs. Brandt, was disappointed to find herself on the road to motherhood. A coveted invitation to a smart house party made her further discontented with her condition. Confiding in her friend, Mrs. Walton referred her to her own physician, Dr. Malfit, and even escorted Mrs. Brandt to his office. Thus one of the "Unwanted Ones" returned, and a social butterfly was again ready for house parties.

A case had come to trial that greatly interested the District Attorney. A fanatic on the subject of welfborn children had written a book and attempted to send it broadcast, in which the truth about unwelcome motherhood, birth regulation and other sex questions were set forth. The District Attorney began to think more and more of his unborn children.

It happened that Mrs. Walton's brother Roger, a young rake, was visiting her when the housekeeper's daughter, Lillian, came home from school. Having no place to put the girl, the housekeeper asked permission to keep her until some further arrangement could be made.

It was inevitable that Lillian, young and innocent, should fall a prey to the schemes and wiles of Roger. Presently another of the "Unwanted Ones" had come to Lillian. The District Attorney, who had come to enjoy the sight of this bright young creature about his place was one of the first to notice the change that came over her.

At last Lillian realized what was wrong. In an agony of fear and grief, she sought Roger and confided her trouble. It was the same old story. Roger's attitude was that of a badly used man. His contempt for Lillian did more to break her heart than her condition.

Trapped, Roger went to his sister to find a way out of his trouble, pretending he was interested in the case of a friend. Her suspicions aroused, Mrs. Walton was not slow to discover the truth. Her fear that her husband would discover the state of affairs existing was even greater than her horror of the deed. It was not hard to persuade her to give Dr. Malfit's name and address. This time the great Dr. Malfit blundered. Lillian lived long enough to tell her mother the truth; then she paid the price of her folly with her life.

Her distracted mother confronted the family with the tragedy and although Roger escaped by leaving the country and Mrs. Walton's part in it was not discovered, the District Attorney got the one criminal of whom he knew, Dr. Malfit, and brought all his efforts to bear upon convicting him. Fighting for his life, Malfit wrote to Mrs. Walton, threatening her with exposure unless she influenced her husband in his favor. This she was unable to do; but Malfit's effort to bring the names of his clients into the case were unsuccessful, and he was given a heavy sentence. In revenge he sent his day book to the District Attorney, with the pages marked on which Mrs. Walton's accounts with him were registered. In this way the District Attorney learned why his home was childless. A bitter scene ensued that broke Mrs. Walton's spirit of selfishness forever, awakened her to a sense of the wrong she had committed and brought repentance.

Repentance came too late. The Portals were never again opened to her. Throughout the years with empty arms and guilty conscience she must face her husband's unspoken question, "Where Are My Children?"

LOVE TRIUMPHANT (Two Parts—May 21).—The cast: Gerald Hargrave (Kingsley Benedict); Martha Hargrave (Adele Farrington); Egbert Dollard (Val Paul); Aime Leighton (Gretchen Lederer). Written and produced by Harry S. Stafford.

Gerald Hargrave, a young bank clerk, is in love with Aime Leighton, a woman some years older than himself, who is the proprietress of a fashionable gambling house. Encouraged by Aime, young Gerald has patronized the various games of chance, until his small patrimony is exhausted and he finds himself in debt to the establishment.

Martha Hargrave, Gerald's sister, who is some ten years older than he, has just engaged herself to Egbert Dollard, who, supposedly, is a man of wealth. In reality, Dollard is the business partner of Aime Leighton.

Aime and Dollard meet with a run of bad luck, and, needing money, decide to "call" the I. O. U.'s of Gerald Hargrave. Approached by Aime, Gerald pleads inability to take up his "markings." Enraged, Aime not only spurns the infatuated Gerald, but gives him the alternative of choosing between immediate settlement and exposure to the officials of his bank.

Overcome with fear of exposure, Gerald is tempted to "borrow" from the bank. His nerve fails him, however, and he replaces the cash which he has taken. That night, Dollard accompanies Martha home from the opera, bids her good-night and hastens to Aime Leighton's establishment. Martha, on her way to the room, hears the restless pacing of Gerald's footsteps in his room. She demands admittance, and, after an effort, succeeds in drawing from Gerald the confession of his gambling operations. Upon his promise to sever all relations with Aime and her establishment, Martha agrees to take up Gerald's I. O. U.'s. The boy is delighted, and prepares to go to the Leighton establishment. But Martha, unwilling to trust him, informs him that she will transact the affair. Gerald demurs. Martha yields, but stipulates that Gerald shall not enter the gambling house. In Gerald's auto, brother and sister drive to the Leighton establishment. Martha meets Aime, expresses a desire to take up Gerald's I. O. U.'s and hands Aime the cash. Aime, not a little amused, asks Martha to be seated while she (Aime) gets the "markers." Dollard in the salon, gets in an argument with one of the croupiers. His voice carries to Martha, but she while recognizing it, believes it a coincidence.

In an angry mood, Dollard exits from the salon and runs into Martha. In the midst of their scene Aime enters, sees Dollard's effort to square himself, and quickly withdraws. In her room we see Aime securing a six-shooter and hastening to return to the scene. In the street, Gerald becomes alarmed at the prolonged absence of Martha and enters the Leighton house. Above, in the drawing-room, Aime's hand, in which is the gun, is seen protruding through the portieres, the weapon covering the arguing Martha and Dollard. The gun is fired, the bullet entering the door, which Gerald is in the act of opening.

Aime enters the room. In the scene which follows, Martha and Aime each demand of the other Dollard's relationship. The question settled, Aime hands Gerald his sister's thousand dollars, then tears up the I. O. U.'s hurls the bits into Dollard's face and then orders Gerald to conduct Martha from the house. They exit and return to the Hargrave home. Aime fusses a moment with the gun, then lays it on the table, glances at Dollard, summons the negro servant and bids him get Dollard his hat. Dollard passes out, leaving Aime defeated, yet triumphant. In the Hargrave home, Gerald expresses to Martha his gratitude.

VIRGINIA (May 23).—This picture was originally scheduled for release on May 9, but was later postponed until May 23. "War in Mexico" was released on May 9. A description of "Virginia" can be found on page 1218 of the issue dated May 13.

HARMONY IN A FLAT (May 26).—The cast: Benjamin Holbrook (Ben Wilson); Rosalie (Dorothy Phillips); the janitor (Charles Ogle); Professor Hunt (Frank Baker). Written by William Addison Lathrop. Produced by Raymond L. Schrock.

Ben and Rosalie are about to be married. In discussing their plans the question arises as to where they shall live, and Ben pictures to Rosalie the advantages of a cosy little Harlem flat. Rosalie, however, is of the opinion that the hotel, such as the one in which they happen to be living, would prove more desirable than a flat, but Ben assures her that a hotel would be far too noisy for them.

After a glorious honeymoon the happy couple are ushered into a Harlem flat by the rough janitor, who proceeds to instruct them in regard to the rules and regulations of the place. Everything goes along smoothly until they retire for the night. Then the twin beds loom up before them and to Ben they seem miles apart. About 1.30 A. M. a deafening noise shakes the building. Ben and Dorothy are awakened and cling to each other in dismay, but they have no cause for alarm, however, as it is only Professor Knutt teaching his pupils the latest society dances in the upper flat.

The couple return to slumberland. As the sun is rising about 5 A. M. they are awakened by the buzzing of the dumbwaiter. Ben gets out of bed and discovers that the janitor is calling for his garbage can. He complies with the request and returns to the bed. Presently he is again awakened by the gruff janitor who imparts the important information that his can has been returned. On his return to the bedroom Ben moves the twin beds a little closer together, hopeful that at last he will be able to sleep. There is another awful ringing of the bell, and Ben is informed that the milkman has delivered the milk.

Later he is aroused by another vigorous ring, only to discover that the iceman has brought the ice. Cursing his luck and the Harlem flat, Ben carries his pillow into the kitchen and stretches himself out beneath the dumbwaiter. Suddenly the telephone bell rings, this time in the front of the flat. Ben picks up his pillow and ambles toward the phone, where Rosalie has taken down the receiver and is telling a certain intoxicated individual on the other end of the line that "Sadie" doesn't live in their flat. This is the limit, and Ben and Rosalie return in a dejected mood to the bedroom, where, with the two beds now in close proximity, they discuss the situation and decide that living in a Harlem flat is not "a thing of beauty and a joy forever."

Rosalie pictures to Ben the joy of living in a hotel apartment in future with servants at their beck and call. Ben apparently agrees with her. Early next morning the janitor looms up with the lease and urges Ben to affix his signature. The loving couple are now dressed for travel. Ben takes one look at the lease and with a howl of derision, tears it into a thousand pieces, which he scatters about the room. While the gruff janitor is catching his breath and stands before them dumbfounded, Ben and Rosalie, with their bags packed, cross the threshold of the room and bid him a sarcastic farewell.

A GENTLE VOLUNTEER (Three Parts—May 28).—The cast: Paul (Ben Wilson); Cleo (Dorothy Phillips); Virginia (Sydell Dowling); Emmy (Vivian Prescott). Scenario by Olga Printzlau Clark. Produced by Ben Wilson.

An old man wandering up on the mountain side stops to rest 'neath a pine tree. As he discovers a grave and leans over the stone, the scene fades to a southern darky plantation. Craven, the owner, has made Emmy, a mulatto girl, his mistress. She is despised by the other darkies for her submission to Craven. Craven goes one day to the slave market and purchases Hester, a slave and, her little girl, Cleo. As time passes, Emmy is cast off by Craven and is put to work in the fields, where the darkies are at liberty to show their hate. Hester is horrified as she listens to Craven's proposal. Craven threatens to sell the child if she refuses to become his mistress. Hester promises.

Emmy has overheard the conversation, and is filled with hate and jealousy. That night she goes to Hester and, feigning sympathy, helps her to escape. After Hester and little Cleo are safe on their way in the woods, Emmy tells Craven of the escape, and as a result the bloodhounds are sent out. In the woods Hester falls and injures her leg. In the distance she hears the baying of the dogs. Hester realizes that death is near. She resolves to die alone, and kisses her little Cleo and urges her to go on. She is later torn to pieces by the dogs. Early morning finds little Cleo asleep under a tree near the edge of the woods. Paul, the ten-year-old son of a wealthy southerner, finds the child and takes her home. They decide to adopt her, thinking she is a white child.

Fifteen years pass, and Paul is a young man of twenty-five, while Cleo is a beautiful girl of eighteen. Paul attends a select college in the South. He is friends with the Mayor's son of the college town. Paul visits his home and, while strolling in the garden, idly plucks a rose and places it in Cleo's hair. He kisses her and then mounts his horse for a ride. She kisses the rose with passion and places it in her bosom.

Paul's visit at an end, he returns to college. At a ball he meets Virginia. They fall in love with each other. The Mayor's son also tries his suit and, as Virginia refuses to have him, he becomes bitter to Paul.

Paul enlists in the Inner Guards, an order that prohibits its members to marry till they are advanced in rank. The two men, during a violent quarrel over Virginia, arrange a duel. Paul is the victor, but the Mayor's son is so outraged that his father compels Paul to leave the town. Virginia promises to await his return. Shortly after Paul's return home a town crier dashes through the streets with the news that Lincoln has called for troops. Paul enlists at once.

Cleo learns that she is of colored blood, from a man in the army. Realizing she can never be Paul's wife, she goes to him to tell of her terrible discovery. Paul cannot make her consent to go home till he goes. She turns in the thicket for a last look at Paul standing on the cliff top. Suddenly she starts. In the dense thicket a spy crawls along. He stops and aims his gun at Paul. Cleo quickly takes out her gun to prevent it. A misstep—a fall over a loose branch and the spy turns his gun upon her and fires.

Cleo is shot down as she rises to fire. The spy escapes, and Paul rushes to Cleo. He carries her back to the camp fire. She dies in his arms with his kiss upon her lips, faithful to the end. The soldiers tenderly bury her in a narrow grave which they dig by the side of the little mountain trail, and march away, while Paul lingers at the grave of the little sister who gave her life for him.

Finally he is coaxed from the grave and joins the soldiers as they march away. On the crude headstone they had marked: "A Gentle Volunteer." This is the same stone which is found by the old man years later in the opening scene of the picture.

A CAD (June 3).—The cast: Billy Garrick (Ben Wilson); Herbert Gale (Geo. W. Gerard); Violet Masterson (Dorothy Phillips). Scenario written by Dwight Cleveland. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Billy Garrick is accidentally shot by Herbert Gale while they are on a hunting trip. While he is delirious, Herbert steals a locket from him containing the picture of his promised wife, Violet Masterson. Herbert was also a suitor of Violet's, but Billy won her heart and hand. Billy grows worse and Herbert sees in his death a chance to marry Violet. He pays an Indian to make sure of his rival's death and goes back to the city and tells Violet and her family that Billy was shot and killed by an Indian for trifling with an Indian girl's affections.

At first Violet does not believe the story, but finally Herbert shows her the locket and convinces her. An Indian girl hears of the plot to kill Billy and determines to save him. The Indian thinks the fever will kill his charge and spends most of his time drinking, which gives the Indian girl a chance to nurse Billy back to health. Herbert forces his attentions upon Violet and she finally consents to marry him. As Billy gets stronger, the Indian becomes more watchful and Billy cannot find an opportunity to escape. The day of the wedding approaches and Violet repents of her promise to marry Herbert, but thinks of Billy's supposed unfaithfulness and becomes reconciled. At last Billy manages to slip down the river in a canoe and escapes.

Violet is about to marry Herbert. The minister starts the ceremony when Billy enters the room. Violet, thinking he is dead, faints. Billy denounces Herbert, who is driven out of the house. Violet recovers and the minister unites the lovers in marriage.

MUSTANG.

JACK (Two Parts—May 26).—The cast: Jack (Frank Borzage); Gilman (Dick La Remo); Frances (Anna Little); Eva, Gilman's daughter (Margaret Nichols). Scenario by Karl Coolidge.

Jack is just a cowboy on the Gilman cattle ranch. Born and bred of the West, he is broad minded and easy going. In direct contrast to him is Frances, a girl of the East, who comes to the West with Gilman's daughter. Frances has been born and brought up in wealth and culture, and does not understand the cowboy who refuses to cater to her whims but who tries to dominate her. Later, when he proposes to her, she accepts him. She leaves for the East, promising to marry him when her course at school is finished.

Jack sets about to build a cabin for their home. While at her home in the East, Frances is constantly being urged by Raymond Welton, a club man, to forget the rough cowboy, and to marry him. In the end she agrees. Jack's cabin has been completed, when one day he receives a letter from Frances, in which she tells him that she has made a great mistake, and asks that he release her from their engagement. Stunned, he goes to the cabin which he has so carefully finished, and pouring oil about it, set it afire.

Gilman, from his ranch, sees the flames.

Jack is taken from the burning cabin. A doctor is hastily summoned, and pronounces the burns very serious. Too late Frances realizes that it is Jack she loves. Downstairs the guests are waiting for the bridal couple to appear. Then comes a telegram from Gilman's daughter stating that if Frances cares to see Jack alive, she must come at once. Quickly she tears off her trousseau, and donning a traveling suit, she rushes away from her hysterical mother, bursts through the astounded wedding guests,—and reaches the railroad station. The doctor states that a man in Jack's condition, especially when he does not care to live, has no chance, but at this juncture Frances arrives, and when Jack realizes that she is with him his attitude changes and he survives.

GAUMONT

SEE AMERICA FIRST No. 36 (May 17). The Yosemite National Park is the pride of the Department of the Interior, and the pictures presented in this release are official and show the care with which the park, the animals and the natural landmarks are being looked after. The pictures were taken by a government cameraman, and are obtained by Gaumont for the Mutual by special arrangement. The beautiful scenery, the wonderful water falls, the magnificent natural grandeur, and the unequalled animal preserves are all shown. The richness of the landscape has been admirably caught by the lens of the camera. This release is an amplification of a previous number, as it was found that it was impossible to do the vast subject justice in a half reel.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, No. 37 (May 24).—This release takes the spectator to the port of Georgia and the second largest city of the State. Savannah is one of the most important cities of the rapidly developing South and it has an extensive export and coastwise trade. It has many diversified industries and manufactures extensively. The Telfair Academy of Arts and Sciences is the pride of the city and contains a collection of casts, paintings and art objects that have historical value. All of the interesting points of Savannah are faithfully pictured in this release. "Nosey Ned and His New Straw Lid" is Harry Palmer's funny contribution for this issue of the split reel. Ned's hat gets into endless difficulties and so does Ned.

REPAID (Two Parts—May 22).—The cast: Jack Hardin (Edward Coxen); His Father (Harvey Clark); His Mother (Louise Lester); Harriet Lawrence (Lizette Thorne); Norman Hardin (George Field); Jasper Wade (Charles Newton).

Jack Hardin, the black sheep of his family, returns after an absence of five years. He remains a moment motionless and then goes on into the house. He looks into the library, and sees a figure at work before the wall safe. He enters the room, but the figure slips out before Jack can reach him. Jack crosses to the safe and reaches in to see what is missing. As he does so, his father working late in his private study off the library, enters. Jack endeavors to explain, but his father grows more and more excited. The accusation follows and Jack answers with an emphatic denial. Their voices arouse his mother. She sees the situation and begs her husband's mercy, but the old man is unrelenting. Jack, feeling the unjustness of the accusation slips upstairs to his own room and throws a few personal belongings in a bag. Meanwhile, his brother, Norman, arrives and learns the cause of the trouble. As Jack leaves Norman realizes that at last the field is open to him. A vision of Harriet Lawrence, whom he has loved as a rival to Jack, comes before him. Forgetting the selfishness of it, he feels a bit of satisfaction that Jack is out of the way. Jack, who is now by the outside gate, decides to see his mother once again. Going to the window he raps softly on the window of the room in which his mother is seated. She sees him and goes to him. Just then his father appears and orders him away. Again his mother intervenes and this time with success. His father relents, and all is forgiven.

Sitting alone with Harriet in the garden of her home Norman proposes, but as happened before, Harriet refuses him. She confesses it is the thought of Jack which keeps her from accepting Norman and the best he can hope for is her promise that if she does not hear from Jack within the year she will marry him. When Norman reaches home he is greatly astonished to learn that his brother has been taken back.

Jack goes to work in his father's office. Hardin, Sr., and his partner, Jasper Wade, are the sole owners of a prosperous mercantile company. Norman has been with them a number of years and it is Hardin's intention to buy a place in the firm for him. Accordingly he gives Wade his note for a part of his interest, which he turns over to Norman. The note indicates that Hardin is short of ready money and Wade determines to block business to such an extent that Hardin will be unable to pay off the note out of the returns from the company. Jack's inquiries as to how Harriet is, frightens Norman, for he knows if they meet again Harriet will immediately accept Jack. So the first time Jack speaks of her to him he tells him confidentially that she has promised to marry him. This is to Jack the last blow.

At last the fact that Hardin, Sr., is in trouble becomes known to Jack. He finds out that Wade has deliberately caused the business to shrink in order to force his father out of it with the note as a lever. Jack has kept away from Harriet and she has accepted this to mean he no longer cares, consequently she accepts Norman. Their wedding invitations are sent out.

Jack overhears the conversation between his father and his mother, in which his father confesses his inability to meet Wade's note. It will, he says, result in his withdrawal from the firm for his note now, based on current earnings, would represent more than his share is worth. Jack waits until his mother is out of the room and then enters to his father. Jack explains what he has learned about the conditions under which Wade has been handling the business. His father waits until he has finished, then ask him what he means. Jack tells him he should repudiate the check. His father sneers at him. Morning comes and Jack is resolved. He goes to the office and works until noon. It is Saturday. As his father and Norman leave Jack seeks Wade in his private office and tells him that he has come to redeem his father's note. Wade is disappointed, but has to accept. Jack tenders him his personal check for an amount in excess of the value of the note.

Home again in his own room he slowly packs up a few belongings and leaves a note for his mother. Jack boards a train and leaves, without a regret except for his mother. Back home she finds the note and reads it heartbroken.

Monday morning comes and Wade visits the bank. There the check is refused. Jack has not even an account there. He returns to the office and confronts Hardin. The note is gone and the check is worthless. Hardin realizes his gravest fears. It is what he thought all along, the black sheep has gone wrong again, but as Wade leaves he remembers the burden is removed from his shoulders, he can repay as he wishes, his worry is over. He breathes a sigh of relief and then sees a glimmer of light—perhaps, after all, the black sheep was not so black.

THE RELEASE OF DAN FORBES (Two Parts—May 29).—The cast: Dan Forbes (William Stowell); Alice Forbes (Helene Rosson); Piper Stark (Harry Von Meter); Slic Moran (Harry McCabe); Jim Corbin (Perry Banks).

The flickering flame of manhood flashes long enough in the breast of "Piper" Stark to prompt him to clear Dan Forbes of the charge of murder and to place the stamp of virtue on the brow of Alice Forbes. Nearing the end of his prison term, Dan Forbes is filled with tender thoughts of the little wife he left behind. He is wondering if she will be there—if she has remained true—will she love him?

Wearied at the glove counter of a department store, Alice, his wife, is beset with the double danger of poverty and sin, the latter held alluringly before her face by "Piper" Stark, who tries by every argument and bribe to lure her from her allegiance to her prisoner husband.

By good behavior Dan saves several months on his term, and on his release goes back to look for Alice. He cannot muster up the courage to enter the department store where she works, and wanders in a saloon. Unknown to him "Flick" Moran, the man who turned the state's evidence that sent him to prison, is also in the saloon. During the bartender's momentary absence, "Flick" is murdered and because of Dan's known animosity toward him, circumstantial evidence points to him and he flees. The evening newspapers accuse him of the crime.

Unaware of this, Alice is again approached by "Piper" Stark, whom she endeavors to avoid. She rushes into a vacant flat in which she suddenly finds her husband hiding. There is an affecting scene in which she falls upon his breast with all her old love and confidence renewed.

"Piper" appears, and Dan hides for safety in a closet. "Piper" renews his attentions to Alice—handles her roughly, and stirs the anger of Dan, who, rushing from his place of concealment, grapples with "Piper," fights down three flights of stairs and into the hands of the police.

Bruised and bleeding from his severe beating at the hands of Dan, "Piper" recovers consciouness for a moment and in a flash of manhood, declares that he saw the murder committed, that "Dan is innocent and that Dan's wife is straight."

THE MAN FROM MANHATTAN (American Five Parts—May 29).—The cast: Willoughby Whipple (Wm. Stowell); Whipple, Sr. (Chas. Wheelock); Virginia Winters (Rhea Mitchell); Her Invalid Mother (Jo Taylor); Squire Benjamin Barton (Jack Prescott); Spence (Warren Ellsworth); Ed. Wheelan (Otto Nelson); "Daddy" Eggleston (Perry Banks); Hiram Blodgett (George Bally); Skin-Flints (Harry Edmonson and William Tedmarsh).

Willoughby Whipple, son of a New Yorker, invests his all in a rundown country newspaper, after his father discharged him for writing poetry, instead of attending to business. The paper turns out to be a "lemon," but Willoughby is determined to make a success of it. With the assistance of Virginia Winters, a practical young woman of high ideals, and "Daddy" Eggleston, a tramp printer, whose worse enemy is drink, "The Bugle" finally shows signs of coming to life. Then, Squire Barton, who has announced himself as a candidate for mayor, and who owns the building in which "The Bugle" office is located, calls on Willoughby, and offers him rent free if he will agree to boost the Squire's candidacy.

In the next issue of "The Bugle," Willoughby denounces the Squire a grafter, and exposes his attempt at bribery. Meanwhile, Willoughby has protected Virginia from the unwelcome advances of Spence, the Squire's son, and has gained his enmity. As a result the Squire calls on Willoughby and orders him to get out of his building. When Willoughby goes in search of a new location, he discovers that the Squire owns every other available store building in the town. Not to be beaten, Willoughby moves his print shop into a tent, and later, in a public encounter, threatens to get even with the Squire, and defeat his candidacy for mayor.

To get Willoughby out of the way, the Squire plans to set fire to the old Bugle building, and to use Willoughby's threat as evidence that he committed the crime for revenge. The night that the Squire plans to commit the outrage, "Daddy" Eggleston goes on a spree, and through force of habit wanders back to the old Bugle office, now an empty storeroom, and falls asleep on an old abandoned couch. Later, he catches the Squire in the act of saturating the premises with coal-oil, and in a struggle that follows, is knocked senseless. Regaining consciousness, "Daddy" discovers the building on fire, and drags himself into an old vault, to escape the flames. The building burns down, and Willoughby, reminded of his threat to "get even" with the Squire, is arrested, charged with the crime.

While an angry mob clamors about the jail, Virginia telegraphs Willoughby's father, who starts for Homeville. The mob has broken into the jail and are about to drag Willoughby forth, when a tramp, looking about over the ruins, discovers "Daddy" Eggleston's dead body in the old brick vault. Daddy, who has died of suffocation, has left a chalked message on the vault wall, implicating the Squire. The discovery exonerates Willoughby, and the Squire and his son, Spence, meet with their just deserts.

The citizens of the town nominate Willoughby mayor in the Squire's stead, and are carrying him aloft on their shoulders, with shouts and cheers, when Willoughby's father speeds into Homeville. When Willoughby announces his engagement to Virginia, the old man is so pround of his boy that he promises to build him the finest newspaper office in the state for a wedding present.

CENTAUR.

CLOUDS IN SUNSHINE VALLEY (Two Parts—June 3).—The cast: Robert Wilton (William Clifford); Jim Carr (Al Garcia); Mary Mills (Margaret Gibson); Old Mills (Frederick Montague); Pedro Gonzales (Fernando Galvez); Juanita, his wife (Grace Wilson).

Jim Carr is the owner of the water rights which irrigates a great number of ranches. He is an unscrupulous man and decides to confiscate all the ranches by ruining the ranchers. This he does by raising the already high rates to an impossible price per acre.

Robert Wilton owns a ranch and is the accepted lover of Mary Mills, the daughter of a rancher. This arouses Carr's jealousy. When Wilton, whose lands are already perishing for water, receives the notice of the extortionate raise, he rides furiously to the dam and accosts Carr, whom he finds there. Carr laughs him to scorn. Wilton rides to the sheriff and hopes that he may invoke the law, but the sheriff is "fixed" and he finds himself helpless. Murder comes into his heart almost when he thinks of the ruin that is coming to himself and other ranchers, who have pioneered and have made the desert to blossom like a rose and now are threatened by ruin.

Mary's father deeply fears Carr, because his land is mortgaged to him, and when the outraged ranchers form a mob to take the law into their own hands, he joins the faction that comes to Carr's defense. One of the poor ranchers who has toiled for years on his little piece of land is a Mexican. He joins the mob, and in the deadly battle that ensues, he and Mary's father are killed.

Robert in the meantime has refused to join the mob, believing that the law can still be invoked. After the battle, the Mexican woman, Pedro's wife, goes mad with grief and despair. She swears vengeance over her husband's dead body. She goes to Carr's cabin and shoots him. In the morning Robert goes to plead with Carr. He, to be sure that his own passion of soul does not master him, empties his gun and leaves it near the house. This, with the many quarrels and his words to the rancher, "Do not do this boys, there is a better way," forms a chain of circumstantial evidence that convicts him of killing. In the meantime, the Mexican woman has gone into the desert but, realizing that another life is coming, she returns. Mary finds her and nurses her and it is through this charity that Robert is saved. Justice at last hands down a decision and peace and love at last reign in the valley.

BEAUTY.

THE COMET'S COME-BACK (May 31).—The cast: Professor Peedeeque (John Steppling); Fuller Speed (John Sheehan); Claire (Carol Halloway); Hess E. Tate (Dick Rossen).

Fuller Speed flirts with the law when he tries to make eyes at a fair damsel nearby. But she was one of the chaste variety and straightway called over a bluecoat to rout the fresh young man. Fuller didn't even look when he made his getaway and happened to stroll into a lecture hall where Professor Peedeeque, aided by his pretty daughter, Claire, was giving a lecture on "Speed-Speed." The Professor told his listeners that the world was speeding itself to death and unless it stopped shortly there would be no world in 1926. Fuller is more interested in Claire than he is in the lecture, so sticks it out.

Hess E. Tate, Claire's sweetheart, anxiously awaits her coming at the Professor's home. While the young folks make merry the Professor takes his telescope and scans the sky. Suddenly he darts back in amazement. High up in the blue sky is a strange comet! The Professor takes a withered parchment from the safe and anxiously reads it. He finds that Hoe Kem, an ancient astronomer, in the year 916 had discovered a comet, which he claimed would return at the end of every thousand year period. The gases emanating from the comet "slowed up' the world to the extent that every moving body barely crept along.

The maid's call for dinner interrupts the Professor's discourse. After the meal the young folks go for a stroll into the garden, and the Professor to his "oxygen studio" to watch the moving comet. The comet moves towards the earth; but the young folks bask in the moonlight. Suddenly, however, they are taken with a strange feeling and cannot understand what is coming over them. The Professor in his studio watches the dial and realizes that the comet is emanating its gases. He remembers the young folks and hurries them into the studio. Here they revive and watch through the portholes the people of the earth being changed into slow mechanical beings. As they watch they rejoice in being safe from the effects of the comet, but their safety is not long-lived. The depressing air creeps into the studio and the Professor rushes to his dial to find the trouble. He returns and informs the young folks that the machines contain only enough oxygen for three and that one of them must go.

Fuller and Hess look at each other and realize that one of them must go into the world of "slow-dom." Lots are drawn and

TRIANGLE PLAYS

H.B.Warner in The Market of Vain Desire

May 28th is the release date for this latest TRIANGLE PICTURE PLAY in which H. B. Warner appears. For years a prominent figure on the speaking stage he has now achieved an enviable position in motion pictures and in this latest play he more than repeats the success he made in such other TRIANGLE PICTURES as "The Raiders" and "The Beggar of Cawnpore."

He was a young clergyman and she an American heiress. Her mother wanted the girl to marry a Count for his title and position, and the Count wanted to marry her for her American dollars, so a match was planned that would have wrecked the happiness of three lives.

Should a young girl consider matrimony for the sake of a title? That's the vital question in this TRIANGLE PICTURE, and it's a question that is of deep interest to every motion picture patron, whether young or old. A father or mother will put their daughter in the place of the girl on the screen, or the daughter will consider what she would do under the same circumstances.

THE number of American girls who sell themselves or are sold by scheming mothers merely for the sake of a title or foreign position is ever increasing. Nine times out of ten the girls repent in later years and look back with sorrow at their happy youth. Whose fault was it?

H. B. Warner had to take a mighty radical step to convince the girl and her mother that they were making a big mistake. Few young men would have dared to do what he accomplished. But when your patrons have seen the last of this play they'll believe he did right.

De Wolf Hopper in "Mr. Goode, the Samaritan"

Then the other TRIANGLE DRAMA will feature another prominent stage star—De Wolf Hopper. His previous TRIANGLE PLAYS were "Sunshine Dad," and "Don Quixote."

"Mr. Goode, the Samaritan," is a real comedy drama that gives Hopper every opportunity to display his great ability as a laugh-maker, and in it he more than lives up to the reputation he attained on Broadway. For your patrons to appreciate this play they'll have to see it themselves.

Are You an Exhibitor?

Have you carefully considered the advantage of running TRIANGLE PICTURE PLAYS? Have you secured the necessary information in regard to terms, releases, etc.? If not, do not wait, but send in the attached coupon. Possibly we can be of service to you, and there's no obligation on your part.

the tension increases. Fuller draws the long straw and is forced to accept the inevitable. He is launched into the air through one of the portholes in the studio. Claire watches with tear-dimmed eyes.

Fuller "floats" to his feet and after many slow and sad wavings of the "au revoire" type slowly moves into the sphere of the "gas" laden world, while those in the oxygen studio, immune from the action of Hoe Kem's comet, sadly watch him drift into oblivion.

VOGUE.

SHY THIRTY CENTS (May 30).—The cast: A Country Boy (Rube Miller); His Sweetheart (Madge Kirby); King of the Gypsies (Arthur Tavares); His Dirty Workers (Edward Shaw and Charles Evans). Scenario written by Thomas Delmar. Produced by Rube Miller.

Rube has a sweetheart, Madge, whom he is going to marry in the near future. One day when they are taking a walk, they see a gypsy man beating an old hag. Rube interferes and saves her. Later the Chief of the Gypsies sees Madge and has her kidnapped, sending her father a note telling him that if he does not come across with the sum of one dollar, that his daughter will kick the bucket.

The father gathers all of his savings, which is only seventy cents, and takes it to the Chief. That is not enough, and Madge is condemned to be tied to a tree and blown up with a keg of dynamite. Rube tries to rescue her, but is foiled and tied up himself. However, the old hag releases him, and he pleads to be allowed ten minutes to return with the thirty cents that is shy. The Chief tells him that he will, but he lights the fuse as soon as Rube is out of sight.

Rube has his money buried six feet deep underground. He digs it up and hurries back. He arrives just in time to throw the keg of dynamite after the fleeing gypsies and blows them up. They land in a hole that he has dug his savings from, so Rube just shovels the dirt in on top of them, and lives happy ever after.

CUB.

SAWDUST LOVE (June 2).—The cast: Simpkins (Billy Armstrong); Jigger (Tommy Hayes); Nina (Mlle. Ottawa); Bigguts (Carl Lang); Tonno (Ed. Roberts).

Simpkins and his friend, Jigger, are awakened one morning by the noise of much hammering and shouting. Arising from their soft bed in a fence corner they are surprised to see a small traveling circus getting ready for business near by. Curiosity leads to the scene. The most attractive object to Simpkins is Nina, daughter of the owner, Bigguts. Simpkins also loses his heart, when Nina gives him more than a friendly look. Then and there he decides to be nearer this charming girl. He asks Bigguts for jobs for himself and Jiggers, and they are employed. Simpkins gives more attention to Nina than to his work. Tonno, the clown and strong man, who is himself in love with Nina, notes this, informs Bigguts, and Simpkins and Jiggers are ordered off the lot. They take refuge in the fence corner; Simpkins in his misery ever sees the face of Nina.

Both manage to get into the night show without benefiting the box office. Seated well up in the stands, Simpkins is overjoyed when Nina appears to do her act. A mad rush over the spectators, and he lands in the front row. The disturbed spectators raise a strong protest. Nina, turning to see what the row is about, observes Simpkins. Ah, she loves him! With outstretched arms she goes to him. The people demand her to go on with her act.

Bigguts and Tonno rush in and throw Simpkins and Jiggers out. Nina refuses to go on and returns to her dressing-room in tears. Simpkins, who has been wandering around outside, passes Nina's room and hears her sobs. Under the canvas he goes; but his joy is short-lived, for father and mother enter. Father chases Simpkins and they run back into the big tent. Tonno has gone on with his act and has made a failure; spectators hiss him. Into the ring rush Simpkins and father. Simpkins does several stunts while being chased, and is vociferously applauded. Bigguts is amazed at his work and offers him a job at his own price. Simpkins replies the price is Nina.

Here Tonno and mother raise a row, but Bigguts accepts the terms. Tonno determines revenge. Simpkins is doing a trapeze turn. Tonno cuts one of the ropes, but does not get out of the way quick enough and Simpkins falls on him and lays him out. His act cut out for the night, Simpkins retires and is met in loving embrace by Nina. Suddenly Simpkins wakes up to find that he has been embracing Jiggers—and that it was all a dream.

DISGUISES (May 29).—The cast: Oscar (Claude Cooper); His Bride (Louise Emerald Bates); Conrad (Frank E. McNish).

When Oscar returned from his honeymoon with his beautiful bride, Conrad was jealously unhappy, for Conrad had been one of the suitors she rejected. So when Conrad happened to read "Othello" he decided to cast the trustful Oscar as the Moor, and be himself a successful Iago.

The plotter's way was made easier by the sudden arrival of a man who Pearl introduced as "My Uncle Dave of Dakota." Oscar was suspicious of him from the first, and Conrad fanned the flames successfully. He tried to induce the "wronged husband" to inflict upon Pearl the fate that befell Desdemona, but Oscar, who first showed signs of yielding, regained self-control, and simply said, "Spy upon my wife? Yes. But pillow her? No." So Conrad had to be content with an agreement to closely watch Pearl and any callers she might have.

Oscar and Conrad were their own detectives, and gained admission to the house in various disguises, but with uniform ill luck. First they were janitors, next painters, who damaged the place beyond repair, and finally plumbers. During this final appearance, "Uncle Dave of Dakota" appeared and the husband, from his place of hiding, saw him kiss the beauteous Pearl. Then he went for a pillow and tried to smother uncle Dave, only to find he had made a terrible mistake, for Uncle Dave was really an uncle and had called with a deed for a house and lot as his wedding present. After the way he was treated it is not surprising that he tore up the deed. In the meantime Conrad had been having all sorts of trouble as an amateur plumber. He nearly drowned out the family, dropped the dumbwaiter and Oscar down the shaft while the unhappy bridegroom was trying to escape, and was landed in jail after a lively battle with a policeman. In court Conrad was sent to jail, but Oscar was set free after his wife had promised to "see he never did such things again."

All the same, Oscar was far from happy, and as he shook hands with Conrad before the latter was led to his cell, Conrad said enviously:

"Lucky man! You are going to jail, but I, I am going home."

For Oscar knew he was in for a lively session with the angry Pearl.

THANHOUSER

THE NYMPH (Two Parts—May 30).—The cast: The Girl (Barbara Gilroy); Her Fiance (Robert Vaughn); The Artist (Thomas A. Curran); Girl's Aunt (Inda Palmer); Girl's Uncle (Arthur Bauer).

Strangers never came to their island home, and the girl lived there happily, "a child of nature." One day, however, a stranger did arrive. He was an artist, who was rowing past the island, and, struck by its beauty, decided to land. While on his tour of exploration he discovered a little mermaid bathing in the sea—the fisherman's little daughter. The girl, trusting to the absolute seclusion of the island, did not wear a bathing suit, and as the artist was so struck with her beauty of form that he decided to engage her as his model. On her way home when the artist overtook her and offered to pay her well if she posed for the painting "The Nymph." When she realized the meaning of his offer the girl refused it and the artist was compelled to abandon his proposed picture, for he felt that no other model would be as satisfactory.

Several weeks later wealthy relatives of the girl came to the island and induced her father to permit her to return with them to the city. There the girl was provided with handsome clothes and became a part of the social life of the city. She met a wealthy young man with whom she fell in love, and promised to marry him. The artist, who was well known in the city, met the girl at her relative's home, and asked her to marry him. To his dismay she told him of her engagement. The girl thought that the artist was a gentleman, who would never mention the meeting on the little island, but, spurred on by jealous rage the artist determined to have revenge.

When he invited her to attend an exhibition of his paintings she came to his studio with her aunt and uncle, and there she felt the brunt of a cruel revenge, for upon the walls was displayed a painting of an unclad girl at the water's edge, called "The Nymph," and the face in the painting was her own! The artist told the girl's relatives that he and she had been very good friends when he visited the island, that she had posed for the painting willingly, and he had no idea she would object to its exhibition. The relatives knew that the girl and the man had met at her old home, and circumstantial evidence was so plainly against her that they refused to listen to her pleas of innocence, and requested her to leave their home.

The girl was heart-broken. When her sweetheart learned of her trouble he alone believed her story and went to the artist's studio to compel him to tell the truth. There he forced the artist to write a confession, saying that he had used another model for the figure shown in the painting, but to secure his revenge had made the face of the painting that of the girl who had rejected him. With the proofs of his fiancee's innocence the young man called upon her relatives, only to learn that she had returned to her home on the lonely little island, resolved in her misery to forget even him, but he followed her to the wilderness and saved her as she was preparing to take her own life. Then she learned the deep, noble character of the man she had promised to marry and realized that by living and become his wife she would make him happy, and so the "little nymph" forgot her troubles of the past in contemplating the happiness of the future.

FOR UNCLE SAM'S NAVY (Two Parts—May 23).—The cast: Lieutenant (Edwin Stanley); His Sweetheart (Kathryn Adams); Niece to Secretary of Navy (Louise Wirth); Conspirator (John Lehnberg); J. L. Richards (Jere Austin).

An American admiral invented a new torpedo, which tests proved to be one of the most destructive projectiles ever invented. A submarine or torpedo boat destroyer, while out of range of a battleship's guns could launch this torpedo at the battleship and destroy its powerful antagonist. The invention made it possible for a small American fleet to defend the coast against a powerful squadron of vessels.

"We must secure the plans of this torpedo," the head of a foreing secret service said to Captain Rudolph, one of his trusted aides. In America the foreign officer appeared in the guise of an American naval officer, who had bene reported killed in the Philippine Islands several years before. Captain Rudolph looked like the missing officer, and he accounted for his long absence by saying that he had been held prisoner by the Moros and had just escaped. He was welcomed back to the navy and assigned to a post on the Admiral's flagship.

As time passed, the member of the foreign secret service gained the confidence of the Admiral, and the love of the latter's daughter, but one person distrusted him—the niece of the Secretary of Navy. It seemed to her that she had met him when she was in Europe. One day a man who had served in an army abroad, met the naval officer, recognized him, and gave him the stiff military salute characteristic of the foreign army, receiving an answering salute before the officer realized he had betrayed himself. Then the naval secretary's niece saw the act, and then she recollected how she had met him while she was abroad last summer.

Her first impulse was to inform the naval authorities and cause the officer's immediate arrest, and then knowledge that the admiral's daughter loved the guilty man caused her to stay her hand. She decided to tell "Captain Rudolph" that his identity was known, and permit him to make his escape before he had accomplished any mischief. It seemed that her merciful decision was misplaced, for that evening she learned from the admiral that the plans of the torpedo had disappeared, and that several of the officers of the warship, including the man she knew to be Captain Rudolph, were under suspicion. She had discovered the man who carried away the plans and knew where he had taken them. Should she denounce the officer, or should she try to secure the stolen documents and permit him to escape? Consideration for the admiral's daughter prompted her to adopt the latter course for not even the overwhelming evidence against her sweetheart could make the girl believe that he was guilty.

The two girls gained admittance to the headquarters of the foreign spies, and by a daring ruse gained possession of the missing documents, but before they could escape, one of the band who was a trusted member of the American secret service, arrived and exposed them. The spies decided to place the girls on a steamer bound for South America, to ensure their silence until their captors could escape from the country, but as this plan was about to be carried into effect, "Captain Rudolph" appeared and took charge of the situation. He did not seem to care at all for the open scorn with which the two girls regarded him, and coldly told his subordinates that he would himself see that the two girls were safely placed on shipboard, but before he could leave the room with the girls a most unexpected message came over the telephone, which resulted in the spies making "Captain Rudolph" their prisoner.

Then the girls learned the truth about the mysterious officer. While "Captain Rudolph" had been in the foreign secret service for several years he really was the officer who had been reported killed in the Philippines, but the American government desired information concerning a powerful European government, and he succeeded in hoodwinking the foreign secret service, and succeeded in being sent to secure information concerning the new torpedo. He was suspected at last, and now he was a prisoner in the hands of his country's enemies.

The girl he loved and her friend who had suspected him, bitterly regretted their unjust suspicions, and they realized that he would probably pay for his bravery with his life, but they did not know that the house was surrounded by agents of the American government, who swarmed into the place a few minutes later and took the spies into custody. The arrival of the Admiral cleared up the mystery. The spies had not secured the plans at all, but merely blank paper which had been substituted for the real documents, to trap the spies for whom the government was searching for months, but it took "Captain Rudolph" to turn the trick. The young naval officer was complimented for his daring, but it did not seem to please him half so much as the fact that he was soon to wed the admiral's daughter, while as for the naval secretary's niece, strange to say, she never was in love with the young officer, and was sincerely glad that he was to wed the girl of his choice.

The chieftains are present in their full war costumes, which they don for the last time.

Phoenix, Arizona.—Four companies of the National Guard, called out at the request of President Wilson, leave for the border to aid the regulars in protecting the Mexican frontier.

Somewhere in Mexico.—Led by Mexican guides, little squads of American troopers continue the vain trail over the rocky mountain passes which Villa haunts.

Marathon, Texas.—Uncle Sam's Cavalrymen "tune up" for their work in avenging the murder of their comrades by Mexican bandits at Glen Springs.

THE IRON CLAW, NO. 13, "The Hidden Face" (Feature—Two Parts—May 22).—The Laughing Mask suddenly appears at the Golden house and intimates to Margery that the missing secretary, Davy, may still be alive. But the officers are on his trail and he is compelled to flee. He goes in search of Legar and finds him in a hotel. He is discovered and made a prisoner. However, he contrives to communicate with the office by means of an electric light, and is rescued. Legar gets away. The mysterious Mask then goes again to the Golden home and asks Margery to secret him. This she refuses until he reveals his identity. Accordingly, he tears of his mask and wipes the putty from his face. But the disclosure is not for us, however.

WHO'S GUILTY? NO. 3, "The Tangled Web" (Arrow—Two Parts—May 22).—This picture tells of Ruth Alden, a young girl, the ward of Mrs. Winthrop, who has social ambitions but a slim purse. Ruth is in love with Fleetwood Blair, a promising young man, and her love is reciprocated; but Estelle Kendrick, a friend of Ruth's, is also fond of the young man. They announce their engagement to Mrs. Winthrop, but she is beside herself with rage and orders young Blair from the house. Mrs. Winthrop then sends a note to Fleetwood telling him that Kendrick will offer him a large salary to travel for his firm. She urges her fiance to accept the offer, and he does.

Kendrick, with a clear field, finally marries Ruth and makes her life miserable. She, in turn, proves most extravagant, and Kendrick tells her that her promiscuous purchases must cease. In time Blair returns from his trip and goes to Ruth. But he learns that she has wedded Kendrick and is broken hearted. Kendrick is in the midst of a big deal in copper and Ruth tells his secrets to a rival firm, these people using the information to bring about his ruin.

Later in the day Ruth asks Blair to come to her home and there they learn of the forged letter that Mrs. Winthrop sent to the young man. Kendrick returns home, a beaten man, while Fleetwood is in the house, and a violent altercation follows. He is armed, and before help arrives fires at his wife and her sweetheart. When the smoke clears away two bodies lie stretched out on the floor—dead. "Who's Guilty?"

LUKE'S LATE LUNCHERS (Rolin May 22).—Luke starts off as the proprietor of a bean foundry, where the gentle little flies mingle with the peaceful butter cakes. But they're the best butter cakes, so Luke feels no qualms for the flies' digestions. It does worry him, though, when the beard of one of his customers gets into the soup. Luke ties the beard about its owner's neck, and the old man Niagara's on. It worries Luke again when one of his customers insults his china by calling it cracked—when there'e only a hair on it! The old dish rag, soaked and wrung out as occasion requires, is the source of all soup, through which, ever and anon, a resigned bean is passed, to give the dish atmosphere. Of course, Luke can't get away with this stuff, and the picture ends in a scrap that is "enjoyed by all."

SAVING THE SHAD SUPPLY (Pathe—May 22). This film is an official picture made for the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries and released by Pathe with Government approval. The shad, famous wherever people eat, for its well known roe and other succulent parts, is decreasing so rapidly along the Atlantic Coast, that commercial extinction is prevented only by the artificial hatching which the Bureau of Fisheries conducts. These pictures were made at the Government's principal shad hatchery, Albemarle Sound, N. C.

This picture shows how the shad is caught in gill nets, pound nets, and seine nets. The fish culturist is shown selecting ripe shad from the catch, squeezing mature eggs from the females and fertilizing them by mixing them with a small quantity of milt from the males. The eggs are hatched in a jar, the fish swim out of the top of it and into waiting tanks by the outgoing current. The little shad then are removed from the tanks, taken out to sea and dropped overboard.

YUNNAN-FOU (Southwest China—On same reel as foregoing).—The picture shows Yunnan-Fou, the capital of the Province of Yunnan. It is a flourishing commercial city, and has a population of upwards of 100,000.

The market place is filled from daylight to dark with a busy crowd of merchants and buyers. Yunnan-Fou is a walled city, intersected by canals. The quaint East Gate is also shown. It is the principal entrance to the city.

Women dealers in silk rags are encountered on almost every street. Then the market for old iron, knick-knacks and jewelry and the shop of a thread merchant are pictured. Next we see Yunnanese horsemen who use sturdy native ponies of great speed and remarkable powers of endurance.

The film ends with the picture of the women of Yunnan-Fou, who, like all Chinese women, care nothing how much they suffer provided they can make their feet small.

LEAP YEAR (Pathe—May 22).—This animated cartoon, which is the second of the Goldberg series, tells the story of a forty-seven-year-old maiden who would have been more popular if all men were nearsighted. The maid is described as Miss Ophelia Fadéout, whose face has frightened all the children in the neighborhood, but who, nevertheless, still hopes to "chloroform some poor simp into matrimony."

She gives orders to the janitor to hold a sack under the sidewalk and "wait for my future husband to drop into it." Then she rigs up a contrivance with the manhole whereby the unwary will drop through and be bagged. But the men who pass are watched over by a special Providence and she is at last forced to the extremity of taking a tailor's dummy to the justice of the peace.

HOW TO BRING UP A CHILD (Pathe—On same reel as foregoing).—This picture is charming in that it shows a roly-poly kid in its bath, and funny in that the manoeuvres of the child's toilette are ludicrously burlesqued in the subtitles which accompany it. We quote a few of them:

"Strong hands should be employed in giving the baby a rub-down. Rough treatment early in life will prepare the child for car crushes and other pleasures of later days." "If the child wants to wind its legs around its head, let it do so. It may develop into a contortionist and earn a good salary for you in your old age." "If the kid doesn't go to the contents of its bottle, don't worry. Biting the glass will help the shape of its mouth and make its sprouting teeth nice and loose." "The bright sunlight, of course, is the place to let the child take its nap. If the baby becomes blind early in life, it won't mind it so much later on."

THE IRON CLAW NO. 14, "The Plunge for Life" (Feature—Two Parts—May 29).—The Laughing Mask, pursued by the police and suspected as being the perpetrator of the crimes committed by The Iron Claw, takes up his abode in a cave high up on the Palisades.

He is discovered there later and has to flee. Margery is with him at the time, and together they jump over the cliff. The police find that Legar has also taken a place for safety near that of the Mask, and he, too, makes the perilous jump to the river below. The Mask later goes to the Golden household to see Margery and is discovered there by the police. He makes his escape and runs to a trolley car which is running along some distance off. Commandeering this, he throws off the motorman and takes charge of the car. It jumps the track as it crosses a bridge and falls into the street below, a twisted, splintered wreck. The detectives, following the Mask, run up, but no trace of his body is found.

WHO'S GUILTY? NO. 4, "The Silent Shame" (Arrow—Two Parts—May 29).—In this picture we see Mrs. Hilliard married to a man who has ceased to love her. Their young daughter is kept at boarding-school. Mrs. Hilliard admires and is deeply loved by Bruce Kingston, a rising young author. Their relationship is of the purest. Gossip plays with their names and infuriates Hilliard. He casts his wife out, saying he will divorce her. Kingston says he will marry Mrs. Hilliard as soon as the decree is entered.

By chicanery and the aid of an unscrupulous attorney, Mrs. Hilliard is led to believe her husband has obtained a divorce when, as a matter of fact, he has not. Believing herself free she marries Kingston. Of course this second marriage is bigamous. That is part of Hilliard's revenge. When it suits his further purposes, he tells her of the trick that has been played on her and she tells Kingston. She leaves Kingston and remains for years self-exiled in Europe.

When she returns it is to find her daughter grown and destined to a splendid theatrical career. The daughter is to be starred in a new play of Kingston's. The two love each other devotedly. The daughter's stage name has hidden her real identity from Kingston. The mother-love is strongest, and Mrs. Hilliard does not reveal her past to her daughter nor does she tell her daughter about Kingston's connection with her own life.

But Hilliard does when he learns of the marriage of his daughter to Kingston. The result of this is tragedy, swift and terrible in its dire effects. The one-time triangular situation bred by divorce is affecting the lives of four people. "Who's Guilty?"

ICE (Mittenthal—May 29).—Our old friends Heinie and Louie are featured with the ice, or rather, on the ice, and give an exhibition of rough ice riding. The cake of ice gets started on its downward path early in the story, but is captured by Heinie, who brings it back to its owner a little lighter for its exercise, but then you can't melt your cake and have it. So the proprietress, a fascinating Mariuch, is content. She is more than content—she is actually beaming; for the gallant Heinie has appealed to her as a man whose place should ever be her ice house. Heinie doesn't mind being liked, but he never was clever on the ice, so he puts his partner Louie on the job while he melts the ice lady's heart. Mariuch's former sweetheart then appears on the scene and with the aid of some companions, proceeds to cool Heinie's ardor by tying him to a cake of ice and starting him from the top of a high hill, for heaven knows where.

SIBERIA, THE VAST UNKNOWN, NO. 8 (Pathe—May 29).—The latest installment shows the 2,000 mile Kolyma River, at the end of the Siberian winter, frozen over with a mass of ice four feet thick. The river is three miles wide at the point shown in the picture. About June 1, the warm weather sets in, and the ice begins to break up and flow away. It usually takes about eight days to clear the river of ice. The first motor boat to ply the waters of the Kolyma in eight months—a mail carrier—is here shown.

The next scene shows the Russian officials at the town of Nijni Kolymsk awaiting the arrival of the mail. Then comes the picture of a Tartar, who has been living in Siberia as an exile for 28 years. During this man's exile he has brought up a family and has become rich. His daughter, who is also shown, is quite the most beautiful girl in Nijni Kolymsk. Various other interesting scenes are shown.

THE TOKIO EXPOSITION (Pathe—On same reel as foregoing).—The picture starts at the entrance to the exposition grounds in Ueno Park, a picturesque location on the shores of Lake Shinobazu. The lake divides the exposition grounds in two sections. The Tokio Exposition, like all other expositions, has one part devoted to attractions. Next comes a view of the entrance to the second section of the exposition. Then a panorama of the lake, showing the Palace of the Colonies, one of the handsomest of the exposition buildings. The Chinese Pavilion and the Pavilion of the Islands are also shown. Another scene, this one a night picture, shows the exposition buildings, brilliantly illuminated, transforming the shore of the lake into a fairyland.

THE LION AND THE GIRL (Keystone—Two Parts—April 30).—The cast: Joe Jackson, Claire Anderson, May Wells, Louis Morrison, Clarence Lyndon, Leo Kendal and Billy Hauber.

Joe Jackson is engaged in his usual vocation of avoiding toil when he becomes very hungry. Routed from the monkey cage at the zoo, he goes to a nearby brook and finds a fishpole on the bank. He casts, but the hook never reaches the water. It takes hold of a bulky handbag in the lap of a woman who is dozing on a park bench. Joe reels in and examines the contents of the bag. He is looking over a costly watch when a policeman interrupts him and sends him on his way. The woman recovers her bag minus the watch.

Joe now goes to a show where they lend money and sell clothing and everything else so fine. He exchanges the watch for a gay outfit and departs through the window when he overhears a conversation about a stolen watch. It develops that the timepiece has been given to his wife by one of the partners in the shop. Joe is well on his way before the truth is discovered and goes to the zoo. He arrives just as one of the girl members of a party has been thrown from a swing into the cage of a raging lion. Joe goes over after her, routs the lion and lifts the girl to safety. The girl is Claire, daughter of the woman whose watch had been stolen. In the party is the son of her father's partner. He loves her, but Joe is now her hero. He poses as a count and their engagement is announced.

The day of the wedding Joe appears without a ring and in haste father's partner comes from the store with one. He recognizes Joe instantly as the man who had obtained the outfit for the stolen watch. The case that follows leads to the top of a skyscraper. Father and Joe fight at the top and the former drops to a lot of telegraph wires below. In the end Claire still wants to marry Joe, but he confesses that he is only a tramp and departs, leaving her in the arms of Leo.

HER MARBLE HEART (Keystone—Two Parts—May 7).—The cast: Charles Murray, Louise Fazenda, Harry Booker, Frank Hayes and Wayland Trask.

Charles Murray, a neighbor of Booker, wants to marry the latter's daughter, Louise, and uses a mortgage to overcome the young woman's objections. Louise wants to wed Wayland, her father's hired man, but Booker is frightened by the prospect of foreclosure of the mortgage and refuses to consent to the love match. A marriage of convenience is arranged, but this receives a rude jolt when Wayland falls heir to a small fortune. Booker opens the letter and reads the glad news and the hired man doesn't know why his employer suddenly changes his mind and consents to the wedding of the farm hand and his pretty daughter.

When Murray is confronted with the change of affairs he demands an explanation. Booker shows him the letter. On the day of the wedding Murray sends a fake telegram to Trask informing him that the first news was wrong; the fortune was left to another man with the same name. Giving it to a messenger, he starts for the Booker home with a minister, believing that his plot will be successful and that in the circumstances Booker will be glad to throw out the hired man and accept the neighbor in whose hands is the fatal mortgage.

But the messenger dawdles by the way and when Murray and the minister arrive there has been no cloud cast over the ceremony as planned. Murray goes in search of the messenger and they return while the ceremony is in progress. Booker intercepts the telegram but refuses to read it until the couple have been pronounced man and wife. Then he reads. Later he goes for his shot gun, believing that Wayland has obtained Louise by a trick. Before murder is actually committed, however, a man arrives with the hired man's $10,000, the mortgage is paid off and Murray put to rout by a few well-directed charges of buckshot.

NOT MY SISTER (Ince—Five Parts—May 14).—The cast: Grace Tyler (Bessie Barriscale); Michael Arnold (William Desmond); John Marshall (Franklin Ritchie); Ruth Tyler (Alice Taaffe); Mrs. Tyler (Louise Brownell).

Grace Tyler, elder daughter of a family that is now in poor circumstances, poses for a sculptor, Arnold. One day her sister, who has always accompanied her, is not present, and Arnold takes advantage of the occasion to force his attentions upon Grace. She tells no one at home, but goes no more to the studio, and later makes a good marriage.

Several years pass before the sculptor again comes into her life. This time he wants Ruth to pose for him. The girl is enthusiastic and, as Grace cannot give the real reason for her opposition, Ruth accepts the invitation of the great artist to be his model for youth. As before, the two sisters always go to the studio together. After a while Marshall begins to suspect that his wife is fond of the artist, and to test her, suggests a little pleasure tour. Grace protests that she cannot go until Arnold has completed his work and in the jealous argument that follows Marshall is so outspoken that Grace finally tells him why she cannot leave Ruth.

Meanwhile Ruth has gone alone to the studio. But in her Arnold has found a more desperate victim. She is willing to kill to protect herself. She is just fleeing from the studio and its dead when Marshall enters with drawn revolver. His decision has been quickly made after Grace's confession. He is arrested and it appears that he will be convicted on circumstantial evidence when Ruth can remain silent no longer. She takes the stand and tells her dramatic story; Marshall is acquitted.

SUSAN ROCKS THE BOAT (Fine Arts—Five Parts—May 14).—The cast: Susan Johnstone (Dorothy Gish); Larry O'Neil (Owen Moore); Jim Cardigan (Fred J Butler); Jasper Thornton (Fred A. Turner); Randolph Johnstone, Susan's grandfather (Edwin Harley); Mrs. Randolph Johnstone (Kate Bruce); Percy Winton (Clyde E. Hopkins); Patrick Casey (James O'Shea).

Susan Johnstone, with a large fortune and no responsibility, tires of her brainless existence and, after much reading of the story of Joan of Arc, is inspired to become a modern Joan. She decides to give her life to the emancipation of the poor and persuades Jasper Thornton, a brilliant criminal lawyer, to aid her in founding the Joan of Arc Mission in the slums. The local element looks upon her work as an easy solution of the prevalent slum desire to avoid work. All the loafers in the neighborhood take advantage of the young girl's innocence to get gifts of money. The owner of the property, Cardigan, who runs the principal dive in the district, looks upon Susan with different eyes and schemes to get her in his power.

Meanwhile Larry O'Neil, son of the late political boss of the ward, resents the society effort to uplift the district. Susan, who has a speaking acquaintance with the young man, naturally resents his attitude. As time goes on, Larry finds himself more interested in Susan's work, so much so that he puts an end to much of the petty grafting of which she has been the victim.

But there remains a trace of resentment for her interference, and this is almost fatal. A no-good character discovers that the girl has been lured to Cardigan's rooms and tries to tell Larry so that he can rescue her. Larry is pestered almost to the breaking point before he will listen. Then he loses no time. Susan has been putting up a fair defense but is about exhausted when Larry breaks in. Several of Cardigan's followers interfere but are overcome. The end is obvious.

MYSTERIES OF MYRA (No. 4—Two Parts—May 15).—Dr. Alden is aroused by the plight of Myra Maynard and, knowing the evil power which is behind her persecution, he determines to enter the Black Lodge and put an end to the scheme. He schemes with his Hindu colleague, who has already gained access to the Order.

Meanwhile the Grand Master is perfecting an evil scheme which will bring about Myra's destruction. In the darkness of his infernal laboratory he places a mask over his mouth and inflates a toy balloon with a poisonous gas. As the over-inflated balloon bursts he smiles in devilish glee as if contemplating what will happen when the gas is again liberated. The Grand Master calls two of his men and instructs them as to the safe delivery of the balloons into the hands of the one whose death he seeks. Disguised as men who peddle balloons, they leave the Black Order by means of a secret door in a hollow tree. Hurrying through the nearby woods one of the balloons catch upon a twig. Fearful lest it burst while attempting to disentangle the string, they leave it there.

At this point Dr. Alden and the Hindu reach the hollow tree and array themselves in the garb of the Order. The Hindu sees the deserted balloon and in trying to extricate it, it bursts and he is partly overcome. They both wonder at the incident, but put it aside for the more serious business at hand. The Hindu leads Dr. Alden through the usual entrance and they descend a flight of stairs. They find themselves in a large room. The Hindu exchanges signals with someone above, Then Alden, grasping the hooks of the circular trap door, is swung into the chamber above. He intimidates the lone sentry, who is bound hand and foot by the Hindu. They pass into the next room. Once inside a strange thing happens. The supposedly stone figure squatting at the left of the altar suddenly becomes alive. Springing down from its pedestal it liberates the sentry. Once freed this man starts in pursuit of Alden and his companion. He is about to strike as the Hindu, turning quickly, pursues him back through the council chamber. As they dash through a dim archway the fake statue presses a spring and a heavy grating descends. The sentry escapes and notifies the others that they are in danger. As the members pass through the doorway the Hindu joins the ranks and passes unnoticed.

Meanwhile Alden has wandered into the Grand Master's abode. The Master throws his strange evil power over him and seemingly electrifies him. While he can see and realize what is taking place, Alden cannot move a muscle. Scornfully the Master speaks from the darkness: "You have forced yourself into our lodge. I sentence you to be buried alive," and then spitefully, "as you die Myra will also breathe her last."

Suddenly Alden is surrounded by a red glow and the spot upon which he is standing begins to slowly sink into a pit below. The members have arranged themselves in a half circle, and as the platform upon which Alden is standing touches the ground the men step forward and silently lift the rigid form of Alden and lower it into the coffin. The box is put into the grave and all but two of the members file out. The Hindu drops out of line and descends to a lower level of the strange abode. Seizing a pick he begins to dig into the ceiling above him. He eventually succeeds in getting the coffin out of the ground, and with the Hindu, Alden escapes. Meanwhile the two members of the Order carrying the balloons meet Varney outside of the Maynard home. Varney ascertains that Myra is in her room, and she is suddenly surprised in seeing a red toy balloon float in through the window. Impelled by curiosity she attempts to reach it as another floats into the room.

Alden bolts into the house much to the astonishment of Varney and Mrs. Maynard, and, without a word, dashes upstairs. As he opens the door of Myra's room she turns quickly and, in doing so, explodes one of the balloons. Quick as a flash Alden covers her mouth and roughly pushes her into the hall, slamming the door after him. Myra demands an explanation. Mrs. Maynard is astonished at his strange behavior, while Varney is decidedly uncomfortable, although confident that the deadly gas is by this time dispelled, leaving no evidence to support Dr. Alden's unbelievable claim that his prompt action had saved Myra's life. Together the four enter Myra's room. Everything is in order as before. Suddenly Myra utters a stifled cry of surprise and grief. She has discovered in its ornate cage the lifeless form of her pet canary.

MYSTERIES OF MYRA (No. 5—Two Parts—May 22).—Having firmly determined upon entering the abode of the Black Order and putting an end to the insidious scheme against the life of Myra Maynard, Dr. Alden appears before the authorities and secures the assistance of the police. Varney has acquainted the Black Master with Alden's plans and the Master is prepared for the coming of the police. In addition, the wicked head of the order instructs Varney that it is his duty to see that Myra's astral body be released. Varney departs the moment before Alden arrives with his assistants. As they pass the hollow tree it is uprooted by a terrific explosion, this having been brought about by the Grand Master, who previously planned the blast. Alden commands the police to enter the old house, but, as they approach the building it bursts into flames. Gratified by the success of their plans, the members assemble in the Council Chamber, where the young Hindu, Alden's colleague, attempts to depart from the other members. His departure is noticed and, suspecting that he is a traitor, the Master commands that he be followed.

Varney has now arrived at the Maynard home and is telling Myra of Alden's attempt to raid the Order. He is interrupted by the arrival of a letter from the Black Master for Myra, stating that by the time she receives this letter Payson Alden will be dead. Fearing for Alden's safety, Myra suggests to Varney that she try Alden's hypnotizing machine in hopes that she might be able to send her astral body in search for the doctor. Torn by conflicting emotion and yet loyal to the compelling will of the Order, Varney acquiesces, and they depart for Alden's laboratory.

Having safely escaped from the lodge, the Hindu writes Alden a note, in which he plans to meet him at noon. It is delivered to Alden, who leaves for the appointed place. There he is keenly disappointed by the non-appearance of the Hindu. Suddenly a ghastly light appears. The Hindu has indeed kept his appointment, but he is dead and horribly mutilated. Having suspected him of being a spy, the members had followed him and killed him before he could meet Alden.

The Grand Master determined to bring about the destruction of Myra, hypnotizes himself so that if Myra's astral body is released his may also be near hers, in order to offer greater assistance in bringing about her destruction. Back in Alden's laboratory Myra allows herself to be hypnotized by Varney before the revolving machine. At the moment when the Master's astral body is passing from his natural form, her astral body is also being released from her young figure.

Mrs. Maynard has become excited about Myra's disappearance and, learning that her daughter and Varney went to Alden's work shop, hurries there. In the Council Chamber of the Black Order the members are assembled in solemn conclave. Suddenly the astral bodies of Myra and the Grand Master appear in the smoke from the incense burner. To the amazement of the kneeling members the two bodies sway back and forth, dissolving into one, and then reappearing as two.

Mrs. Maynard has arrived at Alden's home and Varney tells her that Myra asked to be hypnotized and that he is unable to arouse her. At this moment Alden bursts into the room. At a glance he comprehends the situation, and Mrs. Maynard suggests that they try the hypnotizing wheel again, in hopes that the same method which put Myra into her trance might bring her out of it. This proves successful, much to the amazement of those assembled in the Black Lodge, who see first one and then the other astral body disappear before their eyes. An unexpected phenomena occurs as a result of the mental contest, for the two astral bodies are confused, so that when Myra awakes it is with the soul of the Black Master, while the Master's body contains the innocent spirit of the young girl.

This change is unnoticed by Mrs. Maynard, Varney and Alden. At the Maynard home Myra calls Dr. Alden to one side and frankly tells him of her love for him. At this point the compelling spirit of the Black Master is uppermost in her, and she draws Alden's revolver from his pocket and attempts to shoot him. Alarmed by the shot, Mrs. Maynard rushes into the room with Varney. Alden begins to explain to them what has happened. The story is so unbelievable that they judge Alden insane and he departs.

MY COUNTRY FIRST (Terris Film Co.—Six Parts—May).—The cast: Frank Draper (Tom Terriss); Helen Lowell, in love with Draper (Helene Ziegfeld); Dempsey, master plotter (John Hopkins); Florian, in the employ of Dempsey (Alfred Heming); Philip Thompson, an artist working for Dempsey (Joseph Baker); Ferdinand Blanck, a photographer in the employ of Dempsey (Joseph Sterling); Nana, wife of Blanck, in love with Dempsey (Jill Woodward); Anderson, of the Secret Service (Alfred Vosburgh); Morton, an old chemist in the employ of Dempsey (Tom Terriss).

Frank Draper, a patriotic young American, has invented the most wonderful explosive in the world which he intends giving to the United States. In defending a pure girl from the machinations of an enemy, he is involved in a serious crime which sends him, an innocent man, to prison. Angered at this interruption to their plans and desirous of obtaining the explosive for a foreign government, international spies connive successfully at Draper's escape.

They then hold him a prisoner and the young patriot is given the choice of sacrificing his own life or that of his country. He chooses the preservation of the latter, and his sands of life have almost run out, when trapped and bound, he is rescued at the eleventh hour. Thankfully acknowledging his escape and return to freedom, he gives to his country a wonderful weapon of preparedness and together with the nation's thanks, he receives the love of the girl he once defended.

THE GORGONA (Ambrosio—Four Parts—May).—The action of this picture takes place in Pisa at the beginning of the XII century during the culmination of the Italian Sea republics, and commences exactly at the moment when the Pisan fleet starts with the allies to the conquest of the Balearic Islands in order to deliver the twenty thousand Christians from the Turkish yoke. Marcel Figuinaldo, and his son, Lamberto, are sent by the City of Florence to command the army which is to guard Pisa while the Republican Navy is fighting in the Mediterranean Sea. But Lamberto, rather than remain inactive outside Pisa, prefers to sail and is eager to have the chief command of the fleet. He asks Henry "the Coscetto," who has been elected commander-in-chief of the navy, to relinquish his power and to pass it over to him. Naturally the "Coscetto" refuses to do so, and then Lamberto threatens him to take revenge by trying to make the Gorgona, Henry's betrothed, fall in love with him during Henry's absence. Henry sails, and Lamberto keeps his word. One night he leaves the barracks and enters Gorgona's home while the girl is alone, praying and keeping the sacred lamp burning.

RICHARDSON'S MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK

Published by

THE CHALMERS Publishing Co.

The third and latest edition of this valuable work has just come from the presses.

It is bigger, better, and more helpful than have been either of its predecessors by the same able author.

In daily touch with practical operators throughout the country by reason of his connection with THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, in which his PROJECTION DEPARTMENT is featured, Mr. Richardson is especially well qualified to deal with the problems which are constantly confronting the motion picture mechanics upon whose skill the industry depends so largely for its healthy growth.

RICHARDSON'S MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK is a carefully prepared guide to perfect projection.

It is an invaluable help to every single individual in the trade who has to do with the mechanical handling of motion picture film.

There are more than 400 Pages of Text and the illustrations—of which there are many—have been especially devised for this particular publication.

A charming love-scene takes place between the two.

Meanwhile Marcel, Lamberto's father, and commander-in-chief, strictly forbids the soldiers to leave the barracks and enter the City of Pisa, under pain of death. Lamberto having been discovered, is therefore, by his own father, sentenced to be beheaded. Before the appointed hour, Lamberto asks his father to let him go once more to bid farewell to Gorgona, under oath to come back before dawn. Marcel consents, but should Lamberto fail to return in time, he himself would have to die in his stead.

The girl endeavors to prevent Lamberto from going back to the barracks and thus avoid meeting his fate. The time flies and daybreak finds Lamberto still there. Suddenly the news is spread that the victorious ships are in sight, and Marcel, amid the general excitement, enters Pisa to fetch the Gorgona and to escort her towards the victors, with the votive lamp. He finds the girl weeping and kneeling by Lamberto's body, the young man having killed himself to atone for his broken oath.

Outside the crowd was still applauding the Gorgona and the victors!

UNCLE'S LITTLE ONES.—The Widow Billings is in despair over her bridge debts when she receives a communication from her uncle's lawyers stating the death of the old man and the fact that she will become heiress to his vast estate at the time his "little ones" become of age if, up to that time, she will give them the care and attention of a mother. She is delighted with the chance and telegraphs her acceptance of the conditions. She tries to be conscientious in her fulfillment of the conditions and fits out a lovely nursery for the "little ones." One afternoon, they arrive—with their keeper. Uncle's "little ones" are the chimpanzees, Nap and Sallie, and the Widow Billings finds she has her hands full.

She tries to keep the knowledge of the little ones from her society acquaintances, particularly from a wealthy bachelor, Mr. Richman, in whose wealth she sees an escape from the ridiculous chimpanzees. Her efforts to keep her suitor from a glimpse of the chimps lead to subterfuge after subterfuge and finally become almost an obsession with her. Mr. Richman begins to think that her mind is affected. She gets up and closes doors with the utmost haste, and no reason whatever, and one afternoon, just as the proposal is about to "happen," the hammock in which the lovers are seated falls and an examination shows a clean knife cut in the rope, which the widow is unable to explain.

These things prey upon Mr. Richman to such an extent that he almost gives up the widow, especially as he thinks that he has seen huge and terrible monkeys upon the place on several occasions. But the widow is determined and finally when he complains that he sees the chimps, she hurries him away to her friend, a physician, with whom she has made an arrangement. The doctor advises Mr. Richman to marry and settle down, as he is a "very nervous man." Mr. Richman decides to take his advice and goes to propose.

The wedding ceremony is performed immediately, as the widow takes no chances, but fate steps in and as the vows are about to be said the monkeys are seen through the draperies demolishing the wedding meal. The sight so terrifies Mr. Richman, who is at last certain that he sees realities, that he runs from the widow, who realizes, in despair, that the chimps are now "the only hope."

WHAT D'YE THINK O' THAT!—John, a traveling salesman, and Sarah, an old maid, are in love. Both are residents of a hotel. When the story opens, the wedding day has dawned and a few hours will see the pair husband and wife. Their dream of love is slightly dimned by overhearing an imitation of their recent love scene by Ben, the bellboy, who is regaling Nat, his chum; but they get the boys fired and proceed on to their rooms.

But the bellboys harbor a scheme of revenge and chance throws coincidence in their path. After the boys have changed their suits and sauntered down street, they come upon Nap and Sallie, the chimps, who are tied outside the tent of a little sideshow, dressed for their act. Ben and Nat steal the chimps and carry them to their rooms in the hotel, where they pack Nap in a box addressed to John from Sarah, and Sallie in a box addressed to Sarah from John. They take the boxes to their respective rooms and wait for the fun to commence.

Now John and Sarah have their Terrible Secrets. John wears a wig and Sarah has false teeth, but so far each has managed to keep the distressing fact from the other. But with the advent of Nap and Sallie matters take a turn for the worse. Neither dare to express his or her real feelings toward the chimps on account of the unloyalty implied toward the loved one, but each is frightened almost to death at the new pet.

Sallie gets hold of Sarah's false teeth and disappears with them onto a painter's scaffolding out the window, and Nap takes John's wig and drops it downstairs on the head of one of the painters, who is busy flirting with the cook. The minister and the guests arrive, but the distracted couple who are to be married are wringing their hands over their misfortune. At last they know that the fateful minute can be put off no longer, so John seizes a high hat, and Sarah pulls her bridal veil over the place her teeth ought to be and they sally forth.

The guests see the strange actions of the bride and groom, but attribute them to embarrassment and the ceremony progresses. Sallie dabs the teeth in a can of red paint and leaves them on the bedroom floor to hide under the bed at the approach of a chambermaid. The maid sees the teeth in a pool of red and decides that Miss Sarah has been murdered. She exits, shrieking and waving the teeth.

Meanwhile, the owner of the sideshow has discovered the loss of his chimps and traces the boys and animals to the hotel. He confronts Ben and Nat, and he and the boys, the painter and the maid break in upon the wedding. Explanations are made to the amusement of the guests and to the shame of John and Sarah, but the two decide that they love each other in spite of the physical deficiencies, and fall happily in one another's arms.

THE JUNGLE CURE.—Tom and Jack are chums and come into the rooms of the Good Fellows' Club rather the worse for liquor. The plea of Tom's mother and sweetheart that he is ruining his young manhood with "the filthy stuff" falls on heedless ears. But while Tom and his chum carouse at the club, a plan is on foot to cure the young man of his vice. Ruth, his sweetheart, has read in the morning paper of a young man who was cured of drinking by seeing a snake run across his path as he journeyed along a country road. She tells the news to Tom's mother and together the two women pay a journey to the circus and rent there the animals with which they intend to accomplish Tom's salvation. Among the animals is a snake, a lion, bears, monkeys and a leopard.

Tom comes home from the club little better than a dummy as the result of too many drinks and things begin to happen. Snakes come over the transom door, lions enter through the door, snakes appear mysteriously in his bottle of whiskey and monkeys play queer pranks on him. He tries to call for help and a great rat, the size of a pig, appears. He tries to get out of the door but finds his way blocked by hideous shapes. He decides that there is nothing in "the drink habit" and swears off. Of course his mother and sweetheart are delighted at the success of their ruse and the wedding ceremony is performed with the groom an avowed teetotaler for life.

WORLD-EQUITABLE.

TANGLED FATES (Peerless—Five Parts—May 22).—The cast: Jane Lawson (Alice Brady); George Blake (Arthur Ashley); Ruth Lawson (Helen Weer); Will Rogers (Geo. Morgan). Directed by Travas Vale.

Jane Lawson lives in a small country town with her parents. Her father is the strictest member of the Morals Committee, and forces Jane and her younger sister, Ruth, to live barren, colorless lives. Ruth steals away to meet George Blake, a young drummer from New York. She is seen rowing across to a small island, with Blake by one of the town girls, who reports it to the Committee. Jane, rushing to save her sister from being disgraced because she is engaged to the minister's son, sends her home in time and herself faces the townspeople in company with Blake, assuming her sister's guilt. Disgraced, her father orders her away from home, and she leaves town to find work in New York.

After six months of hard struggle, living in an attic room, she accepts a position procured for her through Blake with the firm he is working for, although she is not aware he had anything to do about it. There she falls in love with Will Rogers, son of her employer, and, they subsequently marry. Two years after their marriage, Will degenerates and takes to drink. After his father's death, he dissipates his interest in the business and is caught by Blake stealing the bonds of the company from the safe. Blake, now in control of the company, makes good the deficiency and sends Will to Alaska, grub-staking him.

In Alaska, Will meets Dolly, a dance-hall girl, cast off by Big Tom, one of the wealthy miners and becomes infatuated with her. Dolly, to avenge herself on Big Tom, betrays his claim (which is not registered), to Will, who succeeds in having it registered in his own name. Will's long silence becoming suspicious to Blake and Jane, the former starts off to investigate, finding him wealthy but also in a state of debauchery with Dolly. A fight ensues, in which Blake obtains half of Will's money. This he brings to Jane, telling her it is from Will. This reawakens Jane's love for her husband, and while Blake is away on a trip, leaves to join her husband.

Arriving at Nome, she is shown the cabin where Will and Dolly live, and realizes on the instant her husband's perfidy but Blake's loyalty and generosity to both. While Jane is waiting, there is a fight between Will and Big Tom in which the latter is victorious. As Big Tom starts off, Will shoots him in the back, and starts for his cabin. Here he is surprised to see Jane, but his greetings are rebuked. Big Tom, though dying, manages to crawl to his dog sled and reaches the villagers, telling them of what has happened. Incensed the miners, who always make a law unto themselves when one of them brands himself a coward, get a rope and drag Will out of his cabin.

Blake, returning from his trip, realizes that there will be something doing when Jane arrives in Alaska, so starts off on the next train, arriving there just in time to see Will lynched, his protestations being of no avail. The villagers are all returning and Will's body swings from a tree. For a week Jane lies unconscious in the house of the parish priest and when the danger is past, Blake is there, kneeling beside her, and at the sight of Blake, Jane realizes she loved him all the time, and they look forward to days of happiness together.

NAKED HEARTS (Five Parts—May 29).—The cast: Maud (First Period) (Zoe Bech); Maud (Second Period) (Francelia Billington); Cecil (First Period) (Gordon Griffith); Cecil (Second Period) (Rupert Julian); Lord Lovelace (Douglas Gerrard); Howard (First Period) (George Hupp); Howard (Second Period) (Jack Holt); Maud's Father (Ben Horning); Cecil's Father (Paul Weigle); Cecil's Mother (Nannie Wright). Scenario written by Olga Printzlau. Directed by Rupert Julian.

Two families had lived neighbors in the South for years. Maud, her brother Howard, and Cecil Lane were playmates. One day as they were playing on the lawn the fathers of Maud and Cecil bethrothed their children in a bumper of wine. Shortly thereafter Cecil's father loses his fortune through poor speculation and committed suicide.

Maud is sent away to school. Cecil begins a musical education, remaining at home and growing up to be the village music teacher. In after years Maud comes home, and soon her brother Howard arrived with a foppish friend, Lord Lovelace, who straightway lays siege to Maud's heart. At the village shrine Maud and Cecil have met and their childish love is renewed.

Against her will Maud consents to a betrothal with Lord Lovelace. On the night of the betrothal party Maud and Cecil plan to elope, but their arrangements are discovered and thwarted, a duel between Cecil and Howard developing within the hour. Maud hears the shots fired, and beholding here brother slightly wounded sends Cecil, in anger, away. He leaves the village under the impression that Howard will die.

Cecil goes far away, and in a great city his musical talents are recognized. Maud, meanwhile, in contrition, would have Cecil return to her, but he keeps his mother poorly informed and Maud is unable to get word to him. When Cecil composes the song, "Come Into the Garden Maud," his fame is assured.

At this time war breaks out and Cecil, Lord Lovelace and Howard become soldiers, eventually meeting on the battle field. Lord Lovelace knows of Cecil's song and his great fame as its composer, and at the moment he is about to die of his wounds, Lord Lovelace sends word to Cecil, that Maud is waiting for Cecil in the garden.

Believing that Cecil has been killed in battle at the same time her brother Howard and Lord Lovelace die of their wounds, Maud decides to dedicate her life to religion and enters a convent. When Cecil ultimately comes home he is too late to reach Maud with any communication. He spends the rest of his life in sorrow going every day to the convent walls and playing his famous song that Maud may hear and know that he thus awaits the final end, faithful to his childhood's sweetheart.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE, NO. 3, "A Perilous Love" (Two Reels—June 5).—The cast: Gloria Stafford (Billie Burke); Dr. Stephen Royce (Henry Kolker); Richard Freneau (David Powell); David Stafford (William Roselle); Frank Mulry (Frank Belcher); Pierpont Stafford (William T. Carleton); Judge Freeman (Henry Weaver); Lois Freeman (Jule Power).

Gloria Stafford, after being rescued from the Seminole Indian camp and restored to her father, feels strongly attracted toward Richard Freneau, the young stock broker, whom she believes rescued her. Her father, Pierpont Stafford, notes this growing affection on the part of his daughter for the youthful Freneau and attempts to laugh Gloria out of what he considers a mere whim. Freneau, when offered a check for several thousand dollars as a reward for his saving Gloria, rejects the slip of paper and declares he wants Gloria.

When Pierpont realizes the affair is liable to grow into something serious he bundles Gloria off to New York and soon packs her off to an exclusive boarding school for girls. Gloria has been assured, however, that if at the end of five years she and Freneau still love one another, they may marry. All through her college career Gloria cherishes fond dreams of her lover and his bravery. Freneau, unfortunately, is not faithful and flirts with every pretty woman he encounters. Upon returning to New York City, he goes into partnership with Frank Mulry on the stock exchange and though at first successful, eventually finds that the business is suffering for want of attention. Lois Freeman weds David Stafford, Gloria's brother, but still finds delight in carrying on flirtations with former male acquaintances, one of whom is Freeman.

The night Gloria returns from college, she goes to the opera with her father and Dr. Royce. On the main staircase of the Metropolitan Opera House she encounters Richard Freneau and is amazed when he fails to recognize her. Her heart turned to lead in her bosom, Gloria steals quietly into the cool, dark upper box as the curtain rises on the first act of the opera. Freneau suddenly awakens to the serious mistake he has made, recalls his semi-engagement to Gloria and resolves to square himself at the first opportunity.

INTO THE PRIMITIVE (Selig—Five Parts—May 29).—The cast: Jenny Leslie (Kathlyn Williams); Thomas Blake (Guy Oliver); Honorable Cecil Winthrope, with an alias (Harry Lonsdale). Directed by T. N. Heffron.

Thomas Blake, American engineer, was half drunk. He stood at the ship's railing, and he eyed the beautiful young lady, who stood adjacent with bibulous approval. He stooped, unsteadily, to recover a book the young lady had dropped. He chuckled as the lady promptly turned her back to him, and greeted Cecil Winthrope. The friendship between Jenny Leslie and Cecil Winthrope began early aboard ship. Cecil cultivated that friendship for he needed money, and he believed that this American heiress would supply it.

An open boat without oars tossed on heavy seas; reclining in the bottom is Thomas Blake insensible from drink. Perched each in the bow and stern, are Miss Jenny Leslie and the Honorable Cecil Winthrope. Fate has cast the three adrift on a waste of waters, sole survivors of a wrecked ship. The little craft finally lands on the desert coast of eastern Africa. Thomas Blake came to his senses and he suffered a severe headache. This and the fact that his supply of whiskey was low, made him really ill tempered. However, Thomas resolved to share his remaining stimulant with the man and woman.. When they refused to partake thereof, Thomas was just as well satisfied, and drained the contents of his flask. Feeling better, Thomas Blake sized up the situation. He had always sized up previous situations and had mastered them by sheer brute force. Blake growled at the Honorable Cecil and Jenny Leslie, who seemed to be helpless to follow him into the jungle and to explore the island. They obeyed.

As hunger came to Thomas Blake, he fashioned himself a club and went forth in search of food. The Honorable Cecil and Miss Jenny Leslie reclined at the foot of the tree and both fell asleep. Along the branch of the tree a python was reclining. Slowly it glided down the tree and toward the sleeping woman. Soon the darting fangs were very close to the unconscious girl. Then Thomas Blake returned. and clutching the reptile in his bare hands he strangled it. That night Thomas Blake selected a tree and ordered Miss Leslie into it. Despite the protestations of Winthrope and Miss Leslie, they were forced to the refuge. In the dead of night, a lion prowled at the foot of the tree and endeavored to reach the cowering persons in its branches.

It remained for Thomas Blake to get food, carry water, and to order the march for the next day. The experiences of the three with lions, tigers, herd of wild elephants, rivers swarming with crocodiles—are too many to narrate. When the Honorable Cecil sacrificed all the priceless matches in order to light a cigarette, Blake punished him. He also confiscated Winthrope's monocle, which he used to light fires.

Blake, with little or no assistance from Winthrope, fashioned a rude dwelling, in which they lived comfortably, and he built a special apartment for the woman. Jealous of Blake and despite the fact that Blake had saved their lives many times, Winthrope whispered to Jenny of the constant danger he believed she was in from the association of this so-called "brute." Jenny believed Winthrope and feared Blake. Winthrope endeavored to force his way into her room in the dead of night, but was frightened away by wild animals. In the morning he told her that it was Blake.

Time passed, and Jenny Leslie came to know the cowardly nature of Winthrope. Once she informed Blake; "I believe I have more cause to fear the gentleman than I have to fear the brute." Thomas Blake only grinned, and he ordered Jenny to discard her skirt for a dress fashioned from skins. "I want the skirt for a signal of distress, for some ship may pass here sometime," he said. He took the skirt and affixed it to a long pole placed on the highest peak along the coast. One night Blake announced that he would go in search of game, and that same night Winthrope plotted against Jenny Leslie. Despite the mutterings of the approaching storm, he tried to break through the rude door leading to Jenny Leslie's room. The tropical storm broke quickly and wind and rain lashed the dwelling. Trees were blown down, and one, as if directed by an avenging hand, pinned Winthrope, crushed and bleeding, underneath, as it crashed to earth. He was found the next morning by Blake, who cut away the timber, and who tried with Jenny Leslie to revive Winthrope.

"I have a confession to make," whispered Winthrope. "My real name is Hawkins. I was valet to a titled Englishman. I sold his wife's jewels, and I went forth determined to pose as a gentleman and to marry money." Then Winthrope died. Jenny Leslie was left alone with Thomas Blake. As the weeks went by, the woman learned more of the heart of gold hidden underneath a rough exterior. And then one day the whistle of a steamer sounded along the African coast. The skirt tied to the pole had been seen by the ship's captain and rescue was near.

Thomas Blake, American engineer, and Miss Jenny Leslie, American heiress, who was once selfish and supercilious, stood together awaiting the landing of the rescue party. Thomas Blake was bashful—he had always been so with women. The girl looked into the cave-man's eyes. "I love you," she whispered.

"I love you, too," exclaimed Thomas Blake, as he gathered the lovely form of the girl into his mighty arms and held her closely.

EMERALD M. P. CO.

TOM AND JERRY—BACHELORS (Episode No. 1—Two Parts—June 1).—Jerry Simpson and Tom Bradford are two happy-go-lucky chaps with a weakness for pretty faces and the fact that they possess two beautiful wives does not restrain them from indulging in their flirting propensities.

Mrs. Bradford and Mrs. Simpson, who are sisters, receive a letter from their mother, inviting them to spend a Sunday at their country home. After consulting a time table, they decide to take the 5.15 train. This is very much to the satisfaction of their husbands, who are more than pleased to be relieved of their wives presence for a short time so that they may indulge in a little harmless frivolity.

Tom and Jerry in arriving at their office receive word by letter that their French model, Madame De Luxe, has arrived in the city. Her husband, Count De Luxe, is somewhat irascible and objects to a sudden departure to the office of her new employers, Bradford & Simpson, but, nevertheless, she at once departs, and her French beauty and chic ways secure for her a hearty welcome. Jerry, knowing that his wife is to leave the city that day, extends the Madame an invitation to visit their apartments, under a pretense that they have a number of new costume plates which they desire her to look over. With a reluctance she consents.

Mrs. Simpson and Mrs. Bradford leave for the train, and fate decrees that they meet Madame De Luxe in a tie-up on the boulevard. Madame De Luxe arrives at the home of Jerry Simpson and is received with open arms, while the wives of the gay deceivers arrive at the railway station to learn that the 5.15 train does not run on Saturday. Jerry has ordered an informal lunch with sparkling wine as an adjunct, and in his excitement has overlooked hanging up the receiver, which leaves the telephone lines of the apartment closed. The wives decide to take the 7 o'clock train and also decide that while waiting they will call up their loving husbands. They are unable to receive an answer to their call and Mrs. Simpson, becoming suspicious, determines to return home and investigate. In the meantime, Tom and Jerry are entertaining their French model royally, giving no consideration to their wives or to Count De Luxe, who is in a rage at the Madame's prolonged absence.

The Count discovers a card with the address of Jerry Simpson, and being of a jealous disposition, hurries to seek vengeance on the destroyers of his peace of mind. In the midst of Tom and Jerry's tete-a-tete with Madame De Luxe, the wives arrive, and in the endeavors of Tom and Jerry to rid themselves of the danger of their position, complications folow, one upon another. The Madame is hidden and Jerry feigns sickness to disarm the wives suspicion, but they do not count upon the numerous accidents which happen, to disclose their unfaithfulness.

The Count De Luxe arrives at their apartment, discovers his wife's coat, and realizes that he is also deceived. He vows vengeance and later returns with his child which he forces Tom and Jerry to retain. In their anxiety to relieve themselves of this new burden, they hide the baby in the clock. The wives hearing the cries of the infant soon discover the hidden treasure. Madame is also brought to light and when Count De Luxe, seeking vengeance, enters with a lighted bomb to blow his supposed rivals into eternity the story is brought to a climax with many laughs.

"A Satisfied Patron Is Your Best Advertisement"

To bring them back again to your theatre, you must give a good show.

Pictures projected clearly, brightly and without flicker are always good pictures and it is only with direct current that such pictures are possible.

The G-E Mercury Arc Rectifier is the simplest, most dependable and most efficient device for transforming alternating current into direct current. The G-E Rectifier also shows a big saving in your current bill.

And did you ever think of the advertising value of a G-E Mercury Arc Rectifier in operation outside your theatre.

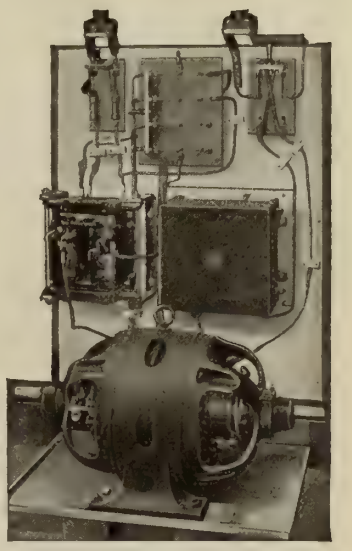
You can't STAY on the Fence

—you must come down. On which side will you land—success or failure? Do you want to know how others have landed on the side of success?



Wagner WHITE Light Converter Equipment

Better films may be the first remedy that suggests itself. Of what good are better films when they are presented to your audiences, projected on your screens with flickering, wasteful alternating current or with direct current from unreliable, out of date, cumbersome direct current apparatus.

If we can convince you that

will improve your projection, materially save you current (if you use alternating current now), and increase your patronage, you must admit it is a thing to be desired—almost necessary to success.

We want to send you Bulletin 10923 and ask that you read it thoroughly. It may be the means of turning a failure into a success. Send today!

Take Temptation Out of Your Ticket Booth

Every ticket seller wants to be honest. And she will be if you don't put temptation in her way. Remember she's human and the control which every human being has over his or her will power varies. When you allow temptation to inhabit your ticket booth, you are inviting losses. You can guard against them—you can save money—you can remove temptation from your ticket booth by installing

CAILLE
Ticket Office Devices

The Caille Ticket seller automatically registers every ticket sold. This register is under lock and key. The theatre owner holds the key. There is no way that the ticket seller can get at the register. Every ticket sold is accounted for. It removes temptation and discourages dishonest efforts between the party in the booth and the ticket taker.

A Battery of Two Ticket Sellers

Delivers Tickets Separately

Whether a patron buys one ticket or five the Caille Ticket Seller delivers them to him cut off separately, but stacked together like a deck of cards. Tickets delivered in this way cannot lay across the knives in the chopper. They will drop through instantly.

Handles Tickets of Different Denominations

The Caille Ticket Seller is built in sections. When it is desired to sell tickets of different denominations, additional sections are added. Each section has its individual motor for direct or alternating current.

Caille Ticket Choppers

They tear tickets to shreds. There is no possible chance to use them again. These machines are built for foot, hand or electric operation.

Our Lightning Change-Maker

computes and pays the difference between the amount tendered ($1.00 or under) and the price of admission. Simply press one key and the machine does the calculating and instantly delivers the change direct to the patron in a saucer-like receptacle. Saves time, prevents errors and disputes.

Send for Catalog

describing the complete Caille line. Also, our simple Theatre Ledger Systems, Ticket Boxes, Tickets, etc.

OUR FORESIGHT MEANT YOUR PROTECTION!!

Ten days after the outbreak of war we received the largest stock of French-made condensers ever shipped into this countr y

That's why we are able to offer you now

THE KLEINE WHITE LABEL CONDENSER

at before-war-time prices. Foreign factories formerly engaged in the manufacture of optical goods for the entire world now devote their sole energies to war merchandise for their own countries, thus making possible the distribution of inferior, cheaply made and costly-in-the-long-run-domestic substitutes.

KLEINE WHITE LABEL CONDENSERS are ground from pure optical glass. They do not discolor—no green, pink or purple effects after a brief use. They are the only satisfactory condensers on the American market today. If you are not using them you are not obtaining maximum results from your projection equipment.

PRICES:

Plano Convex
6½, 7½, 8½, 9½ and 10½ inch E. F., 4½ inch diameter $1.25
5½ inch E. F., 4½ inch diameter ... 1.75

Meniscus and Bi-Convex
6½, 7½, 8½ and 9½ inch E. F., 4½ inch diameter 2.50

Is Your Projector Giving Satisfactory Results?

If you buy projecting machines of the same make repeatedly you do it, not because of what the manufacturer says (advertising) but because of what you get (service).

Clever salesmanship or advertising may have secured the first order, but YOUR PROJECTOR must demonstrate its ability to "deliver the goods" right along before you will buy another of the same make.

That is why MOTIOGRAPH SALES have increased 500% in six months.

Just try a LATE MODEL MOTIOGRAPH in your booth. Its ability to give satisfaction will put you right as to what projector to use.

Manager Sharding of Georgia Motion Picture Theatre, writes that his net profits are $63 to $70 a week.

Motion put the money in the motion picture business and the BUTTER-KIST Pop Corn Machine acts the same way in making people stop, look and buy! Hundreds of theatre owners are now operating this "little gold mine." And you are missing from $300 to $3000 EXTRA yearly profits without it.

This wonderful machine will make big Extra Profits for any theatre, large or small.

"Profits as high as $112 per week," writes F. G. Pickett of the Hippodrome Theatre at Fairmount, W. Va.

"Profits $5.25 to $8.50 a day from Butter-Kist machine in our lobby," writes H. G. Heck of Utica, N. Y.

Scores of theatres paying rent, light and heat from Butter-Kist sales.

Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine

makes the famous crackling white pop corn with the toasty flavor. Folks can't resist its coaxing fragrance. Draws people to your theatre. Occupies only 26 by 32 inches of floor space! Plenty of room in the lobby or down near the stage. Move a chair and you have room for it.

Runs Itself

Automatically pops, removes the unpopped kernels, and butters each fluffy white morsel evenly—then super-heats it to a tantalizing crisp!

We're advertising this matchless treat to millions—line up your theatre with this big new national success.

A Small Payment

starts this machine popping you extra profits and increasing theatre attendance. Balance soon paid out of Butter-Kist earnings.

Mail the Money-Making Coupon and get our handsome book, "The Little Gold Mine," that gives photos, letters, proof of profits, easy terms and full details. It's F-R-E-E! You lose cold cash every day you delay. Sign and mail the coupon AT ONCE.

Warning!

We coined the phrase

Perfect Developing and Printing

And when associated with our name it represents the supreme degree of film quality.

Imitators have counterfeited our coin, but remember there is only one home of Perfect Developing and Printing—the original—and we own, occupy and operate that home in its entirety.

Any parrot can memorize phrases.

Sometimes piracy unwittingly is committed where one confuses memory with thought. Plagiarists skirt the limits of business ethics by lifting bodily and using boldly, studied statements built to identify a particular institution.

There's a difference between the unwitting and the witless, but each is a menace to honest advertising.

Your safety first demands that you investigate our claims and compare the result with what you find—or fail to find—back of the claims of those who imitate our expressions.

It is your business duty to determine the difference between sound and noise.

What the Critics Say of "Sherlock Holmes"

"The Essanay Company has scored a clean and decisive knockout with the film version of William Gillette's stage success—'Sherlock Holmes.' It is not merely a photoplay with a punch—it is a screen triumph with a varied assortment of punches, and veritable triphammer punches, all of them. 'Sherlock Holmes' goes to the public bearing the stamp of critical approval of all who witnessed its private showing. It is an undoubted super-feature of film land!"

New York Dramatic Mirror.

"'Sherlock Holmes' is a picture that can be given unqualified praise and is a credit to author, actors, director and photographers. It is one of the most effective pictures ever undertaken. From the beginning to the end of this seven part feature there is not a dull moment. The fade-in and fade-out process used in this production is positively the best that has been accomplished."

New York Morning Telegraph.

"A big winner. With the name of William Gillette and the famous Sherlock Holmes, this should be a tremendous box office attraction. Certainly the film is well enough done to prove a real winner. It should pull big business."

Wid Gunning's Independent Reviews.

"William Gillette as Sherlock Holmes in moving pictures is a fitting consummation to this artist's wonderful stage career. Mr. Gillette before the camera is just as natural and forceful as we have seen him on the stage."

Moving Picture World.

"The old classic which seems to hold its youth better than most things reaches the screen in excellent form. William Gillette appears to unusual advantage in the film version. The direction of the picture by Arthur Berthelet is excellent, and the supporting cast is capable."

"When the Trapeze Broke"—

And the daring aerialist plunged to her doom; when the undaunted animal trainer entered the cage of the maddened king of beasts; when the villainous groom caused the horse to rear and an acrobat to get a fatal fall—while the circus band played and the clowns made merry—the stirring "Adventures of Peg o' the Ring" not only held all first-night audiences, but left them eager to come back for more of the wonderful fascination of circus life as depicted in the Universal's greatest of all serials.

"The Adventures of Peg O' The Ring"

Original in theme, novel in treatment, produced on a scale more lavish than any other moving picture serial, this wondrous serial photo play has greater drawing power, more crowd-getting capacity than all other serials combined. With an immense and brilliant cast headed by the two popular serial favorites

Grace Cunard & Francis Ford

It has attracted—with its glitter and glamor of circus life—thousands of people who never before were interested in moving pictures. You still have the opportunity to book this money-maker and cash in on its unexampled prosperity. Send for the FREE (to Exhibitors) Campaign Book, filled with advertising suggestions; ready prepared ads; free publicity stories, and all the props necessary to make it a howling success in your theatre.

DORSEY EXP ON THE REGULAR UNI

AGAIN—
the mighty Universal comes to bat for Exhibitors with a colossal Feature for the Regular Program that will bring more business to the Theatres lucky enough to be using the UNIVERSAL PROGRAM than anything on any other program in the business of pictures today — The RENOWNED DORSEY EXPEDITION PICTURES that are as different from the ordinary travel pictures as day is from night. Here's something novel—educating—interesting—fascinating. A genuine FEATURE that would cost you big money if booked direct from a feature concern handling travel subjects. Here's a famous travel series.

Something NEW and UNIQUE for Your Patrons

A $250,000 Feature Travelogue Series as Different from the Ordinary Travel Pictures as Day is from Night

Here's a genuine surprise for thousands of people who believe they have seen genuinely interesting travel subjects. The DORSEY EXPEDITION PICTURES are wonderful—and were secured at a cost of over a quarter of a million dollars.

MILLION DOLLAR EDITION PICTURES
VERSAL PROGRAM

Here's a feature that will give your house more popularity in a minute than any Feature Drama would in a month—and the beauty of this DORSEY TRAVEL SERIES is that it runs for FOURTEEN STRAIGHT CONSECUTIVE WEEKS—insuring fourteen straight consecutive weeks of capacity houses. Here is

A Feature that you can advertise for 14 straight weeks—A Feature Found on No Competitive Program in the Business—A Feature that is a real, genuine, Box Office Attraction

The Famous Dr. George Dorsey (Curator of the Field Museum, Chicago) was in personal charge of the expedition which secured the entire series. When first projected at the Studebaker Theater, Chicago, their success was instantaneous and huge. It is utterly impossible to even begin to describe the immense number of fascinating subjects, scenes, incidents, events—covered in the wonderful DORSEY EXPEDITION PICTURES. Marvelous pictorial records of daily life from the unknown parts of the Orient—the taking of which involved every element of danger—from hostile natives—from climate, etc., etc. Through both unfamiliar and previously explored parts of China, Japan, India, Ceylon, Burmah, Borneo, Siam, Australasia, and many other countries these fascinating pictures will carry your patrons. Each week's showing will simply whet their appetite for more and more—so as to bring the fortunate Exhibitors solid capacity business for fourteen straight weeks.

On the Regular Universal Program

WITH the many regular weekly box office attractions on the mighty Universal Program each week, plus the tremendous drawing power of such a new, novel and entirely unique series of travel pictures, you insure your business against any kind of competition that can be found anywhere.

Remember.—This entire fourteen weeks' series of the RENOWNED DORSEY EXPEDITION PICTURES are ON THE REGULAR UNIVERSAL PROGRAM WITHOUT ONE CENT EXTRA COST to Exhibitors using the regular Universal Program. To others this series will be released at most attractive prices. If you are not using the Universal Program and can get it in your territory, grab it NOW. THE SECRETARY OF WAR, WASHINGTON.

May 17, 1916.

My dear Mr. Urban:

I had the pleasure last night of seeing the motion pictures entitled "How Britain Prepared," which I understand were made under your direction, with the approval of the English Government, and take this occasion to express my very keen interest in the pictures and to say that both in subject and in execution they gave me valuable information and great pleasure.

LOUISE LOVELY

IN A FASCINATING STORY OF THE PERILS OF THE STAGE

"BOBBIE OF THE BALLET"

BY GRANT CARPENTER
DIRECTED BY JOSEPH DE GRASSE

BLUEBIRD Photoplays (inc)

THE most beautiful woman on the screen" is the appreciative title bestowed on Louise Lovely, star of the BLUEBIRD organization who plays the lead in the beautiful photo-drama, "Bobbie of the Ballet," announced on the preceding page.

Miss Lovely's bid for fame, however, does not rest solely upon her ravishing loveliness, nor the exquisite charm of manner which she knows so well how to register on the screen. Her histrionic training has been thorough on both stage and screen.

To the part of "Bobbie" she brings the charm of youth and beauty, and a vividness of expression that grips the audience from her first appearance, and holds them spellbound, through pathos, laughter, stress of emotion, and the tensest dramatic moments of this fascinating play of the dangers of stage life, and the wolves in human guise that infest its environment.

With an unusual supporting cast, a generous, even lavish staging and production; with an intensely human heart interest story; a big climax and a vigorous and artistic direction, "Bobbie of the Ballet" is a worthy successor of the illustrious BLUEBIRD releases that precede it.

BLUEBIRD Photoplays differ in kind and in treatment — as they should. BLUEBIRD Photoplays never vary from the high standard set for them with the outlining of the BLUEBIRD policy at their inception.

How Are You Booking?

A la Carte or Table d'Hote?

When you EAT a la Carte

You choose what you want—
You eat when you want—
You pay for each dish at a price it is worth.

By eating a la Carte—you please your taste, your pocketbook and your digestion.

When you BOOK a la Carte

You can see what you get—
You can pick what you want—
When you want it—as long as you want it—
You pay for each feature at a price based on its box office value TO YOU.

By booking a la Carte you are encouraged to advertise more—you are sure to satisfy your patrons—you popularize your theatre—and you INCREASE YOUR BANK BALANCE.

Table d'hote eating and booking mean paying for unattractive "dishes" in order to get the attractive. You pay the same rate for the weak as you pay for the strong.

Happy and contented are those exhibitors whom the Big Four has served on the a la Carte plan. And that same service will also make you a satisfied customer.

We stand ready to serve you as we have served others.

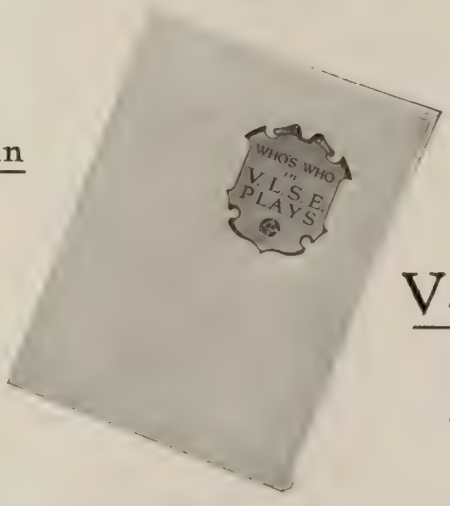
To Any Exhibitor—Just For The Asking

"Who's Who In V-L-S-E Plays"



Your Copy of This Book Is Awaiting Your Call At The Nearest Big-Four Exchange

This handsome, two-colored, forty-eight page book—the size of this trade paper—done up in rich style, gives striking "off stage" photographs of each stage and screen favorite in V-L-S-E Plays—along with a snappy, out-of-the-ordinary personality sketch of the rise and success of these stars with intimate human interest high lights in their lives.

Besides being a book for ready reference on all the features released since the company started, "Who's Who In V-L-S-E Plays" has been designed to aid exhibitors in compiling press notices, program write-ups, and other publicity, all the matter being written from an angle to appeal to every editor. It is a book which will be invaluable to any theatre manager.

A request in person to the branch manager, a word to the V-L-S-E salesman in your territory, or a letter to your nearest exchange will bring your copy to you. Act now before the supply is exhausted.

Gentlemen:
"Reggie Mixes In", also making the sixth picture that I have booked, and cannot refrain from telling you that never in my career have I seen or had the pleasure of booking such wonderful pictures that have been so consistent in their general excellence. Their artistic value, their direction, their quality and everything about them have given to the Rialto Theatre solidity and have created a standard that I know will be impossible to duplicate with any other films now before the American public.
The pictures are improving, the comedies are especially good, and on the whole I am not only satisfied but thoroughly delighted, and I am sure that any exhibitor who will handle these pictures in the proper manner will create for himself a following that nothing but sheer stupidity and neglect could ever destroy.
Wishing you every success and trusting that you will continue with the good work, I am Very sincerely yours,

The two letters shown on these pages from S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto Theater, New York, and E. C. Divine, of the Strand, Chicago, should be of particular interest to motion picture exhibitors at this time.

By the men who are responsible for the success of the two largest motion picture theaters in the two largest cities in this country they are of great importance to the exhibitor who is considering whether or not his audience will appreciate and pay to see TRIANGLE PICTURE PLAYS.

Both letters give the candid opinions of recognized authorities on motion picture exhibition and tell why they are basing their success on the presentation of TRIANGLE PICTURE PLAYS.

Seven months ago TRIANGLE PLAYS were first released without a single theater. Now the number of houses showing these pictures runs into the thousands, which in itself is proof enough that the public enjoys, and in fact is enthusiastic, over the presentation of TRIANGLE PLAYS.

Triangle Film Corporation,

New York City.

Gentlemen:

I cannot resist the impulse to tell you how greatly I appreciate the Triangle plays. We have the most critical audiences, I think, at the Strand Theatre, and yet they are uniformly pleased with your productions.

The consistent high quality, the care used in production, and the superb artistry of these plays stamp them, to my mind, as the greatest advance in the motion picture industry.

If--as surely seems improbable--there should be theatre manager anywhere who cannot put Triangle plays over, he must be exhibiting either in a blind asylum or a cemetery. I ask nothing better than the opportunity to continue showing them. I cannot make my appreciation too strong.

Yours very truly,

Cheap motion pictures no longer satisfy the public. Bigger and better pictures, with bigger and better plots, people and ideas are required now—pictures of the TRIANGLE sort are essential for the successful house.

If you are a motion picture exhibitor and have not carefully investigated the possibility of presenting TRIANGLE PICTURE PLAYS in your theater don't you think it worth while to drop us a postal card? There's no obligation on your part and it is just possible that we will be able to point out an advantage to you.

For the week of June 4th the TRIANGLE Drama Pictures will be Norma Talmadge in "Going Straight," and William Collier, Jr., in "The Bugle Call," and as usual two Keystone Comedies.

Dear Mr. MacManus:-

I am not in the habit of praising photoplay productions but feel that I must write to you regarding "THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA".

I had no idea, when I booked this picture of the gigantic scope of the Hearst publicity and I can truthfully state that on the days that I show this serial my business has increased perceptibly. Please understand that I am using "THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA" without any particular exceptional feature and I can trace the direct results of your publicity to this excellent picture.

At first I was skeptical about "THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA" because the story is so revolutionary, but I now see that nearly everybody is interested in this new type of photoplay.

I want to congratulate you and wish you all success with "THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA", as I consider it the best serial I have ever used.

Yours very truly,

We have also established a precedent in showing additional episodes other than are generally shown.

This action on our part proves that we have little to fear in the way of competition.

Our product stands on it's merit alone.

The MYSTERIES of MYRA

One Exhibitor's Experience

"FOR a long time I have been trying to get the best new one and two reel films that the market offered. My efforts have been untiring because I wanted to give my audiences something that I felt sure would please them. My search is now at an end. UNICORN FILM SERVICE meets my requirements exactly.

"After the very first showing of UNICORN pictures I was showered with compliments regarding the merit of the subjects. It was the first time in my experience that I had been able to get good short subjects with casts composed of stars.

"I was well pleased with the clear and clean appearance of the film, and best of all, the prices for service are right—much lower than I have paid in the past for poor subjects and worn-out film. As for posters, they are the best I have seen. They are real business-getters."

Have you investigated UNICORN FILM SERVICE? If not, do so at once and you will find that we can furnish the best new one and two reel films ever produced—with star casts—at prices much lower than you are now paying.

We release regularly twenty-one reels every week—Comedy, Drama and Westerns.

Facts and Comments

THE exhibitors in Great Britian meet the war-tax by a rigid suspension of the free list. Well, we are paying a war tax too. Let us revise the free list downward, if we cannot suspend it altogether.

LITTLE Tarrytown of classic and legendary fame has struck a blow for Sunday opening. Perhaps the better way would be to say that the exhibitors there want their legal rights. The Court of Appeals has decided that motion pictures may be shown on Sunday anywhere within this state and that no town or city has the right to overrule the state law by the enactment of local ordinances. The agitators in Tarrytown are just learning these facts much to their disappointment and consternation. By the way the late legislature of this state made no attempt to amend the state law so it would prohibit motion picture entertainments on Sunday. Is not this significant? Does it not show that public opinion is not opposed to a Sunday entertainment?

A GOOD deal is said about the failure of American producers to adjust themselves to export conditions. A good deal of it is true, especially when the South-American market is considered. On the other hand it seems to us that some of our foreign friends are equally slow in adjusting themselves to American conditions. Hence the lack of permanent American agencies of some of the great countries of Europe. The men who know and control one market cannot for this reason impose their ideas and their terms on another market. If some of our foreign friends would study conditions here more carefully and then adjust themselves to conditions they might do much better than they are doing now.

DOWN South exchangemen have organized to get rid of the fly-by-night men in the exhibiting ranks and the exhibitors have organized to insure fair treatment at the hands of the exchange. The idea is good. We hope there will be no black lists. An equitable regard for the rights of your neighbor and especially for the man you deal with in business is all that's required. With the present fierce competition among exchanges a black list will be found impracticable.

NEXT to the rapid enlightenment of the press on the question of censorship comes the growing conversion of clergymen on the Sunday question. In the Middle West one minister announced from the pulpit that he would be willing to close his church at night if the right sort of film were shown in the nearest motion picture theater. Other clergymen are openly in favor of Sunday opening provided the right sort of program is furnished. It has been said in answer to this position that a show good enough for week-days ought to be good enough for Sunday and that no distinction can logically be made between the ordinary entertainment and the Sunday show. We beg to differ. There is such a word as seasonable and its meaning is easily understood. We have an overabundance of film material specially suited for Sunday exhibition. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has compiled a large list of such programs.

IN a splendid editorial written by Granville S. MacFarland, the Boston American, emphasizes once more the dangers of Federal censorship. In the course of the article stress is laid on the civic value of the film and attention is called to the work of Louis D. Brandeis, who is about to go to the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States. Mr. Brandeis it will be recalled has used the moving pictures very effectively to call public attention to the advantages of savings bank life insurance, by which men of moderate means may obtain life insurance more cheaply than it can be obtained from the old private insurance companies.

AN extract from the copy-book of an old advertising man: Boasting shows nothing but the moral weakness and the mental poverty of the boaster. To which by way of a modern supplement we may add: Uncle Sam is watching the man who boasts not wisely but too well in his advertisements. These be "parlous days" for the reckless circulation "booster."

Merely Fromage

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

NO mechanical contrivance intended to produce uniformity of motion could be more dully unvarying than the string of machine-made plays released day after day. They are only new to the cub critic and the occasional patron of the picture show. To the fan and to the experienced reviewer they present a dreary waste, a Sahara-like monotony broken by an occasional oasis of originality and creative talent.

The experienced critics who sit in judgment to the benefit of the whole art are not inclined to find fault—their whole tendency is to be generous in correcting shortcomings and to give praise where there is even sincerity of attempt. A very large number of the reviewers are not only men of high intelligence, but they are fair-minded enough never to discriminate in favor of one producer as against the rest. They go to the trenches to do their duty, knowing in advance that they need expect but scant praise and that their chances of coming away unscarred are very slim. None of them has ever yet succeeded in rendering full justice to all and in pleasing every one concerned at the same time.

Experienced critics have seen photographs in greater number and variety, perhaps ten times over, than any producer in the land. It is quite in the nature of things that they should not become wildly excited over some much-touted production—no partisan can be keenly perceptive and calmly judicious—hence the experienced critic is sometimes thought to be lacking in fine sensibilities, whereas he merely holds his sympathies in reserve that they may not blur his vision nor interfere with the exercise of his good common sense.

A great deal has been tolerated in the theatrical art, now just beginning to simulate verity, which should not be perpetuated on the screen. Not to be tolerated is an arrangement for the banal disclosure of what intelligent characters wish to have studiously hidden. Some keen business men, every one of them alert and suspicious, confer on a crooked deal in a room where there are portieres in place of a door. Although secrecy is of prime importance to the success of their plans, no one is stationed at the entrance to keep watch. The set is deliberately prepared for an overheard conspiracy.

The unsuspecting husband leaves wife and best friend in a parlor and steps out into the hall through portieres. The guilty ones fly to each other's arms so that the husband may suddenly throw open the curtains, discover them and stand in scowling silence, a terrible menace to their plans of future happiness. A general and members of his staff confer in the dining room of a house in hostile territory. There is a trunk, or some other equally appropriate object of furniture, in the room capable of concealing a spy, but it is not examined. Thus the beautiful young heroine learns all, to mount a horse soon after and carry news which may decide the fate of a nation.

If a compromising conversation must be overheard, a door would be reasonable, and an emotional outburst could be made responsible, but old stage directors cling to portieres, as they do to the mistaken identity plot, the mythical kingdom play and the innocent man's weapon placed by the villain at the side of his murdered victim. The producer is to blame who asks stage directors to write their own plays, or who delivers to them scenarios not well-formulated in advance.

Wherever a studio can afford to set up a strong door, one which can be slammed without shaking the walls, the portiere should be relegated to the dump, along with the incriminating document, or letter, which is carefully placed where it will fall into the hands of those who should not have it. These are antiquated contrivances of the stage. They are as tiresome as stories in which the leading lady dons her maid's clothes. Only a widespread critical vaccination can protect us against the recurrence of stale devices, the worst of which might be called "forcing the issue."

It is obvious that fiction, while it may aim to promulgate the truth, is not in itself truth but skilled deception. The whole art of its reasonableness lies in skill of deception. It is made ridiculous in the hands of a bungler because his interpretations are false. He belittles the art of story-telling when he has no idea of what is meant by verisimilitude, or simulating verity. That fiction does not record historical truth necessitates care not to thrust the false upon attention.

In a very large number of the stories presented to the critic for review there are situations offered which would jar any audience, if not excite open derision such as compelling the movements of hero and heroine, so that they "chance" to meet where the chances are a million to one that they will not. In a recent release the hero rescues the maiden in his home town. Shortly after he rescues her, though neither expected that they would meet again, in her home town. Then they happen to be on the same vessel at sea. When the others leave the vessel in boats when it is afire, the lover and heroine happen to be the only two who do not. Thus they happen to be the only ones who discover an uninhabited island near by, the others happening not to see it at all.

Less offensive to common sense are purely arbitrary representations which are far from artistic ones. Prominent among these are the theatrical man's idea of how people dress and act in clubs of the first class and in good society.

We are treated to the spectacle of a gentleman wearing his silk hat at country places, or at the seaside, and even aboard ship. We are shown gentlemen gambling and getting drunk in the open club rooms. The skipper on board a steam yacht removes his cap in the presence of the owner. Flunkies act like studio hands badly disguised. The chauffeur of the millionaire is obviously the director's employee. There is no verisimilitude possible without plausibility of environment.

In the case of environment it might be better to let girl supers wear their own clothes when mingled as butterflies of high society instead of hiring dance frocks from the second-hand clothing shops. In the line of plausible events it might do to have a few days instead of hours elapse before the villain succeeds in ruining the heroine's father in the stock market. And so far as chance and coincidence are concerned, "Only Seen at the Movies" is finding a department all its own in the comic papers. What the characters do, less than what they are, seems to bother the bungler most—he can not arrange matters so that his people live, move and have their being in any believable series of events. The long arm of coincidence has its legitimate functions, but it becomes a lame and impotent arm when there is "nobody home."

Federal Censorship is Wholly Bad

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE Moving Picture World deems it a sacred duty to the industry to urge all friends of the motion picture and indeed all true and intelligent Americans to begin a campaign against the vicious Smith-Hughes bill, which has just been favorably reported to the lower House of Congress. There was a very strong minority report which was published in last week's issue. This minority report, which will be ably defended by members of the House in the debate on the floor, gives us a splendid rallying point. We are willing to supply our readers with blank petitions to be circulated among the patrons of motion picture theaters. Any exhibitor who will write us will be provided and he will incur no obligation whatever except of course the obligation to use the blanks carefully and not to waste them.

In the meantime we want to urge upon every honest, sincere and disinterested friend of the motion picture the reasons why this bill spells irretrievable ruin to the industry and why it makes a sorry joke of every attempt to uplift the industry and to develop its artistic possibilities.

After a very patient and a very painstaking perusal of the favorable report of the majority of the House Committee on Education (to be found in last week's issue), we are more deeply than ever convinced of the harm which will befall the industry if this bill is enacted into a law. We have had and still have an open mind on this question. We are entirely willing to be proved wrong and we utterly despise that consistency which consists in sticking to an error, but the Smith-Hughes Bill is so full of childish fallacies, of bad logic, of unwarranted assumptions, of bad principle, that it is impossible to refrain from exposing and condemning it. No matter at what part it is taken up you will find that it bristles with absurdities and that it lays foundations for oppression, hardship and injustice to the men who produce, distribute and exhibit motion pictures. Indeed, the whole report refutes itself.

The strongest though withal the most specious argument put forth in favor of Federal censorship has been the claim that it will do away with other forms of censorship. Now what light does the report throw on this phase of the subject? Nowhere is to be found the slightest indication of any such claim. "The National Board," says the report, "will be considered the leading motion picture commission and its decisions will carry the weight of leadership. Should a picture be passed by the national board a local board would have to give a good reason to the public for prohibiting the exhibition of the picture." This is nothing more than one hope built upon another and no foundation in law or reason for either. When have local boards ever been at a loss for "good reasons?" "Good reasons," indeed! When have Breitinger and Maude Murray Miller and all the other executioners of films ever lacked "good reasons?" If Federal censorship affords no more protection against local and state censorship than such slender hopes it is just a delusion and a snare. Nowhere does the report even intimate that Federal censorship will be a legal barrier to other censorship. The report says: "The character of the motion picture industry renders State and municipal regulation inadequate." It says "inadequate," not "illegal." The regulation of public morals is one of the attributes of state sovereignty, and the whole political history of our country is nothing more than a fable if it does not show by overwhelming evidence how jealously every state insists upon this prerogative. It is nowhere pretended in the report that the censorship states will surrender their particular brand of censorship in favor of the Federal brand. We are urged, however, to approve of a quick passage of the Smith-Hughes bill because "it would be much easier to prevent the formation of a state or city board of censors by showing that there is already in existence an efficient Federal regulation than it will be to have a local board abolished which was created before the Federal law became effective." Again we have the promptings of hope triumph over the hard cold facts of experience. The burden of proof rests entirely upon the shoulders of the advocates of this bill. They are proposing something new and they must furnish affirmative and credible evidence that their proposals are reasonable and their plans are feasible. They have so far failed to adduce a scintilla of evidence in favor of their proposition. Let us be fair and candid about this thing: Every man of sense and education knows that whatever censorship may be exercised by the Federal Government will not and can not be exclusive. The Federal censorship will run with but never against the local and state variety of censorship. Such concurrent jurisdiction of state and nation is nothing new or unusual in our structure and policy of government and is going on around us every day. The Moving Picture World, as is well known, is opposed to censorship on principle; we look upon it as an old engine of oppression condemned centuries ago by the experience of the English-speaking races. Even if we were capable of descending to the lower level of mere expediency we could not consistently support Federal censorship. At best it would mean nothing more than additional censorship.

Read carefully this statement in the report:

> As the determination by the commission would be really arbitrary because of the absence of legal tasks or recognized standards it is of the greatest importance that the commission should not be vested with supreme power. Where great property interests are involved, the citizen should always be afforded an opportunity for relief from the court, if he feels that he has been treated unjustly.

This statement is quoted from the brief of the attorneys of the producers who have committed themselves to the principle of Federal censorship. It seems incredible that such a statement should come from the advocates of the principle of censorship in any form. Read it carefully and it seems like an ill-conceived attempt to foist the functions of censorship on the courts. The courts of this country never have exercised and never have attempted to exercise any such power. As Bainbridge Colby said before Governor Whitman, the whole idea and institution of censorship is so alien to American conceptions and traditions that it nowhere fits in with our system of government; it's an anomaly as well as an abortion. What these learned attorneys evidently overlook is the plain fact that we know no arbitrary power in this country and never have known it since we became a sovereign and independent nation. Ours is a government of laws and not of men. The laws now on the statute books are ample to deal with vicious pictures and always have been. Imagine a producer whipped from the pillar of the Federal commission to the post of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. Of course there are no recognized standards in censorship and we do not see how there can be. The question of "Who Will Censor the Censors" cannot be answered satisfactorily in a country where the people are supposed to rule. There is no censorship in America founded on any precedent of law or reason; there is and always was regulation by public opinion crystallized into law.

What is to become of the producer who finds his film disapproved by the Federal Commission and fully approved by the state censors of Ohio or some other censorship state? His film cannot leave the boundaries of the censorship state. What about the film disapproved by the state censors but fully approved by the Federal Commission? If the producer or the exhibitor is arrested on a charge of displaying a film not approved by the state board will he be in a position to quote the Federal approval in his defence and will his reliance on the Federal approval save him from fine and imprisonment for violating the edict of the state censors? We will be glad to have the learned attorneys who are supporting Federal censorship enlighten us as to that. There is bound to be a conflict of the variable standards between the various state censorship and between the decisions of the Federal Commission. How will this conflict both of standards and of legal authority affect the producer and exhibitor? It will beget infinite confusion and uncertainty. It will simply kill every artistic development. No director can do himself justice if the thought is haunting him that he has to satisfy variable and perhaps conflicting notions and standards of ethics and of taste.

We are being told that the Federal censors will be "so entirely different." We are assured that they will be supermen. It is hard for us to grow hopeful on this question. The best of men are unfit to exercise arbitrary power and to impose their standards and their notions upon the rest of their fellow citizens.

"The Play's the Thing," But--

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

WRITING in the Dramatic Mirror, Jesse L. Lasky laments that the motion picture has not advanced of late. The gist of his remarks is that after rapid growth in all lines advancement seems suddenly to have come to a standstill. Directors, he says, are doing better work, camera results are better, players are more eager to do well, and still the business is at a dead center. Then he sagely remarks that "As in the spoken drama, so it is with the moving drama, the play is always the thing, the foundation, the heart, the vitals, the very life of the motion picture drama." Then he goes on to complain that our dramatists are not writing decent plays, though plays are being written by the thousand.

This seems to grieve Mr. Lasky, and yet, is he doing his share toward making things better? Is he giving any definite aid or encouragement to the writing of better stories for films? His editors announce that they are not in the market; that all scripts are written by the staff. There is no incentive to real writers to supply a commodity for which there is no demand. If it were Mr. Lasky alone this would not be important, but he is just one of dozens of others. Thomas Ince recently said that he had not purchased a script in two years. This was in a controversy in one of the western papers, and he may not have been correctly reported, because he has purchased a number of scripts within that period if paying "for the idea only" is to be classed as buying script. A well known director has announced that no one but himself knows how to write plays and that he will buy synopses only, and this same idea is advanced by many other companies. No one knows how to do anything save their own little hand-picked troupe of trained authors. At least one large releasing organization engages a majority of its directors to "write and produce," the salary covering the cost of the script; indeed so common has this become that one or two men are making fairly good money fixing up ideas for men not competent to write and yet who have taken contracts to do so.

In a word, Mr. Lasky and all other manufacturers want stories, but they do not buy them when they see them and do not encourage authors to write. Two classes of authors make the majority of few sales. These are the half trained beginners who can get their ideas over in synopsis only and the men with well known names who accept amazing sums to write junk. The salvation of the business is good plays, and neither of these two classes can write good film stories. The man who must be interested if the standard of production is to increase must be recruited from the ranks of what may be termed without discourtesy the second rank of authors; the men who write good stories but who have not yet established their names in the literary field. These are the men who can and will write good, sound stories, and who will write their stories in continuity of action if they are given the proper encouragement. At present they are either ignored or insulted.

Recently a writer on the subject has been foaming at the mouth in his effort to get over the argument that if manufacturers will spend more money for scripts they will obtain better stories. This is true only in a sense. More money must be paid for good stories, but the mere expenditure of large sums will not bring about the result. The money must be spent intelligently. At present it goes in too large sums to persons utterly incompetent, in spite of their reputations to write good film stories, and it is film stories and not reputation that are needed at the moment.

A good example of this may be found in the late and unlamented Runaway June. It is said that between $12,000 and $15,000 were paid George Randolph Chester for the scenario of this serial, and here scenario is used in its proper sense as the sketch of the action and not the action itself. It is further reported that Mr. Chester did not particularly care to write the story, as he could make as much elsewhere with work in his own line. He wrote a scenario, and this was done into a continuity by a staff man who endeavored to follow the script. Here was a case where a large payment did not bring an adequate result. Another instance is "Zudora," the script of which was thrown away when the cancellations began to come in, the director and Francis Worcester Doughty, a veteran writer of detective stories, finishing the series and saving the day. These are but two instances. They might be multiplied indefinitely. Clearly a large investment is not the answer.

There are four classes of authors; the beginners, whose name is legion, the men and women who can write well enough to make the lesser magazines and the newspaper syndicates, the writers who have passed this stage but whose reputations have not yet been made and the men who are recognized as leaders. It is from the second and third classes that the film writers of tomorrow must be drawn. The beginners—or some of them—will eventually work into the second class, but for the moment attention must be centered upon the second and third classes, for few of the men at the top of their profession will take the trouble to study the new art with care. They will write scenarios that may or may not be practicable, but they will not bother to write their ideas out in action, as is required and only the author himself, if he knows how to do the work, can tell his story in the action that will best convey the ideas he possesses to the audience. It is not the part of the director to write the script of action, nor should any form of studio reconstruction be permitted. The work of the author should be realized as it stands if only authors are trained to give the best exemplification of their ideas in action.

This is not as difficult as it would seem. Bannister Merwin was one of the first script writers, but soon dropped the work when he found that the production methods of that early day could not permit the making of his stories nor the payment of a sum that would show him a profit on his time. It was not until two or three years later that he found a proper opening with the Edison company. Emmett Campbell Hall, on the other hand, had not yet reached the point Mr. Merwin had. He was willing to accept $25 and $35 for a single reel because he saw that this business offered him a better future than the magazine field seemed to provide. Captain Peacocke, at that time, was selling to the Black Cat and magazines of that grade, but could not reach the better class of magazines, and used to pester editors with copies of the Black Cat and the Ten Story Book. They found encouragement and grew. They made good. There are others who could be similarly trained, but they must be given assurance that there is some sort of market and that they will not always be paid an average of ten dollars a reel "for the idea alone." Come out in the open and buy and pay for stories. Give the promising writers a chance to see how things are done. Follow their scripts until they no longer have to write in to inquire if the current release is their story or one like it, as has been done in the past, and it will be found that the supply will equal the demand when there is a real and genuine demand backed by checks.

Club Women Discuss Pictures

Women's Federation Goes On Record Against Official State or Federal Censorship—High Praise Accorded to Motion Picture Art.

By Betty Shannon.

ART LIBERTY for the motion picture is the plea of the clubwomen. Students of the motion picture as an art, an industry and a great public amusement spoke before the motion picture conference of the thirteenth biennial convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs at the Seventh Regiment Armory in New York, Saturday, May 27. Most of the speakers were clubwomen and leaders in the organization. Their expressions were unanimously against censorship for the motion picture.

While censorship was obviously the principal topic of discussion, it was brought to the fore by the fact that the conference had set out to discuss means of securing proper and adequate motion picture programs for children of pre-adolescent age. The women were advised, both by their own speakers and by representatives of the industry that it would be easy to secure "films for children" if the manufacturer and the exhibitor of motion pictures could be assured of the patronage that would make them profitable.

No formal action was taken at this session, but before the close of the week's activities it is probable that a definite plan of action will be endorsed by the federation and officially adopted. It appears likely that this action will include the appointment of a committee which will represent the clubwomen in future conferences and co-operative efforts between the organization and the makers of pictures.

As this report is written it seems most certain that if the federation follows the reports and decisions of its specially delegated investigators of the motion picture, a definite and positive stand against censorship will be taken by the whole body. This may be expected to have a highly important influence against the establishment of federal censorship and against state and local censorships in the thousands of communities represented in the federation membership.

To the motion picture manufacturer and to the exhibitor the conference of Saturday must be viewed of particular importance, in that it points to the development of a well-defined and established market for children's films. The whole spirit of the conference was a plea for co-operation with the exhibitor in behalf of the children's show.

Mary Grey Peck, of Geneva, N. Y., a club leader, and foremost among the clubwomen as a foe of censorship, was the first and principal speaker.

"The motion picture drama has come naturally. It is a great conservator of our civilization," said Miss Peck. "Every great civilization before ours has fallen because beauty has been withheld from the masses. The motion picture presents beauty in the only form in which it is available to the poor.

"The motion picture is also a conservator of morals. Investigation shows that the saloon and the tobacco trust have found the competition of the motion picture a more serious foe than the W. C. T. U. or any anti-saloon or anti-cigarette league. As long as the admission price for the motion picture theater remains as low as the cost of a drink or a box of cheap cigarettes it will continue to be.

"The motion picture has its faults. The producer realizes this as much as we do, regrets it as much as we do. There are two ways of going about the betterment of the pictures—one is destructive, the other is constructive. The root of all objection to motion pictures can be found in the fact that children are being shown pictures intended for grown-ups, and that these grown-ups are of the masses, with uncultivated tastes. If we allow 60 per cent. of the race to live as cattle or as pigs in a sty, we cannot expect them to have high standards.

"Children have been seeing pictures designed for the man with no standards of taste; therefore the children's tastes have been demoralized. It is up to the manufacturers and people with taste to raise the general standard. This cannot be done over night.

"Do we want forty-eight different boards of censorship?" continued Miss Peck, launching out into the state censorship problem. "Do we want to multiply the expense at looking at films forty-eight times? If we set up forty-eight boards of censorship, there will be merely forty-eight standards, multiplying the friction. It will mean that the expense of carrying them on will have to be met. It will mean that the tax on every ticket sold will be passed on to the working man and his family. That will mean the death of the picture show.

"The constructive solution is not to put the censorship of motion pictures into politics. We women do not want to aid, by our consent and support, the establishment of forty-eight political rings, when in thirty-six states we have not the vote to control them.

"The obvious thing to do is to work for the creation of motion picture shows for children. The adult play cannot be modified into ones suitable for children. There must be a children's picture drama. Educational pictures alone will never entertain them. Pictures must be given to them in interesting, well-balanced programs. And then, when picture programs for children have been procured, it is the duty of mothers to send their children to these shows. Motion picture theater managers cannot be expected to open their houses to children, if children are not sent to the performances.

"We stand in a position of balance of power. If we do not take our stand on the side of cultural art for the masses against the making of the censorship of pictures a political thing, we shall see the pictures crushed and their value vitiated. We can make the children's program and children's picture a practical thing by helping create a paying demand for them.

"The solution of the child problem has already been solved in many places by the successful establishment of children's programs. New York City has tried them out, as has Providence, R. I., and Brookhaven, Miss., and many other cities and towns.

"Children want to go to see good pictures. We want to send them. The producers want to give the pictures. So the only thing for us to do is to make it pay.

"We of this generation are looking at something no generation of the world has ever looked at before. We have seen a great art grown and approach maturity. We are the only generation which has seen such a thing. It took centuries for the Greek drama, the picturesque art of Italy, and the German music to develop. And yet one of the most appealing and sensitive arts has had its growth under our eyes. We are the guardian angels of this latest, and perhaps the last, great art.

"No great art has ever fallen below its initial impulse. The motion picture has permanent beauty. I plead with you to give it freedom to develop. You cannot do anything with art by confining it. Let it grow as God does His works."

Miss Peck closed her speech by quoting a paragraph from Milton written against censorship of the press.

She also spoke at some length on the work of the National Board of Review, saying that the standards of that body were the standards of the great mass of people, and that it was the work of the board to bring up their standards as fast as human nature would permit them to.

The second speaker on the program was John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Freuler said:

I understand the general purpose of this conference to be an effort toward a fuller understanding between the patrons of the motion picture and the makers of the motion picture. Speaking in general for the industry and in person for seven great studios, I can say that motion pictures are made and always will be made to meet the demand of the public.

You represent a very large and important part of our public. We want to please you as that part of our public. Therefore, it only remains that you shall decide what you want and that you shall adequately communicate to us what that want is.

We make pictures for a market. The pictures of today are made for the market of today, to supply the demand as it is interpreted to us. Under present conditions there stands between us the motion picture theater, which gives you entertainment with our product. Your pictures are bought for you by the man who operates the motion picture theater—the exhibitor we call him.

The exhibitor has invested his money and his effort with the principal and final purpose of making a profit. We have made our investment for the same purpose. We must serve the exhibitor with what he demands. He, to succeed, must serve his patronage with what it is willing to pay for. This makes it rather certain that, speaking broadly, the expression of the demand of the public must come to us from you through the exhibitor. It would lose money for us and benefit you none to have pictures made for you which the exhibitor would not show to you. That sort of thing has happened more than once in the motion picture business, too.

The exhibitor who runs the theater in your community stands in somewhat the same relation to you as the editor of your local or neighborhood newspaper. Following the simile, our relation to you through him is somewhat like that of the Associated Press. We make and release for exhibition a certain output of pictures. The exhibitor chooses and exhibits them to you by the exercise of somewhat the same kind of judgment as that which guides the editor in culling the news that comes over the wires to choose what he will present to you in your morning paper.

If you do not like the kind of a paper you are getting, you either quit reading it or you write a letter to the editor. You make him feel that he is not getting your patronage because you do not like the product he offers. He is anxious to have you as a reader, a patron. The letters that go into a newspaper office always get careful consideration because they are the indices of the demand and the trend of taste. The result is, that the public gets the kind of a newspaper it wants. Special editions and special pages and sections are issued to meet specialized demands such as yours—the woman's club column is a good example.

The newspaper conducts its special columns because they are "good business." This seems to me to point the way for the solution of the problem which you are considering.

Your special purpose here, as I understand it, is to concern yourself with what you call the problem of securing motion picture productions for children. You will have to make it worth while to the man who runs your motion picture theater. If you do, he will ask us for the pictures and he will get them.

I might take issue with you on "the child and picture problem." Frankly, I do not believe that the motion pictures of today are working harm to children. The drama and, the motion picture in particular, present "predigested experience." I believe that motion pictures and their educating influence have done a great deal to make the children of today the cleanest generation in our history—clean with positive strength and knowledge, rather than clean with the negation of sheltered ignorance.

Probably you will be interested in some of the primary facts about the great physical and financial machinery of the picture business, with which you here propose to deal. The making of a five-reel production, which it takes about one hour and a quarter to show to you, involves vast labor and big expense. We must, in the first place, have the studio, a special equipment for lighting, scenery and various mechanical accessories. Any studio worthy of the name today represents an investment of approximately one-quarter million dollars.

Next we are concerned with our play, which, at this stage, we will call a scenario, the working script or skeleton outline of the photodrama as it is being run into words by the author or, more properly, by a series of authors, who have evolved somebody's plot into a motion picture scenario. The cost of this scenario completed may total from $500 to $1,500 in common practice. According to the requirements of the scenario, a cast must be chosen. Actors and actresses employed and extra people hired. In a production of this character the star will draw a salary of approximately $1,000 a week, and that this star will be supported by a cast costing perhaps $2,000 in addition per week; that the director who has charge of the production or picture will receive anywhere from $200 to $1,200 per week; that the cameraman who actually takes the picture receives $75 or $150 a week. Now we have our people and our place to work in. It is going to take us a minimum of five weeks to make this picture. Meanwhile, we are using the expensive equipment of the studio and perhaps all sorts of accessories and incidental properties like automobiles, special trains and so forth.

Scene by scene a picture is taken until the negative is complete. In making a five-reel production—which will ultimately be shown to you as 5,000 feet—a total of 10,000 to 40,000 feet of negative will be taken, because many scenes are taken over to get desired effects. In the presence of a conference of the director of the picture, a representative of the executive office of the producing corporation, probably two men from the scenario department, a cameraman and, in most instances, the star, a first print or positive copy from the negative is projected on the screen for examination. A conference is held. Various scenes are eliminated and shortened or modified. The titles have to be written, photographed and inserted. No expense or care is spared. The picture is reassembled and it is projected and screened again before another conference with the titles in their proper places. If it passes this examination the negative is then cut to conform with the form and the approved positive print.

According to the scope of operations of the concern through which the picture is released or through which it is sold and delivered to the theaters, a large number of prints are made. In the instance of a certain great comedian a total of several hundred prints are made while on the usual five-reel production it would be fair to say that from 30 to 50 prints would be made for release in the United States. Each of these prints will be 5,000 feet long and will require many hundreds of dollars' worth of film stock. The making of these prints involves expensive chemical and mechanical processes. Very large quantities of chemicals, costing as high as $50 per pound, are used. If our five-reel production is run into a total of approximately 50 prints we may say that probably not less than $30,000 and maybe $200,000 in capital is tied up in that production.

Now the distributing organization begins its work. These prints must be shipped to the motion picture exchange, from which the theaters get service. In the case of the most extensive releasing concern in the United States this means supplying prints to 68 branch offices or exchanges. There are others nearly as large. From these exchanges the positive prints are distributed to the theaters which have rented or booked this production. I have not burdened you with any of the very expensive considerations of advertising and promotion which every production of this magnitude requires before it is booked by the theaters. From the exchange the film goes to the theaters variously by express and messenger service. Its rental begins by the big theater of the big city on what we call "first run." After the picture has had its "first run" it goes to other theaters in other parts of the same district, until it has run through its working life, which may be from 120 days to 2 years.

A great releasing concern, such as I have discussed, to operate effectively, must have a capital of several million dollars. All this is at your service for the 10c, 15c or 25c which you pay to sit in an opera chair and see motion pictures on the screen. This simple, but wonderful, product consumes thousands of dollars for every second of entertainment offered to the individual patron of the motion pictures.

The first thought of the average American when he wants to change anything is to suggest legislation, to urge a law. Unfortunately, too many people have suggested censorship to improve the motion picture. History proves censorship never improved anything. Censorship is destructive, not constructive. It preaches do not instead of do. Censorship did not help the newspaper. The newspaper, admittedly one of the greatest constructive forces for good in modern civilization, did not come into real existence until the institution of censorship for the press was destroyed. Censorship can retard the picture. It can not help. The publishers of motion pictures have the same rights as those which protect the free press. Existing law is ample to punish the guilty maker of the immoral picture, and to punish the man who exhibits such a picture. Trial by jury will decide.

Do not hold every picture guilty until proven innocent. Do not try to choose for the public. The only choice for the public must come from the whole public. The motion picture as an institution is greater than any one of us or any group of us.

As a maker and distributor of pictures, I offer you co-operation and ask from you co-operation. Let us avoid misunderstandings, they are unprofitable to us both.

Orrin G. Cocks, secretary of the National Board of Review, was the third and last speaker on the regular program.

"The problem of the child and the motion picture—if it is a problem—is being met in a definite kind of way.

"Many people have not realized that there is a child world and an adult world; that children must have their own plays, lectures, recreation and interests, and that pictures for adults are not always suitable for children. There is a vast amount of film for children worked out for children and to be used by children. I have a list of 250 theaters in which children's programs are being shown. This means that we are past the experimental period in the matter of films for children.

"We represent the elevated tenth. There are nine-tenths below us. We can't impose our wishes and tastes on them. We must find out what the girl in the factory and the day laborer wants. It is the same with children. They do not want educationals. They don't want to watch the great American Beauty rose open. They will run around the corner to see some popular player. They want fun and action. And yet too often we try to give them what they do not want, because we think they ought to have it."

Mr. Cocks explained the matter of cost and picture distribution which made it impossible for the average small town theater to get the biggest and finest productions when they are new, explaining that the larger audiences of the city pay for the costs of expensive programs. He said that the exhibitor in the small towns could get any pictures his patrons desired if they would make it worth while.

"It is possible for you in the small towns to find out what is good and available through people interested in the problem in the cities. The National Board of Review can also help with its lists of selected films which it especially recommends. We have a list of 1,450 'family films' which we recommend for the entire family, aside from lists of children's pictures.

"The whole question of better and cleaner pictures must be worked out with, for and by all the people. Begin by finding out what the mass of people think and want. Find out what the children like. Then give them what they like and want, not what you think they need."

Following Mr. Cocks' talk, came an open discussion with a number of three-minute speeches from the floor.

Miss Helen Duey, editor of the "Better Films" department of the Woman's Home Companion, was the first to appear. She spoke of the motion picture industry as the "baby art," and urged the women to help to make it a "better baby" art by their sane co-operation. She asked them to shut their eyes to the bad qualities in the present pictures, and at the same time to shut their pocketbooks, which, she said, would remedy matters. She spoke of the lists of films for family use and for children gathered by her magazine, which would be sent out on request.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sears, editor of Film Fun, who was formerly a clubwoman from a small town in Kansas, spoke of the problem of the small town woman and the small town picture theater. She made clear the fact that farm people, as a rule, can pay and pay well for good pictures, and told the women that it was up to them to make the exhibitor in their towns show them the pictures they want by making it pay.

Mrs. Jane Stannard Johnson made a plea for better and cleaner pictures.

Mrs. Edith Dunham Foster, of the Community Motion Picture Service of Boston, said that fathers and mothers must be made to feel the necessity of separate programs for children and then the children must be made to feel that they are being given something to be desired, when they are allowed to go to see children's programs. Therefore the programs must be interesting and full of life.

Miss Marjorie Howard, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, gave the clubwomen a few don'ts, including a request for them to demand good, clear pictures, not worn-out ones, for children.

John A. Sherman, assistant to the president of the Paramount Company, was the only dissenting voice on the question of federal censorship heard at the gathering. He asked for some outside regulation and begged the clubwomen to join his own and two or three other companies in a fight for federal censorship.

Miss Mary Newell Eaton, of the Drama League of Grand Rapids, Mich., spoke on the successful work of gaining school credits for attendance at educational film performances for students in her town, and other phases of the successful solving of the problem.

The discussion was then turned over to the audience.

Presiding at this joint meeting of the educational, the civics and the drama departments of the General Federation of Women's Clubs were Miss Helen Varick Boswell, of New York; Mrs. George Zimmerman, of Ohio, and Mrs. Charles Cartwright, of Minneapolis, Minn., chairman of the various departments.

There were representatives from all the important film companies in attendance.

A Visit to the Selig Zoo

The World's Los Angeles Representative Inspects the Animals and Studies Their Table Manners.

By G. P. Von Harleman.

THIS week we made a trip out to the Selig studios at Eastlake Park and had the pleasure of spending a good part of the afternoon with Producing Manager Thomas Nash. We had quite a little talk about our mutual friends in Chicago, and strolled around the big Zoo. Colonel Selig certainly has a magnificent lot of animals. Cages upon cages of big cats in elaborately built animal houses are there. The writer has seen many zoological gardens, both in this country and in Europe, but, outside of a very few—one in this country, the Bronx Park in New York City, and two or three across the pond—there certainly isn't anything like the Selig's Zoo anywhere in the world.

The Zoo is one of the show places of Los Angeles. You can see "rubber neck" cars lined up before the entrance almost any time of the day. Picnics and lodge outings are held there once or twice a week all during the summer. Sometimes as many as fifteen or twenty thousand people participate.

The Zoo covers a tremendous piece of ground, part of which is occupied by the studios of the Selig Polyscope Company. Two companies are working there at present, most of the production now being done at the large studio in Chicago.

Among the many interesting people we met on this visit was Walter Beckwith, the chief animal trainer of the Selig Zoo. Mr. Beckwith understands big cats thoroughly. He has been an animal trainer all his life and the things he does with the lions and tigers is simply remarkable. In some of the jungle pictures that have been produced of late, Mr. Beckwith has taken part and had some of the big lions veritably jump on him.

When Mr. Beckwith took us around to show his pets, it was feeding time and the cats were having their feast of horse meat. "That is the only time," said the trainer, "when you must not disturb a jungle beast, the time when he eats; even the most gentle of them will get cross and would be likely to make a pass at you. Now look at 'Teddy' here; he is generally as mild as a lamb, but get close to the bar and hear him roar. By the way, 'Teddy,' the two-year-old lion cub, dislocated my hip about two months ago when he jumped on me in a picture. The one next to him is his older brother. He sank a tooth through my skull when I was playing with him in his cage about six months ago." We could hardly believe this, but Mr. Beckwith showed us the scar where the tooth had struck, and on asking him if it hadn't almost killed him, reluctantly admitted that he was quite sick for some time but made the comment as a matter of fact that it was all in a day's game.

Another interesting incident related by Mr. Beckwith was the case of a fox terrier raising a litter of puma lions with her own puppies. Of the two litters only one puma lion and one fox terrier were alive. They were in the same cage and the closest of friends, and, said Mr. Beckwith, "you would hardly believe it, but the dog is the boss."

After making the round through all of the Polyscope plant watching the work on the stages, we said good-bye to friendly Tom Nash and left the Selig Zoo, having spent our Saturday afternoon in a most profitable and pleasant manner.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of May 28 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

Blanche Sweet at the Strand.

THE Strand theater presented Blanche Sweet for the week in "The Thousand-Dollar Husband," a photoplay written for her by Margaret Turnbull and produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. In her latest film play Blanche Sweet has the role of a maid of all work in a boarding house near a college town. She falls in love with one of the college students who burns the midnight oil over a poker table. When a wealthy uncle leaves her a fortune, with the provision that she marry immediately, the waitress decides to purchase the college boy as a bridegroom.

The first of Max Figman's one-reel comedies, Finley's studies of wild animals, a scenic of American National Parks, and a Mutt and Jeff comedy cartoon completed the picture program. The soloists were Olga Carmen, H. K. Guerro, Grace Hoffman and Emerson Williams.

Douglas Fairbanks at the Rialto.

Douglas Fairbanks returned to the screen of the Rialto as the principal attraction of the week in a breezy new Triangle photoplay, "Reggie Mixes In." Another favorite, Bessie Love, divided honors with Mr. Fairbanks, playing the role of a girl of the slums.

The story of "Reggie Mixes In" is suggested by its title. A wealthy idler of athletic tendencies, Reggie tires of the stupid routine of his own set and on a slumming expedition encounters a cabaret dancer who captivates him. In the course of his Tenderloin career he figures as a "bouncer" and a gang leader.

Topical, scenic and scientific pictures, and a Keystone comedy were also on the program. Amparita Farrar and Sara Gurowitsch were the new soloists.

"His Great Triumph" at the Broadway.

Marguerite Snow and William Nigh shared stellar honors in "His Great Triumph," the feature photoplay at the Broadway theater last week. The picture was written and directed by Mr. Nigh, and gives many interesting glimpses of New York life: the Tombs, Chinatown, the Bowery, Fifth avenue, Central Park and other well-known locations being shown.

"Tammany's Tiger," a two-part comedy, was also on the bill. The Broadway News, scenics, and cartoons completed the list.

Eighty-first Street Theater Program.

At the Eighty-first Street theater four Triangle pictures were shown. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday De Wolf Hopper, in "Mr. Goode, the Samaritan," and a Keystone comedy formed the bill. On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, H. B. Warner was the star in "Thee Market of Vain Desire." A Keystone comedy was another offering.

Robert E. Wilson Joins Metro-Drew Staff

ROBERT E. WILSON, the well known young juvenile actor, has been engaged by Metro to play juvenile roles in the Metro-Drew weekly comedies in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are starred. Mr. Wilson has been with the Thanhouser company for three years, where he won an enviable record in prominent roles. Mr. Wilson was born in Stonehaven, Scotland, twenty-two years ago, and came to this country with his parents when he was four years old. He spent his boyhood in Warren, Pa., and then removed to Jamestown, N. Y. He planned originally to take up a newspaper career, but after working as a reporter for six months he gave it up and went on the stage. His first engagement was with the Horne stock company, then playing at Canton, Ohio. He played a season there and another season in Erie, Pa., when he came to New York. Mr. Wilson experienced little difficulty in obtaining a motion picture engagement, for he is the type that is always in demand. He worked with Marion and Madeline Fairbanks and Sidney Bracey for nearly two years with the Thanhouser company. Mr. Wilson is extremely versatile and is an expert at riding, swimming, diving, motoring and other outdoor activities. He is a baseball fan and is fond of shooting.

"What is a Clean Picture?"

By W. W. Hodkinson, President of Paramount Pictures Corporation.

PARAMOUNT is for policy of clean pictures. Our producers agree with us that this is the thing. We are exercising every possible control we have to bring about a condition of clean pictures—for cleaner pictures mean better pictures. What is a clean picture? It is a careless generality to state that "it all depends upon the way you look at a thing!" Nothing was ever more false. What is vital is that it all depends upon the way the producer looks at it. It's all in the way a thing is presented. Consider the literary masterpieces of the world, novels and the drama. In the hands of one kind of an author, the subject matter would be entirely offensive. In the hands of another kind of writer it would be entirely inoffensive. It's all a question of the way a thing is done. So with motion pictures. Two entirely different actresses can give to the identical situation two entirely different interpretations. Producers of clean pictures do not fear any situation. The Paramount policy is that clean pictures can be produced without prudishness.

Which brings us to the question of censorship. A standard of morals is not a constant. What would be eliminated by a censorship board in one part of the country would be passed in another. Good taste, however, is a constant, and to produce clean pictures—that is all we must observe. It is impossible to produce a program which will be suitable for children and at the same time cater to adult persons. We might see a picture and half of us would agree that it was alright, that we were perfectly justified in calling it a clean picture. The other half would say: "I don't believe that is a good picture. I don't believe you could show it to a child without possible injurious effects." So, in saying we stand for clean pictures and only for clean pictures, we must be careful not to misrepresent. For, after all, there are clean pictures of subject matter, however, open to debate as far as an audience of children is concerned. Novels, dramas, motion pictures all reflect life. All sincere art is open to discuss all of the problems that confront any of us. Tie the hands of art and you get into hypocrisy. Now this means showing crime on the screen. Unless you eliminate all crime from pictures in order to keep them clean, you've got to eliminate all children from the audience watching those particular pictures. It is obvious that a child cannot be taken to see pictures portraying crimes that he would imitate. And, again, we get back to the way a thing is done. The difference between a producer of clean pictures and a producer of unclean ones is his way of presenting a crime. If you make a crime incidental to the action of the story and it does not glorify a criminal you are only doing what has been done in the best literature of the world. But if you glorify the crime or the criminal, you are making a sensational picture. It seems to me that is the whole story in connection with clean or unclean pictures. It is not so much a question of choice of subject matter, but of good taste in handling the subject matter before you.

NORMA TALMADGE IN NEW YORK.

Norma Talmadge, the popular Triangle star whose work in "Going Straight," the Triangle-Fine Arts drama just released, added new honors to those she had already won by her work before the camera, arrived in New York Thursday from the Pacific Coast. Accompanying her was John Emerson, the well known Triangle-Fine Arts director whose most recent work was the staging and adopton of Macbeth in which Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree and Constance Collier are seen. The director and film star will begin work immediately at the Triangle studio at Riverdale on a new film feature in which Miss Talmadge is to be starred. That the Triangle corporation had acquired the old Reliance studio at Riverdale comes as news to many in the motion picture world and the feature which has brought the noted star and equally famous director from the Pacific Coast will be the first to be made for the Triangle there.

HAROLD CAREY WITH PARAMOUNT.

Harold Carey, associate editor of "Every Week," and former managing editor of "Technical World" is now on the staff of Paramount Pictographs. Pictures are not new to Carey. He had charge of the double page pictorial layouts on "Every Week", they being distinctive because of the extremely original subject matter chosen. Carey has the knack of writing witty tales and new and unexpected twists may be expected in the future on the features appearing in Paramount's "Animated Magazine on the Screen."

Berst Approves Hughes Bill

After Careful Study Head of Pathe Exchange Says It Is Only Way to Stop Obnoxious State Bills.

J. A. BERST, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, has come out flat-footed for federal censorship of pictures. Mr. Berst strongly believes that some form of censorship is inevitable and that the best interest of the business demands a federal law drawn up in accordance with the views of the manufacturers, and put through with their support. "This is the only way in which obnoxious state censorship bills can be headed off," says Mr. Berst. "The fact that the federal government is passing upon films will be a powerful argument against local censorship—the most powerful that we can have."

Mr. Berst made a careful study of the Hughes bill and sent to the Hon. Dudley M. Hughes, chairman of the House Committee on Education, a letter containing the result of his analysis and pointing out a number of objectionable features in the bill. Under date of May 19th Mr. Hughes wrote Mr. Berst to the effect that many of his suggestion had been followed in the new bill. The revised bill was carefully analyzed by Mr. Berst, who, on May 23d, wrote Mr. Hughes in part as follows:

> "I wish to assure you that your bill will find in our firm a very strong support. All the big concerns intend to get together and discuss this bill thoroughly, and I am confident that a resolution will be adopted for the support of the bill."

Mr. Hughes, recognizing Mr. Berst's great help in putting the bill upon a basis where it would merit the support of the manufacturers, wired Mr. Berst on the 24th as follows:

> "Thanks for your letter of the 23d. Have I your permission to make this letter public? Wire answer."

Mr. Berst accordingly wired his consent to have his letter used.

When the new bill is carefully read, compared with the old one and also with Mr. Berst's first letter to Mr. Hughes, the value of the Pathe executive's suggestions and the weight they had in Washington is at once apparent.

SELZNICK OPENS CHICAGO OFFICES.

With the Eastern States fully covered through his recent deals for the distribution of Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation features, Lewis J. Selznick this week dispatched two personal representatives to Chicago to look over the middle western field and close franchises for the establishment of exchanges and branch offices in that territory.

Ben. S. Cohen, recently district manager for World Film, and Ned H. Spitzer, formerly of Bluebird, were the two representatives chosen to conduct business for the Selznick concerns in Chicago. They left New York Sunday and will make their headquarters temporarily at the Sherman House.

While in the West Messrs. Cohen and Spitzer will get in personal touch with the hundreds of exhibitors in that territory who have applied by mail and wire for the Clara Kimball Young features. As each exhibitor is signed he will receive a five-year franchise and, as a souvenir, a silver framed autograph photo of Miss Young.

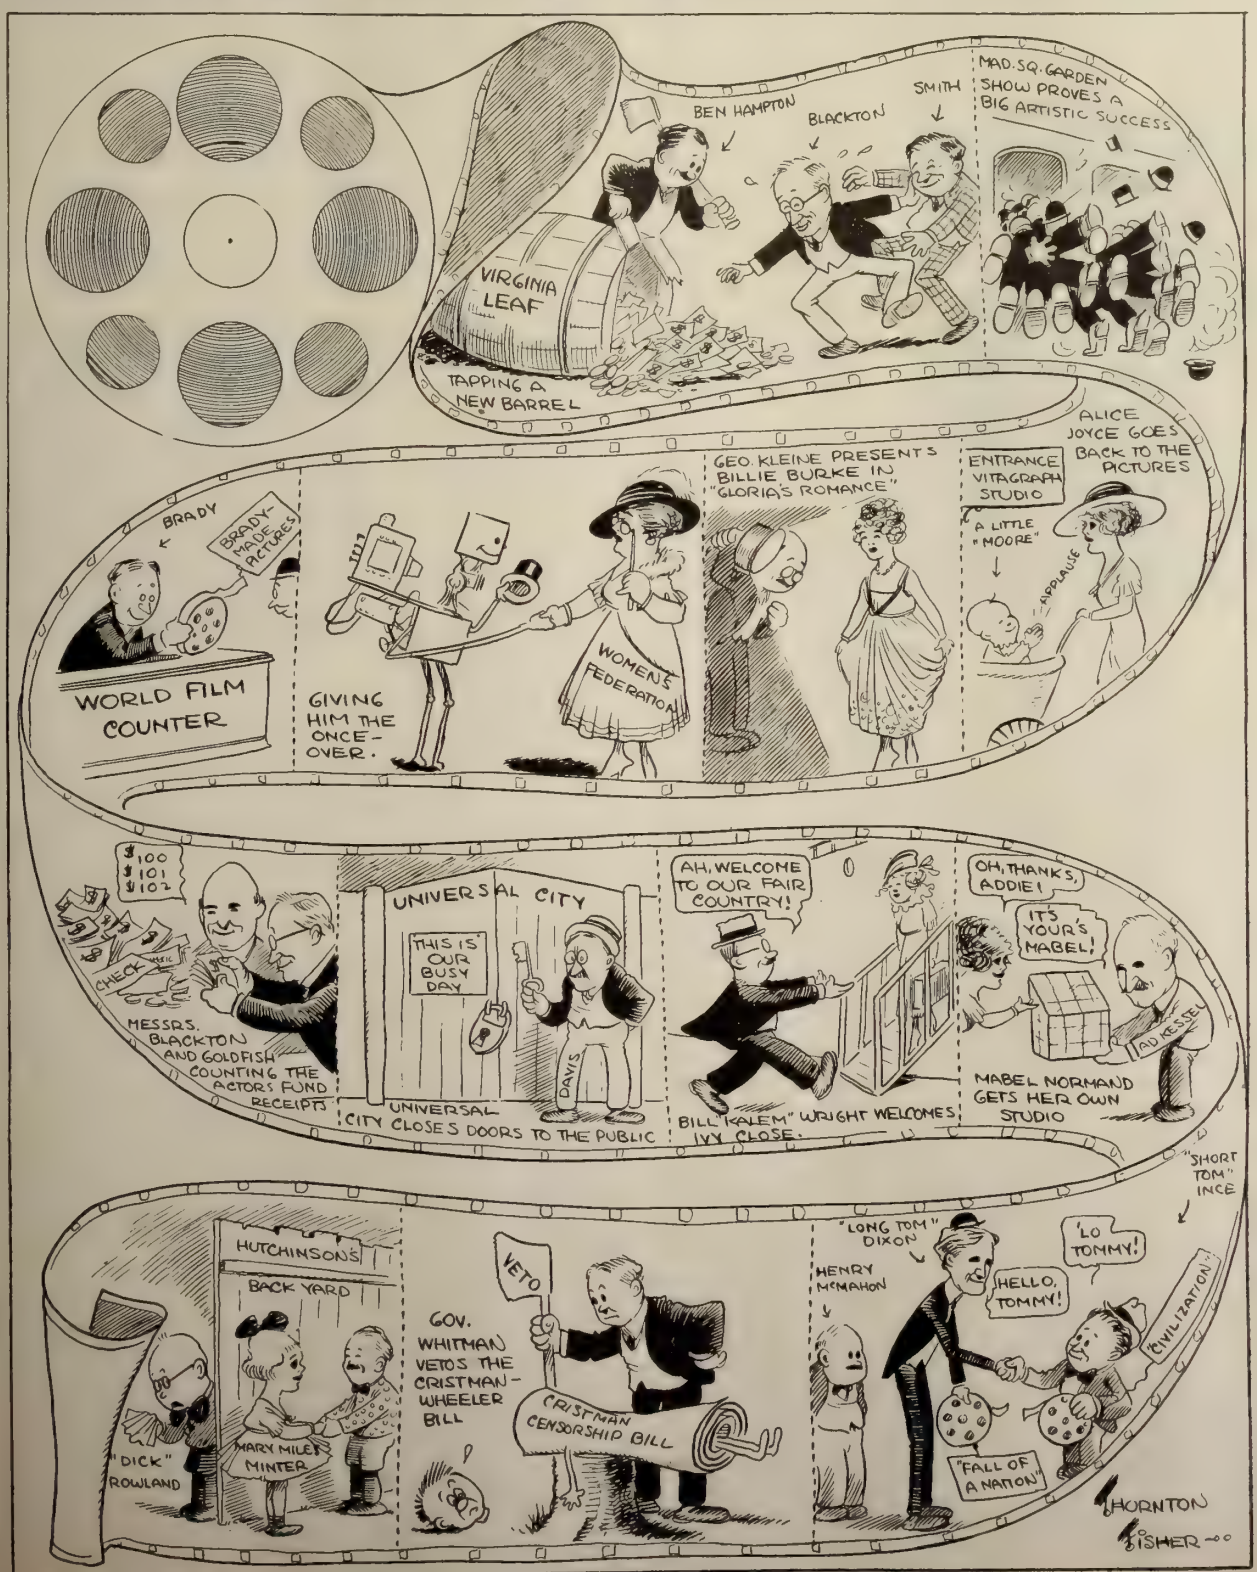
MASSIVE PORTABLE LIGHTING PLANT FOR SELIG.

That the Selig Polyscope Company proposes to spare no time nor expense in securing perfect results in its Athletic Film Service, recently announced for release through the V-L-S-E., is evidenced by the purchase by that company of a massive portable lighting plant which can be shipped and installed in any hall, park or arena, in which important athletic events are conducted. This lighting will result in perfect photography whether the athletic contest takes place day or night, rain or shine. In order to secure this perfect photography, it is interesting to state that this lighting plant will produce more than 1,700,000 candle power.

IRENE HOWLEY IN "THE PURPLE LADY."

Irene Howley, who appeared in "A Yellow Streak" with Lionel Barrymore, plays opposite Ralph Herz in "The Purple Lady," the picturization of Sydney Rosenfeld's stage success which Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., is producing for the Metro program. Before playing for the Metro Pictures Corporation, Miss Howley was seen in Reliance, Biograph and Famous Players releases.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD NEWS REEL for MAY



Berst Plans Fashion Film

Pathe Executive Engages Florence Rose to Manage the New Feature.

J. A. BERST, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, has inaugurated a new series of pictures for the Pathe program which represents a decided departure from the ordinary and which, judging from the way they have been received by both newspapers and exhibitors, promise a marked success. Miss Florence Rose, the fashion expert, formerly editor of L'Art de la Mode, has been secured to put out a special reel of fashions twice a month, and a noteworthy list of prominent newspapers has been signed up to run a fashion article six days a week. These articles are to be written by Mrs. Radnor-Lewis, former managing editor of Harper's Bazaar, and are based upon the costumes shown in the films.

Florence Rose.

Among the papers so far signed up for this service are the Chicago Daily News, St. Paul Daily News, Omaha Daily News, Minneapolis Daily News, Cleveland Daily News, Buffalo Enquirer, Louisville Times, Baltimore American, Pittsburgh Dispatch, New York Tribune, Boston Traveler, Syracuse Post Standard and Utica Observer.

Miss Rose, the energetic and capable lady who has successfully "put over" this new idea in pictures, has had an interesting career, and one that should be an inspiration to women who have to make their own way in the world.

The Florence Rose newspaper service consists of a drawing by Winifred I. Messer, a clever fashion artist, and an article on the practical current fashions. The costumes shown, complete from head to foot, reflect the accepted styles as worn by New York's best dressed women.

The strength of the proposition from the newspaper standpoint lies in the fact that it offers a way by which double co-operation will be obtained from both exhibitor and retailer without having a word of advertising on the films. The retailer will be anxious to let his public know that he is carrying the costumes shown in the Pathe pictures, thus tieing up his advertising with the fashion article. The exhibitor will be able to secure added attendance from women and girls who are universally interested in new styles. The pictures will be so attractive that men will be interested in them also. All the exhibitors with whom we have spoken have expressed themselves unqualifiedly in favor of the proposition. We confidently expect that Pathe's Florence Rose fashion pictures will be a big success for all concerned.

Paramount Program

Regular Five Part Features Supplemented by Interesting Short Subjects.

PARAMOUNT pictures released for the week of June 12 will be headed by two five-reel features from the Famous Players studios. "Silks and Satins," released on Monday, will feature Marguerite Clark, while the Thursday release will be "Destiny's Toy," in which will appear the new Famous Players star, Louise Huff.

Short reels completing this program for the week will be the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Picture, "The Penal Colony of Palawan," the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon, "Colonel Heeza Liar and the Bandits," and the Paramount Pictographs.

At Palawan Paramount audiences will have an opportunity to study the most interesting penal colony in the world and the most humane. Here men who entered Bilibid Prison in Manila and other institutions in the Philippine Archipelago as the most dangerous of criminals are made over into self-respecting citizens and learn to support themselves and their families in almost perfect freedom. At Palawan, too, Mr. Holmes leads the way for two miles up an underground river and under lofty mountains. The next of the Travel Pictures will start a tour of European cities as they were before the present war, beginning with Berlin, the imperial.

Paramount Pictographs in the nineteenth release will show "The Making of a Bluejacket;" "Trend of the Imagination" in Professor Munsterberg's "Testing the Mind" series; "Free Play" in the "Better Babies" department, and "Jobs You Would Not Want," showing perilous occupations. This edition will also contain a new release of the Trickids.

Colonel Heeza Liar is now being starred in a new production every three weeks in the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons. The latest cartoon is "Colonel Heeza Liar and the Bandits," in which J. R. Bray takes his hero through a new series of laugh-making adventures.

Edwin Middleton to Direct Gaumont's Three-Act Plays

THE recent announcement that the Gaumont Company would make three-reel features of the same excellence as its five-reel production has now been followed by the further statement that these productions will reach the screen through the able direction of Edwin Middleton. Mr. Middleton came to the Gaumont Company as director of one-reel comedies. Before that he had directed such photoplays as the "Wildfire" feature with Lillian Russell and the "Rip Van Winkle" feature with Thomas Jefferson. Mr. Middleton made such an enviable reputation with his comedies, which were both clean and humorous, that he was sent to Jacksonville to head one of the Gaumont winter stock companies producing Mutual Masterpictures. One of his most eminent successes in this field was "The Haunted Manor," the five-reel feature starring Miss Iva Shepard.

Edwin Middleton.

Mr. Middleton's thoroughness is seen in the stipulation that he is to have exactly the same facilities which he enjoyed in making five-reel features. General Manager F. G Bradford, wishing the Gaumont name to maintain its prestige in this field as well, readily acquiesced. He allowed Mr. Middleton to pick his players. The result is that the three-act Gaumont photodramas will have as their male lead Alexander Gaden, one of the most popular stars in this country. He has twice won the Chicago Tribune's "frame of honor," as well as leading in various contests of a similar nature in the east. Mr. Middleton has selected Miss Gertrude Robinson to play opposite him. As there are occasional stories which require an artist of a quite different type, the director has secured permission to use Miss Iva Shepard whenever occasion requires. Miss Lucille Taft will also appear from time to time in these productions. Among other favorite players enlisted for Mr. Middleton's company are Henry W. Pemberton, Miss Mathilde Baring, Charles W. Travis, Albert Macklin and James Levering.

The formation of this three-reel company in no manner interferes with Gaumont's other activities in Mutual service. The first picture with Mr. Gaden in a star role is "The Spatulate Thumb," marked for release June 22. Miss Iva Shepard will play opposite him. Following this will be the great Robert Burns' story of New York life, "Gates of Divorce."

"HOW BRITAIN PREPARED" AT LYCEUM.

Under the title of "How Britain Prepared," pictures made under the direction of Charles Urban and officially sponsored by the British government, were given their initial showing in New York at the Lyceum theater on May 29.

They are not "war pictures," so-called. During the two hours and more which are occupied in unfolding them, there is only one "war film," the destruction of a German blockhouse in Flanders. But they are pictures which explain what war means to a whole nation, even more, perhaps, than would scenes of actual fighting taken at the front. They tell the story of what it means to a peace-loving people and what such a people are compelled to do when their country suddenly finds itself in peril

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

CHICAGO LOCAL WORKING HARD.

It Will Be Advocated at the Coming National Exposition and Convention in Chicago That One Big Event of the Kind a Year Is All That the Trade Can Stand.

THE first advertising that has been issued by the Chicago Local announcing the Sixth National Convention and Exposition of the M. P. E. L. of America, at the Coliseum, Chicago, July 10 to 18 inclusive, is in the form of an attractive card, 16 by 48 inches, in two colors. These cards have already been placed in the Illinois Central suburban trains and also in those of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul.

The members of the press and publicity committee are keeping in close touch with every exhibitor in the state of Illinois, and also with many others throughout the country. The Chicago Local is also centering interest on the increase of its own membership, and the members are working to the end so that every live exhibitor in Chicago will be an active member before the convention and exposition open.

One of the important questions that will be taken up for deliberation at the coming convention will show the importance of impressing on manufacturers and exhibitors that one exposition and convention a year is all that the trade can stand. The opinion will be advanced that it is better to have one big successful show each year, in which the manufacturers and exhibitors will work hand in hand for its pronounced success, than to have several expositions and conventions poorly represented and poorly attended.

The special convention committee of the Chicago Local returned to the city from New York early last week, and reported a very successful trip. All the members speak kindly of the courteous and liberal treatment received from the various interests of the industry. Many luncheons were given to the committee by the various manufacturers, and at all times the chief topic of conversation was the Sixth National Exposition and Convention in Chicago.

The members are much gratified over the liberal attitude of the various interests in the purchase of space in the Coliseum. Not only have the producers of films and the manufacturers of machines and supplies shown liberality, but they have also promised to do their utmost to make the coming national exposition and convention in Chicago the biggest and most successful of its kind in the history of the moving picture industry.

Wm. J. Sweeney is constantly on the move in the interests of the big coming affair in Chicago. He left for Omaha on Thursday, May 25, to attend the Motion Picture Men's Convention and "Movie" Ball, given under the auspices of the Omaha Screen Club and the Photoplay Managers' Association, which was held in that city on Friday, May 26. His visit was in response to an invitation requesting him to attend. It is needless to state that "Bill" will do all the boosting that is necessary among the exhibitors and other members of the trade in that section of the country, in the interests of the big Chicago event.

IMPORTANT LOCAL MEETING OF EXHIBITORS.

The officers of the local branch of the Exhibitors' League are sending out the following invitation to its members and to all exhibitors in the city:

"A meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors will be held on Monday night, June 5, at our rooms at 218 West Forty-second street, at 11 P. M. This organization has been in a most prosperous and sustaining condition, but your advice and support are essential to our business interests.

"At the meeting the following subjects will be discussed: Standee law; admission of minors without guardians; the best paying attractions at the least possible cost; the national convention at Chicago, etc.

"Some surprises await you. Be on time; do not bother about eats: a little spread will be given. Our motto: 'A Square Deal to All, With Special Privileges to None.'

"Remember, 11 P. M., Monday, June 5. All Motion Picture Exhibitors are invited, whether members of the league or not."

FAVOR FEDERAL CENSORSHIP.

Cincinnati Exhibitors Indorse Hughes Bill—Stearn Says State Board a Failure.

AS a result of action taken at a meeting held on Monday afternoon, May 22, at the Chamber of Commerce, the Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is one of the first in the country to place itself officially on record as favoring Federal censorship of moving pictures. A resolution to this effect was adopted, what little opposition developed during the discussion preceding the vote melting away and the vote being made unanimous.

President Max Stearn, of Columbus, head of the Ohio organization, was the principal speaker at the meeting, which was called by F. L. Emmert, president of the Cincinnati branch, for the purpose of considering the censorship problem from all sides. President Stearn delivered a strong address, in which he pointed out that State censorship has emphatically not been a success, and that inasmuch as some form of censorship seems to be called for, that of the Federal Government seems to be least objectionable. He emphasized the fact that the better exhibitors everywhere desire only clean films, and that they do not object to censorship which aims at the elimination of the unclean. "Motion pictures should be criticized carefully," he stated, in this connection, "but they should not be assaulted, which is the form which censorship and criticism too often take. People who make unjust attacks on moving pictures do not realize that they are attacking what has become the fifth largest industry in the United States."

Mr. Stearn pointed out that some of the leading producers, who have millions invested in the business, have indicated that they favor Federal censorship as a relief from objectionable state and local censorship, and argued that the exhibitor might logically follow this lead, especially as it is apparent that a permanent board of unbiased experts, employed by the Government, would do better work than a less authoritative or less expert tribunal.

After ample discussion of the matter, especially in the light of recent happenings in Cincinnati and Ohio as a result of state censorship, the exhibitors took the action indicated, giving sufficient proof that they were of President Stearn's opinion on the subject of censorship. Copies of the resolution adopted were sent to the Ohio delegation in Congress, and to the Paramount, Lasky, Metro, Famous Players, World and Equitable companies, all of which have gone on record as favoring Federal censorship. The meeting was well attended, and much interest was shown by the exhibitors.

NORTH CAROLINA CONVENTION AT DURHAM.

Local and nearby exhibitors are busy preparing for the semi-annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of North Carolina, which is to be held in Durham, July 19 and 20. Many of the exchanges and others doing business with the exhibitors of this state have already made arrangements for exhibition space. From the present outlook, this convention will be the most successful ever held by the exhibitors of the Tar Heel State.

CAST OF "L'ABBE CONSTANTIN."

"L'Abbe Constantin" is to be filmed by Director Rupert Julian, in five reels, the work of production is about to be commenced. The cast will include Julian, Elsie Jane Wilson, Louise Lovely, Douglas Gerrard, and other Universal City players. Julian has put in a great deal of work on the scenario of this well-known story, and an artistic production is anticipated.

"Civilization's Premiere"

Ince's Big Production Given Its First New York Showing on June 2d.

WIDESPREAD, in fact universal, interest has been attracted among states rights buyers and exhibitors at large by the announcement of the forthcoming production at the Criterion Theater, New York, on Friday, June 2, of Thomas H. Ince's greatest masterpiece to date, the widely heralded and advertised multiple reel cinema spectacle, "Civilization," which took a year to produce and employs the services of many thousand people. Mr. Ince and his staff, in their suite at the Astor Hotel, have been so besieged by states rights men and exhibitors at large, that it has been necessary to open an office in the quarters of the New York Motion Picture Corporation in the Longacre Building. There Adam Kessel and Charles O. Baumann have been receiving all visitors as well as the thousands of telegrams and letters from all parts of the United States and foreign countries not immediately affected by the war in behalf of Mr. Ince.

Scene from "Civilization" (Ince).

And here it might be appropriate to remark that all Mr. Ince will say anent his mammoth production, which by the way is eleven reels, is "Wait and see." There is but little question in the minds of those "in the know" that these words are happily prophetic. The New York premiere of "Civilization" bids fair to break all records, as already the advance sale of seats has been so tremendous that the house is sold out for four weeks in advance and this one week in advance of the opening date. For the "first night" of "Civilization," 1100 special invitations have been issued by Mr. Ince, his guests of honor including the most noted names in New York in financial, artistic, religious, social and literary circles.

YACHT NEIRBO GOES INTO COMMISSION.

The good ship Neirbo went into commission on Sunday, May 28, for the season of 1916. The occasion was celebrated by a voyage from New Rochelle to the summer station off the spacious home of the Belle Harbor Yacht Club. In command was Captain and Owner Charles J. O'Brien. As lay crew were many of the heads of departments and employees of the O'Brien printing establishment, in which each week is printed the Moving Picture World. At the conclusion of a most pleasant five-hour cruise the party sat down to a dinner in the clubhouse. Captain O'Brien was host. Features of the dinner that will live in the memory were steamed soft shell clams and melted butter and planked filet mignon.

In the party that made the cruise and congratulated the captain of the Neirbo on the fine condition of his craft were Edward Jackson, Fred Forrest, Sr., Fred Forrest, Jr., Antonio Falco, Joseph Graham, John Clausen, David Perazzo, Frank Fleck, Randall M. White and George Blaisdell.

Here's good luck to the Neirbo, her hospitable skipper and her jolly crew, lay and professional!

Universal Concentrates in West

All Eastern Producing Companies Will Be Transferred to Hollywood Under General Direction of H. O. Davis.

ABANDONING the new half-million dollar studio in Leonia, N. J., but retaining the finely equipped laboratories connected with the studio and the executive offices at 1600 Broadway, the Universal Company is preparing to move all of its producing companies to Universal City in Hollywood, Cal., where they will be under the general supervision of H. O. Davis, whose systematic organization of the great western plant has eliminated unnecessary overhead expenses and made possible the production of good pictures on a sound business basis. Julius Stern, for a number of years manager of the eastern studios, is no longer connected with the Universal Company. It is reported on good authority that he will become an important factor in the L-Ko organization, which makes pictures independently for release by Universal.

The glass-covered studio being vacated is one of the largest and finest in the country. Several manufacturers are negotiating for a long time lease with present prospects favoring the closing of a contract with William Fox.

When the shift of Universal's producing forces has been completed there will be thirty-five companies at Hollywood where the equipment is more than ample for the increased activities. Director Stuart Paton and his players have left already, and others will follow as soon as pictures started in the East are finished. Among those preparing to make their homes in the west are Mary Fuller, Violet Merserau, Matt Moore, Edna Hunter, Jane Gail, Ben Wilson, King Baggot, Hobart Henley, Harry Benham and Edith Roberts.

This wholesale concentration of forces is explained by Universal officials as a move to do away with unnecessary expenditures that do not contribute to the betterment of the product. The practical benefits of Mr. Davis's regime at Hollywood are the result of a finely worked out system through which many of the running expenses have been greatly reduced and some of them cut in half. In the employment of extras, for example, Mr. Davis has shown how money has been needlessly expended, because the requirements of the various directors were met individually, whereas with the proper co-operation in a large studio, actors engaged by the day might be profitably utilized in more than an occasional scene. This is but one of the numerous advantages of an organization such as exists in Universal City.

An announcement sent from the Universal executive office reads in part:

"The picture business has reached a commercial stage much more rapidly than any of the old timers imagined it would. It is now at the point where only those companies would eliminate all waste and make 'everything show on the screen' can hope to survive competition. The Universal Company was the first to take any step toward the concentrating of efforts and the consequent reduction of overhead expenses, and is therefore the first to reap the advantages of commercializing its business.

"About the first noticeable result of this move will be an improvement in the entire Universal program. Thousands of dollars which have hitherto been spent on overhead expenses can now be devoted to the pictures themselves, giving the Universal product a quality which others cannot hope to keep pace with unless they concentrate as the Universal has done. Thirty-five companies will eventually be operated at one place with one overhead charge.

"It has taken much longer to achieve this stage of perfection than anyone in the company anticipated. Innumerable obstacles had to be overcome one by one, but meanwhile an organization was being perfected in all its details Expensive equipment was added at Universal City week by week, until every department had the finest and most approved "tools" with which to do perfect work. Countless ideas have been discarded. But, after all this period of experimentation, the company has emerged with an equipment and with facilities absolutely unparalleled in the whole world of picture making."

MARGUERITE SKIRVIN IN "THE QUITTER."

Marguerite Skirvin, a brilliant and charming young artist, who has been engaged by Metro, will be seen on that program in the leading female role in "The Quitter," a five-part Metro-Rolfe wonderplay in which Lionel Barrymore is starred. Miss Skirvin has the role of a Western girl, which is entirely to her liking, as she hails from Oklahoma. There, as a young girl, she learned to ride wild horses, swim treacherous streams and do other things she is called upon to do in "The Quitter" before the camera.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

Clean Pictures Are the Best Investment.

IN THE columns of the Moving Picture World for several years past there have appeared again and again articles showing the responsibility of both the producers and the exhibitors of films for the making or the exhibiting of subjects that are of a questionable or vulgar type. Great progress has been made in the elimination of such films, and all the leading manufacturers have shown a worthy spirit of uplift that is being rewarded by a preference for their product by the lovers of photoplays everywhere.

These producers are really their own censors and leave no place for the exercise of censorship by anyone outside the business. There are still producers among us who prefer stories built on the sex problem and other morally unhealthy topics, just as there are exhibitors who seize on such subjects so that they may temporarily increase their box office receipts.

Has not experience shown again and again that the clean photoplay is the best investment both for the producer and the exhibitor? Its influence is lasting and it creates a reputation that is invaluable both for the producer and the exhibitor that shows it.

This is no transient business. Its irresistible advance and its remarkable progress within a few years has proved that. And, as in every other line of human activity, the fittest will survive. If producers and exhibitors do their whole duty, there can be no reasonable claim for the censorship of moving pictures.

The following timely editorial that recently appeared in the Chicago American, under the head "Moving Picture Men Must Use Sense," should be read and inwardly digested by every film manufacturer and exhibitor:

"Just a word to you moving picture manufacturers and exhibitors.

"There is always a prejudice against new things, and that prejudice exists among some people against moving pictures, just as it existed against bicycles and automobiles when they were new to the public. Unfairness and opposition, based upon this narrow prejudice, you moving picture operators cannot overcome. Time and custom will dissipate that. Objections and restrictions founded upon any improprieties in the moving pictures themselves can be overcome, and must be overcome, by an improvement in the product.

"If you permit any of your number to produce and exhibit questionable or vulgar films, you will increase the number of those who demand censorship.

"It rests entirely with you whether there shall be an increased demand for censorship and a legitimate basis for such a demand.

"The only sensible thing for you to do is to establish your own censorship and use all your power and business influence to prevent the production and exhibition of vulgar and questionable films.

"It is up to you, gentlemen, to show your gratitude as well as your business sense by keeping the little picture theaters as clean as a new sheet of white paper."

Chicago Strike of Express Companies' Drivers.

The distribution of films in Chicago and in the territory dependent on it has been very seriously hampered for over a week, at the time of writing, by a strike of express companies' drivers in this city.

A complete tie-up of the shipments and the deliveries of films by express has created untold hardship for both exchanges and exhibitors. Among the latter those in the country, who do their booking in this city, have suffered most, while those in the city, in many cases, have had their programs disrupted because the films from the country did not arrive.

Exchanges have used all efforts to help out their customers—many of them attempting to deliver films to out-of-town points by automobile; but the relief by such means has been wholly inadequate. Outside exhibitors have, therefore, been able to secure their films only by coming into town for them, and loading them in trunks. They have returned the films in the same way.

The strikers have used violence and intimidation, and frequent clashes have taken place between them and the police. The express companies have moved a few wagons, and it is said that the police now have control; but every receiving depot in the city is piled high with undelivered goods and many perishable articles have been ruined.

The drivers have no grievance on the score of wages, their chief demands being recognition as members of the union and that eight hours shall be considered a day's work.

The city press has been mum on the strike, which happens at a most inopportune time, as the National Republican Convention is upon us, and the good name of the city as a great convention center is at stake.

W. J. Patterson, general manager of the Motion Picture-Scope Company, 565 West Washington street, this city, reports that he had an inquiry recently from the British trenches in Flanders concerning the Portoscope machine. A Canadian soldier, writing from the Belgian battlefield, stated that he had seen the company's Portoscope advertised in the Moving Picture World, and requested full information regarding it. He showed that while off duty soldiers are entertained with moving pictures, and have time to read their favorite publications. The fact that the Moving Picture World is being read on the firing line in the great world war is an evidence not only of its popularity, but also of its far-reaching circulation. Evidently this Canadian soldier had been an exhibitor before joining the ranks, and he now relieves his mind of the horrors of war by turning to the pages of the World and familiarizing himself with the progress that is being made in the business.

Schuyler Colfax, of the Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y., made a brief stay in the city last week. He enjoyed his recent visit to Los Angeles hugely, and looks fit enough to take the place of Frank Gotch in his advertised "go" with Joe Stecher, the Fort Dodge wonder.

E. H. Montagu, European agent for the Selig Polyscope Company, in London, has advised the Chicago office that "The Ne'er-Do-Well" has become unusually popular in the British Isles, and that its presentation always crowds a theater. A most expensive line of publicity matter has been devoted to the big film drama, prominent among which are artistic and beautifully bound booklets giving the story of the photoplay and all the important scenes. On Friday afternoon, May 5, a private presentation was given at the Empire theater, Leicester Square, London.

I. Van Ronkle, manager of the Chicago branch office of the Bluebird Film Corporation, paid a flying trip to New York last week, where he made arrangements for an increase in his standing order. Business has increased so rapidly that the order for June far exceeds the standing order for April and May. Mr. Van Ronkle announces that he has signed contracts with the Ascher Brothers, this city, to show a Bluebird release in all the houses on that circuit, commencing Monday, May 29. The houses are the President, Oakland Square, Frolic, Lakeside, Calo, Cosmopolitan, Columbus and the Terminal.

F. A. Dempsey a popular young Chicagoan, well known in various circles here, was recently appointed traveling salesman for George Kleine, in northern Illinois, to represent "Gloria's Romance" and the Musty Suffer comedies.

Petey Wales, of Lanark, Ill., owner of a circuit of eighteen opera houses in the northern section of the state, paid us a visit one day last week. In addition to playing road shows on his circuit, Mr. Wales shows moving pictures in all his houses, and reported excellent business. He renewed his subscription for the Moving Picture World, and said that he swears by it.

Fred S. Meyer, manager of Universal's Minneapolis office, has placed me on his mailing list for Reel Ammunition, issued weekly, under his direction as editor-in-chief. The front page, in the issue of Monday, May 15, bears a facsimile of the check contributed by Universal to the recent exposition and convention at Minneapolis. The figures show the handsome sum of $500. The same issue, I notice, contains several brief letters from exhibitors showing their satisfaction with the pay-in-advance policy for film service. One exhibitor from Rush City, Minn., writes: "Find enclosed check to cover amount of service, in accordance with your new pay-in-advance policy, which I think is a good thing for each and every one of us." Another from the owner of the Star theater, Milton, N. Dak., states: "This new system of pay in advance for service is nothing but reasonable, and I am willing to pay in advance."

The following programs have been announced at the prominent downtown theaters in Chicago for the week beginning Sunday or Monday, May 28 and 29:

Studebaker—"Gloria's Romance," fourth chapter; "The Social Vortex" (George Kleine), and Tyrone Power and Lois Weber in "The Eye of God" (Bluebird). Beginning Monday, June 5, in addition to "Gloria's Romance," World features will be shown at this house, the Colonial-World program being taken over. The third chapter of "Gloria's Romance" was a fine drawing factor.

Fine Arts—Alfred Hamburger has retained the Vitagraph feature, "God's Country and the Woman," for another week. It made a great hit during its first week's run. Miss Charlotte Steindel's orchestra, which opened Saturday, May 20, has become quite popular with patrons. Miss Steindel is a talented director, and her musical adaptations for the pictures are much appreciated. "The Merry Whirl," by the Castles, which originally was announced to open at the Ziegfeld theater on Saturday, May 27, will open at the Fine Arts on Saturday, June 3, instead.

Colonial—Charlie Chaplin in "Police" (Essanay), and Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell in "His Brother's Wife" (World). This program will end the last week of moving pictures at this theater, as on Monday, June 5, it will again become a first-class dramatic house. "Treasure Island," adapted from Robert Louis Stevenson's romance, with the New York cast and production, will be the opening play.

Strand—Bessie Barriscale in "Sorrows of Love" (Kay-Bee), "A Trip to the Summit of Pike's Peak" (Mutual), and Bud Fisher's cartoons of Mutt and Jeff. Joseph Sheehan, the eminent operatic tenor, will be the soloist.

Orchestra Hall—Blanche Sweet in "The Thousand-Dollar Husband" (Paramount), and other pictures. Olive Kline, soprano soloist, fills out the bill.

Ziegfeld—Lillian Walker in "The Ordeal of Elizabeth" (Vitagraph), released through V-L-S-E, Inc., and other pictures.

La Salle—Fourth week of "The Little Girl Next Door" (Illinois vice film). Big business continues at this house.

Max Schwartz, manager of the Beach theater, presented "The Ne'er-Do-Well" to big business on Thursday and Friday, May 25 and 26. Special music was furnished by the Harper orchestra, under the direction of Paul S. Hirt. The Beach theater was the first, outside of the "Loop," to show the big Selig film in this city.

In the Municipal Court, Tuesday, May 23, Judge Stelk decided against Leslie Dudley Carter, son of Mrs. Leslie Carter-Payne, in his action to restrain Attorney Daniel Levy from executing an attachment for $6,075 on his mother's interest in the film, "Du Barry," produced by George Kleine in Italy. Mr. Carter testified that his mother had transferred her interest in the picture to him in consideration of a debt of $22,500 which she owed him. The court held that, as he had received her property, he could be held responsible for her debts. Attorney Levy levied the attachment for money he claimed to be due him for legal services rendered in representing Mrs. Carter in an action brought by her against George Kleine.

"The Little Girl Next Door" need not fear further interference from the City Council Judiciary Committee, as, by a vote of eight to seven, Alderman Buck's resolution directing Chief Healey to revoke the permit was placed on file. A score of clergymen, clubwomen and social workers testified to the "moral value" of the picture, and urged that restrictions be removed so that high school girls and boys might be permitted to see it. The Rev. M. P. Boynton, one of the first to favor the granting of a permit for the picture, said at the meeting of the committee: "There can be no just criticism of the film. I believe in turning the light on immoral conditions, and for that reason I believe the picture is doing good."

The Hon. Wm. Fenimore Cooper, a venerable judge of the Superior Court of Cook County, who has always proved himself a friend of the moving picture, is a candidate for re-election on June 5. Exhibitors in Chicago are supporting him strongly, and they should do so with willing hearts. It was through Judge Cooper's opinion that an injunction was issued prohibiting the City of Chicago from interfering with the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" in this city. I hope he will be elected, notwithstanding charges that are being brought against him. Slides in his support will be seen on many screens in the city preceding the election.

Early Monday morning, May 22, the Dearborn theater, Dearborn and Division streets, Chicago, was raided by safe-blowers, who exploded two safes, securing $1,000 and causing about $1,000 damage to the house. The thieves took everything else of value in sight, from the office clock to the cornetist's instrument.

The National Association of Garment Manufacturers, which met in session at the Hotel La Salle, Thursday, May 25, adopted resolutions protesting against the making and exhibiting of films "assuming to show life in American factories, which pictures are untruthful and unauthentic and do not in any way represent conditions as they are in real life." One incensed official of the association said at the meeting: "These pictures are made by a lot of actors who never saw the inside of a factory. They seem to think that to satisfy the picture public they must make of every factory scene a piece of brutality. The girls are knocked around and discharged and treated in a way no American working girl would stand." It was moved and ordered that copies of the resolutions be sent to all the leading film producers in the country.

Manager Kopple of the Calo theater, 5406 North Clark street, one of the houses on the Ascher Brothers circuit, invited a committee from the Mothers' Council of the Civic Club to tea on Tuesday afternoon, May 23, at the close of the afternoon show. A special program for children had been arranged for the afternoon by Manager Kopple, and all the ladies invited are particularly interested in the children's programs which are now a feature at the Calo.

On the Pathe "Rooster-Booster" night, May 16, arranged by H. C. Holah, manager of Pathe's Chicago branch, in honor of his friend, Dan Coleman, many exhibitors attended from Aurora, Elgin and Joliet, Ill., and from South Bend and Elkhart, Ind. A contingent also came from Milwaukee, and one of the members, during the Harry Hastings show at the Columbia, in which Mr. Coleman stars, presented Dan with a cut glass decanter surmounted by a sterling silver rooster top, bearing an inscription expressing the esteem of the Milwaukee Rooster-Boosters. A live rooster was also presented Mr. Coleman, over the footlights, by a Chicago man, and the incident created quite a sensation. Mr. Coleman, after the show, was the guest of honor at the North Star Inn. Manager Holah was heartily congratulated by all on the success of the party, as he was the real Booster of the whole affair, which was devised and financed by him personally.

Charles Ridell and Frank Wesley were held on Friday, May 26, to the Grand Jury for alleged operation of a confidence game. They are charged with conducting a fake school for moving picture operators, and had at one time charge of the Logan Square Business College. It is said that they have secured about $40,000 from prospective students.

Director Robert Leonard has completed the picturization of his own story, "Ambrosia," and is now filming "Little Eve Edgerton," a comedy drama in five reels, featuring Ella Hall and Leonard, with a strong supporting cast. This is one of the film plays so excellently suited to the little girl roles in which Miss Hall excels. It will be at least three weeks before the picture is completed.

JULIUS CAESAR PRODUCTION.

Forty Thousand See Actors' Fund Production of Shakespeare's Tragedy Re-Enacted by All-Star Cast in Open-Air.

LET US extend our thanks, and bestow full credit upon those who so tirelessly labored in staging the production; and who, united, made a wondrous magnet which attracted the dollars, and attention, of the world, that, in the evening of their lives, aged and feeble actors might be made bright and comfortable.

These mere men, who have become great, are the ones, and they are today rejoicing in the good they have done.

The force behind the cast was as remarkable as the famed men who portrayed the characters and spoke the immortal words of the great poet.

First credit goes unquestionably to Raymond Wells, who directed the production from the first breaking of ground for the mighty ampitheater, through tedious night rehearsals, and to the successful but bloody climax of the tragedy.

The cast was as follows: Julius Caesar, Theodore Roberts; Octavious Caesar, Charles Gunn; Marcus Antonius, William Farnum; Cicero, Hal Wilson; Publius, C. H. Geldert; Popilius Lena, Howard Foster; Marcus Brutus Tyrone Power; Cassius, Frank Keenan; Casca, DeWolf Hopper; Trebonius, Mark Fenton; Decius Brutus, Horace B Carpenter; Metellus Cimber, Cecil Lionel; Cinna, T. H. Gowland; Flavius, Wilbur Higby; Marullus, Gilmore Hammond; Artemidorus, Harry W. Schumm; A Soothsayer, Carl Stockdale; Cinna, poet, Seymour Hastings; Lucillus, Tully Marshall; Titinius, T. E. Duncan; Messala, T. D. Crittenden; Young Cato, Douglas Fairbanks; Lucius, Capitola Holmes; Varro, Nicholas A. Kessler; Pindarus, George Berrengere; Calpurnia, Constance Crawley; Portia, Sarah Truax; A Barbaric Dancer, Mae Murray; Cleopatra, Grace Lord; First Citizen, Arthur Maude; Second Citizen, Ernest Shield; Third Citizen, Robert Anderson; Fourth Citizen, Clara Turner; Fifth Citizen, Samuel Searle; Slave to Caesar, Ralph Benzies; Slave to Antony, Robert Lawler; High Priest, M. Luiz; High Priestess, Mrs. F. A. Dobinson; Son to Cleopatra, Francis Carpenter.

There are several thousand names which cannot be given. They are not even known, except to those who kept the books of the play. They are the "Extras," or those who took the parts of Centurions, Barbaric Dancers, Gladiators, Senators, Soldiers, Citizens and Foreign Pageantry. These are the ones who deserve credit for their work, their running, jumping, yelling, demonstrating, tumbling down the hillside to make the play realistic, and their work is highly appreciated by all who beheld.

Of course Wells could not be present everywhere at once, and he had an able corps of assistants who did their part in making the play a tremendous success. The list of assistant directors follows: Captain Louis R. Ball, Horace B. Carpenter, Ernest Shield, Wilbur Highby, Lionel O. Bradshaw, Carl Stockdale, T. E. Duncan, Mark Fenton, Ralph Benzies, T. D. Crittenden, Robert Anderson, Ray Cannon, Harry W. Schumm, Victor Goff, Gilmore Hammond, C. A. Homer, W. L. Brock, D. G. Wickland, W. E. Sears, B. E. Crowell, A. Allardt, N. A. Kessler, Jack O'Brien, Robert Lawler, H. L. Swisher, Clara Turner, W. H. Gardner, Jr., Mrs. L. R. Ball, F. Rose, Capitola Holmes, Marjorie Riley, Mrs. Robert Lawler.

The great stage, with its various large settings, was in darkness, and the crowd was in comparative darkness, when from the towering hillside a penetrating scarlet glow cast its color on the opposite Capitoline Hill, bathing the Temple of Jupiter in a rosy hue, and the act was on. Behind the great scenes Raymond Wells had started the players on the greatest production the world has ever known. Then followed the action of the story. The light, blazing in radiant and far-reaching rays from the back hill, bathed the different scenes in harmonizing and beautifully illusive shades and lights. The glare of mid-day changed instantly to the gory terribleness of battle and strife, while another scene showed the evening in blue tinted shades of impenetrable night. The garden of Brutus was a wonderful scene, and each of the conspirators was made more dark by the tinted shadows.

The speaking of the lines was interspersed with beautiful pageants. Two hundred girls in Roman costume entered after the populace was driven away. These remained while the vast army passed in review. Mark Antony and the senators were shown, after Caesar and Calpurnia had crossed the forum, at the side, in conference. The entry of Cleopatra and the Egyptian girls was a strikingly gorgeous scene. The garden of Brutus' home was a revelation, even to the end of the conspiracy when the rising sun cast its bright colors over the scene.

Even if a thousand people edged out from uncomfortably hard seats, those who remained through the fifteen minute interval before the last act, were repaid, for, after the whole stage had been cleared of its buildings, and the crash of falling timbers told of scenery being wrecked, all was quiet, and a distant imperative whistle was heard, the heavens burst into flame and the hills for seemingly miles around gleamed with flaring torches and the armies of Antony were seen tearing down toward the headquarters of Brutus and his followers. This sight caused many ejaculations from the onlookers, for it was greater than any Fourth of July pyrotechnical display. The glaring lights outlined the army, with its armored fighters, dashing down the hill, some afoot, some on horse. Once a rider fell with his mount, and disappeared into the yawning darkness of the canyon. When riders passed close to the lights their forms hesitated a second while directly in front, then as they rode on down, great grotesque shadows in the smoky flare were cast across the heavens.

Again when Cassius stood alone in the wide foreground, and as the army touched fire to the tents on the near hillside, the messenger ran to him and told of the advance, the lean and hungry Cassius caused his own death. The blazing tents were spectacularly realistic, and the words of Antony rung in our ears "Unloose the dogs of war." Then to the terrible ending of the play when Brutus does away with himself, the scenes were fast and furious.

The only curtain on this gigantic natural stage was a veil of shadow, which rose and fell between the acts of the tragedy. This great long shadow was raised by huge electric lanterns mounted on the hilltop behind the audience. It was lowered by the pulling of a switch which turned out the strong lights.

Not only did the setting outdo anything attempted before, but the rare collection of stars and stagefolk who participated, eclipsed anything even contemplated. Each was a star, and each star did his best, and his best was the best possible.

De Wolf Hopper, who makes smiles all the time, did the part of his career as Casca. His impersonation of this particular person was perfect.

It was easy to say forty thousand persons saw the show, but how do you suppose this little crowd reached the great theater? That is a side story and it deserves some mention. The canyon where the event was staged lies north of Hollywood, off the main street about a mile, and up the hilly landscape reached by a single boulevard. Two streets served as leaders to this one artery, and up these went automobiles four abreast and crowds overflowing the sidewalks. Early in the afternoon the walking classes, loaded with pillows, blankets and wraps, and with a goodly supply of lunch and drink, wended their way to the gates. They entered and spent the late afternoon exploring the great ampitheater and gradually selecting their seats. From five o'clock on the autoists started their trip from all points of the compass. The parking spaces were the barren hills and lot, and ere two hours had passed the congestion was terrible.

At this, most artistic production there was one deplorable mistake, perhaps through an oversight, but anyway it was terrible. At the entrance, was a space of about an acre before the amphitheater was reached, littered with "hot dog" merchants, pop corn stands, and program sellers. During the most important scenes, these hooters yelled their goods, and perhaps five thousand persons directly on the side near the entrance, had to suffer for the short sightedness of someone in the executive committee who had let this concession. It spoiled the whole show for many. But things like this are often likely to happen, and it is only to be deplored, and taken as a wise hint for the next production, and they plan to stage another next year.

Credit is due to Raymond Wells who came forward with his idea before the Hollywood Carnival Association, which annually "pulls off" a great affair. Wells said that they would derive more benefit by putting on a gigantic production of Julius Caesar and giving the money to the Actors' Fund. He made Charles A. Cooke, who acted as director general, see his idea. So did C. C. Craig, and others. Then they all "went to it" and they certainly "put it over." Today they are planning another event for June. The architects have ideas and drawings for plans of a mammoth theater to be built for permanent annual presentations as this one. The others who aided the committee include W. W. Campbell, who did the construction, bossing as well as organizing the musical aggregation and arranging the wonderful music. There were also a dozen others who did their share, and who guarantee to do it again when called upon. Frederick C. White, formerly a moving picture writer, managed the publicity for the event locally.

MUSHROOM MOVING PICTURE SCHEMES.

Clever Games Are Being Worked to Get "Partners" With Capital.

Los Angeles is a veritable hot-bed for mushroom picture producing companies, fake schools for acting, and other promoting schemes. Now according to the "Times" a number of questionable moving picture producing companies who are accused of obtaining money wrongfully by selling partnership interests to unwary persons are at the present time being quietly investigated by the local authorities. While several persons have lost money and apparently there is an element of fraud in the transactions, the method has been worked out with such infinite pains that all violation of the letter of the law is avoided.

Following is the system as explained by a victim whose name is withheld by the authorities:

A woman advertised for a partner in a small producing company. The man who answered the advertisement received the explanation from her that she was the owner of a valuable scenario and had a successful system for selling the completed film to a chain of moving-picture houses in small cities and towns in Southern California and Arizona. Her proposition seemed attractive and she explained how great fortunes were made in producing business, calling attention to some recent film successes.

The woman, who occupied an unpretentious office, explained that she had put all her capital into the enterprise and right at the moment when she was ready to achieve success found that she did not have quite enough money to produce the film and carry the business one more step to the place where it would begin to bring in financial returns.

The man paid $1,000 for a half interest and became the traveling representative of the firm. Shortly after he began his tour of the moving-picture houses in country towns, he was informed that his partner in Los Angeles had sold her interest to a stranger, and he was called in off the road. It turned out that the second person to buy an interest was not on the inside with the alleged ring and when the two partners met and reviewed the situation, they found that all they had was the manuscript of a moving-picture play, a high-sounding firm name and a small equity in the office furniture.

Both men had given up all their available capital for their interest in the mythical producing film and had no funds to carry on the business. During the first victim's short road trip he learned of the power of the great producing companies and saw that to compete with them was a losing game. The two partners who had been thrown together by adversity talked the situation over, concluded that they were a pair of "suckers" and gave up the office.

Before the partnership was dissolved, the men tried to find the woman, the former partner of each, but were unsuccessful. Later she was located in a new office, with a new firm name and the manuscript of another photo play. She was advertising for a partner.

The District Attorney's office investigated the case, but found that she had operated so carefully that there were no grounds upon which to issue a complaint unless further evidence of fraud is obtained. It is asserted, however, that the promoters will not be able to operate much longer before a way is found to stop them should they not heed the warnings which have been issued.

BOMBAY HAS ONLY SIX PICTURE HOUSES.

Great Opportunities in the Far East for Motion Picture Enterprises, Says Los Angeles Visitor.

Successful American promoters of motion picture industries may find wonderful opportunities in India, according to Jamsedjee L. Bhumgara, a Parsee, and a successful merchant and manufacturer of Bombay, who arrived in Los Angeles this week. Mr. Bhumgara will remain several days before leaving for New York and other eastern cities on a business trip.

Mr. Bhumgara says there are only six motion picture theaters in Bombay, a city with a population of more than 1,000,000. He states also that very few good photo plays from this country are produced in India.

"The relations between the people of my country and the United States are very friendly," said Mr. Bhumgara. "Following the war there ought to be a great trade development between India and America. We also are prepared to welcome some high-class motion picture companies in Bombay."

Little Mary Miles Minter accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Selby, arrived at Santa Barbara on Thursday last week, to begin her work at the studios of the American Film Manufacturing Company.

James Kirkwood, who directed Mary Pickford in many of her successes, is expected to direct Miss Minter in the company in which she will be starred.

Jack Livingston, Myrtle Stedman's new leading man of Morosco Photoplay Company, is heading a movement for the formation of a company of militia composed of motion picture actors. Mr. Livingston believes because of the fact that the majority of photoplayers have taken part in military plays in which they had to learn military tactics and the handling of machine guns and other arms, they would make excellent soldiers. Jack Livingston comes of a patriotic ancestry and is keen on the subject of "preparedness." His great grandfather, Phillip Livingston, was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, while Robert Livingston was a member of the commission that negotiated the purchase of Louisiana from France.

Myrtle Stedman, the Morosco film star, is announced as the feature of the concert to take place at Trinity Auditorium next Sunday. Miss Stedman is a mezzo soprano of unusual attainments.

Frank Lloyd will take Vivian Martin and a company of Pallas players to Bear Valley Wednesday this week to film some scenes in Miss Martin's new picture, entitled "Mountain Laurel."

The American Women's Film Company contemplate building a studio to be located at 1339 Gordon Street, Hollywood. J. Farrell MacDonald, the managing director, and Lloyd Whitlock, the technical director, stated that the plant would compare favorably with the best studios in this locality. Miss Lucretia Del Valle is the star of the new company.

Anna Pavlowa, the dancer who played with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company last fall, will make a trip to the coast about June 1st and spend her two months' vacation in Los Angeles. She will not appear in pictures, it is stated, but will spend her time in recreation and working out ideas for the ballet production she is to stage next year.

Motion pictures were taken one night this week of ice skating at the Bristol Cafe by a company of L-Ko players, to be used with scenes in a North Pole comedy being produced by the company. The gay after-theater crowd supping in the cafe was used as a background. Billie Armstrong, Dan Russell, Reggie Morris, Carmel Meyers and Gertrude Griffith were included in the cast.

The E. & R. Jungle Film Company at Eastlake Park wants scenarios featuring the two educated chimpanzees, "Nap and Sally." Twenty-five ($25) will be paid for a good idea and the company will not hesitate to pay $100 for a well-worked out story. It will not be an easy task to write a scenario; a careful study of the chimpanzees should be made before attempting to write the story.

Sir Beerbohm Tree's film version of Shakespeare's "Macbeth," produced by D. W. Griffith and directed by John Emerson, will have its premiere at the Majestic Theater following "Civilization."

The E. & R. Jungle Film Company has just completed a one-reel animal comedy called "Fowl Play." The cast includes Walter Rogers, Eva MacKenzie, Charles Carter and "Napoleon and Sally." J. J. Franz is the director.

The latest member of the E. & R. Jungle Film Company is Miss Annette De Foe. She came to Los Angeles recently from New Orleans where she played in stock. Her first appearance was in the E. & R. Jungle release last week entitled "Hitting the High Places," a funny farce with "Nap. and Sally," produced under the direction of J. J. Franz.

An unusual scene was filmed by the Kalem Company last week during the making of an installment for the "Hazard of Helen" series when Helen Gibson jumped from an aeroplane traveling at the rate of forty-five miles an hour to a freight train below. Aviator Christofferson, who had been engaged for these pictures, refused to take the chance of flying so low over the train and allowing the jump to be made at first approach, but Miss Gibson persuaded him that it would be easy. When the aeroplane swooped down over the train the aviator ran into a cross wire stretched from two telegraph poles which lined the track, almost wrecking his machine. Miss Gibson was then many feet from the height at which she was supposed to jump, but seeing the possibility of wrecking the aeroplane and not being able to fly lower, she jumped, landing on the side of the car below and falling to the sand beside the tracks. The impact of the machine against the wire broke it and pieces were brought to the studio as relics. The scenario was altered to continue the story from where Miss Gibson landed in the sand, as the aviator refused to make a retake.

Harry Millarde has just finished a joyous Kalem reel comedy featuring Ethel Teare, in which the fair Ethel is a police officer and wins the honor role class when she was sent out to arrest flirting males. Among those being brought in is Jack, who is already in love with the fair officer. They tarry long enough to marry before Ethel reports for duty at the Station House, where are sentenced several members of the Bachelor's Alliance Club who were held on the charge of flirting with an officer.

Victor Rottman, Jack MacDermott and Gus Leonard are among the bachelors in the cast.

William F. Russell and his company of American Players have spent the week past at Long Beach, where they made water scenes for a Mutual Masterpicture "The Man Who Would Not Die."

Shirlock Burton, Harry Keenan and Leonia Hutton are among the principals in the cast. Jack Prescott is co-directing with Mr. Russell.

Anna Luther, the Keystone Triangle star, has renounced comedy to return to straight dramatic work and has signed as lead with the Fox Company.

Richard Stanton will direct Miss Luther in her first picture, for the scenes of which Mr. Stanton will take his players to the Mojave desert.

Albert Russell took the Universal Company's Mason-Russell players to San Diego last week for the filming of water scenes of Billie Mason's comedy entitled "The Cannibal."

Little Mary Sunshine is back at the Balboa studio after a month's vacation in Colorado. She was the feature player in a recent Pathe Gold Rooster release bearing her name. Not four years old, the child played the lead like a veteran with Henry King opposite her. The little star will now have a company all her own at the Balboa studio under King's direction. D. F. Whitcomb will write the scenarios for little Mary.

Catherine Burke is the latest addition at the Balboa studios. Miss Burke recently arrived from New York where she has been working in pictures for some time. Her first picture will be in a Horkheimer production opposite Henry King.

On Wednesday this week after a day of work about the docks of San Francisco harbor, the Helen Holmes company under the direction of J. P. McGowan, left port for Honolulu, where they are to make exterior scenes in the production of a five reel story of the Kimberly Mines entitled "Diamond Runners." From the standpoint of production the Signal studios at present have the appearance of inactivity. In other ways, however, they are quite as busy as they have been, as the whole studio is undergoing a renovation, in many cases a reconstruction.

The street set which was used in the production of "Medicine Bend" is being torn down and in its place is being constructed a street set for the screen version of Alice McGowan's novel "Judith of the Cumberlands." In another part of the grounds a court house is being erected about which many of the important exterior scenes in the production are to be staged. Orin Denny, superintendent of the laboratories, is taking advantage of the company's absence to remodel the projection room. In the cutting room a number of labor saving devices have been installed, making for economy of time in cutting of film. On every hand preparations are being made to be in readiness for immediate local production as soon as the company returns.

Contributions Coming In Theater Managers Respond to the Appeal for the Actors' Fund.—Percentage Indicates Poor Business.

MARCUS LOEW, one of the largest theater owners and most successful exhibitors of motion pictures in the United States, has sent to J. Stuart Blackton, treasurer of the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund, a check for $350.60, representing the percentage of the gross receipts of thirteen of the principal Loew theaters in New York and vicinity on National Motion Picture Tribute Day. The total of $350.60 is made up of 5 per cent. of the receipts of nine of Mr. Loew's vaudeville theaters, and 10 per cent. of the receipts of four of his largest motion picture theaters on Monday, May 15. On this day Mr. Loew exhibited in five of his theaters the first run of the new Charley Chaplin film, "The Floorwalker," the greatest moving picture attraction from a money standpoint on the screen today. The theater from which Mr. Loew contributed a portion of his receipts on Tribute Day included Loew's theater, New Rochelle; Loew's National theater, Loew's Seventh Avenue theater, Loew's Orpheum theater, Loew's 86th Street theater, Loew's Lincoln Square theater, Loew's Greely Square theater, Loew's Bijou theater, Loew's Fulton theater, Loew's Royal theater, Loew's theater, Newark, N. J.; and Loew's Lyric theater, Hoboken, N. J.

Lewis H. Stone

SOLDIER, cowpuncher, big game hunter, sailor, actor—that is Lewis S. Stone, popular on stage and screen, who just finished his work in the leading role in Essanay's multiple reel feature, "According to the Code." Mr. Stone will be seen in this feature, released through the V-L-S-E, early in July. Mr. Stone will be remembered in a recent Essanay screen production, "The Havoc," in which he played one of three principals with Gladys Hanson and Bryant Washburn.

Lewis S. Stone.

Mr. Stone has had a career far more romantic than most of the parts he is called on to portray. Born in Worcester, Mass., in 1879, he was educated at Barnard College in New York City. When the Spanish war broke out he was with one of the first regiments to enter Cuba. He then shipped as a sailor before the mast to see the world. In his wanderings he tried cowpunching and acting for a medicine show. Later he took up acting seriously, and after a short experience with stock companies, jumped to leading man.

Marguerite Clayton plays opposite Mr. Stone in "According to the Code," while E. H. Calvert, who directed the piece, and Sydney Ainsworth play the other important roles. The play was written by Charles Michelson.

Ivy Close Goes to Jacksonville

"Most Beautiful Woman in the World," Now Kalem Star, Takes up New Duties in the Southern Studio.

READERS of the Moving Picture World know that in a contest to find the most beautiful woman in the world, Ivy Close, the famous English actress was the winner of the wreath. You also remember that the contest was sponsored by The Chicago Tribune and the London Daily Mirror and that the Kalem Company has brought her over to America on a substantial salary. She is now on her way to the Southern studio of the Kalem Company, in Jacksonville, but before she sailed she permitted the readers of the Moving Picture World to meet her, through one of its representatives, in the office of Vice-President William Wright of the Kalem Company. She is indeed a very charming young woman of the typical Anglo-Saxon type with hair like ripe wheat and eyes like the blue of forget-me-nots. Miss Close, in spite of her beauty, seems not to have been spoiled a particle. She is just as simple and sincere in her sentiments as a girl. There is no posing to make an impression and no affectation in her. She must be a great artist, for she has not a touch of the professional about her.

Miss Close sat beside Vice-President Wright's desk and the World man spent a half hour talking with her there. Of course we talked about the war and the changes that it has made in English life. She speaks with a restrained, pleasing vivacity; but in the intervals when the conversation lagged for a moment, one might notice that her eyes were looking into the far-away, and there was just that lessening of the sunlight as when a summer cloud passes. But the sunshine would flash back again.

Mr. Wright remarked that it took nine days for one of his cablegrams to get to its destination in England.

"Why," said Miss Close, "I sent a cable the other day and I got my answer the same day."

We suggested that the English government has taught English people a code to identify themselves and so knew that such messages are safe.

"I'll tell you what it was," she replied, "they got my accent, you know. It was my accent."

Mr. Wright said, "We'll have to have you send all our English telegrams."

"Oh, but I'm losing my accent every day, you know," she replied. "Your American ways are all so catching."

"Then you like America," we ventured.

"Indeed, I do—now; but I didn't at first. I didn't have a friend here at first; but I have lots now."

Miss Close had the misfortune of missing the ship she had intended to take and caught the next, so that no one expected her and she landed as one in a strange land. One of the first things she noticed was the pleasant feeling of the bright streets in the evening. London is as dark as a poke on account of "Zeps." There is no fear of "Zeps" here and there is freedom from many of the other cares of war, cares that get on one's nerves. Her friends on the other side are still bearing those cares and Miss Close does not forget their burdens, though free for the time herself.

This is Miss Close's first visit to America and she confesses to a slight feeling of strangeness that has not yet passed. "That is one of the reasons I am anxious to get at work before the camera," she says. "I enjoy screen work and put every bit of energy and thought that I possess to the task of pleasing the picture followers. There won't be any danger of homesickness then, for I won't have time to think of anything but my work."

DEVELOPING PARAMOUNT PUBLICITY.

The publicity department of the Paramount Pictures Corporation is putting out a series of features that are reaching the sections of Sunday newspapers beyond the confines of the regular moving picture pages. Interviews on Paramount topics with Frederick Palmer, the war correspondent; Henry Reuterdahl, the naval expert; Frieda Hempel and Mme. Gadski, stars of the Metropolitan Opera, are commanding full and half pages in the magazine sections of more than two hundred newspapers a week. This is in addition to the regular Paramount representation in the motion picture columns and pages. Edward Lyell Fox, who is directing Paramount publicity, states that a large newspaper syndicate has agreed to supply Paramount features to all its clients, regarding them as legitimate publicity, because, in each case, adjectives are restricted and the intrinsic value of the story is apparent.

"Who's Guilty?" Series Popular

Pathe Exchange Reports Unusual Demand for This Interesting Subject—Thinks Advance Booking Record Broken.

PATHE has just had the unusual experience of greatly increasing its order of positive copies on a picture three weeks after its initial release. Generally, it is found by a distributor that the original order of prints is larger than necessary, that the eye of desire has been bigger than the organ of digestion. But with the release on May 22d of the third photo-novel in the "Who's Guilty?" series, Pathe Exchange has had to instruct its Bound Brook laboratories to add seventeen copies to the standing weekly order of 100 prints on the "Who's Guilty?" pictures.

Two weeks before the release of the first of these photo-novels there was a conference between J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, and W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, which is producing the "Who's Guilty?" series. The decision was reached that 100 prints of each of the fourteen "Who's Guilty?" pictures would suffice thoroughly to cover the United States and Canada.

For once two expert film distributors did not go wrong in their estimates. Rather, they erred on the side of caution. For with the release of the first two of the "Who's Guilty?" photo novels, bookings increased to such an extent that almost every Pathe branch sent in an urgent telegram calling for at least one and sometimes as high as four additional prints, Boston added two to its quota, New York called for five additional copies, Chicago and Philadelphia for three more each.

So insistent was this demand that the prints originally destined for Canadian consumption were diverted to the Pacific Coast and a hurry order was placed in the laboratories for new Canadian copies. The increased orders mean a total of 476,000 feet of "Who's Guilty?" positive to be added to the already huge aggregate of 2,800,000 feet of positive film originally destined for the American and Canadian markets.

On May 17th, the advance bookings on "Who's Guilty?" crossed the $300,000 mark, establishing what is believed to be a new record in advance bookings with cash payments on the last four of the series. A week later these figures had climbed $68,000 higher, with thirty-two branches reporting, an average of slightly more than $2,000 a branch in increased bookings in seven days. When it is considered that advance bookings on series and serials usually fall off after the first picture is released, rather than that they should increase, this growth is deemed by Pathe to warrant the belief that "Who's Guilty?" will set the highest figure ever reached in two-reel distribution.

TRUE BOARDMAN AGAIN WITH KALEM.

True Boardman, one of the picture stars remembered since the pioneer days and more recently popular in the title role of Kalem's famous series, "Stingaree," is once more back under the Kalem banner. Boardman has already started to work before the camera at the Glendale, Cal., studios, and it will not be long before he is seen on the screen again.

The success of the "Stingaree" series, by E. W. Hornung, author of "Raffles," caused a firm of Western theatrical managers to make Boardman an unusually tempting offer to return to the speaking stage for a tour through the middle west and Coast states. After appearing in a few of the early "Social Pirates" episodes, Boardman yielded to the inducements and has now returned after a most profitable season. "I found the fame of 'Stingaree' the strongest advertising I have received in my career," he declares. "In many of the cities we played 'Stingaree' was still being exhibited, but we found it more advertising than opposition."

PEARCE NOW AUDITOR FOR SELZNICK.

Charles L. Pearce, auditor of the World Film Corporation, resigned last week to become auditor of the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises, Inc., the general business company of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation. Mr. Pearce, though a young man, is recognized as one of the most expert accountants in the film industry. He was a public accountant before entering the film business. He is now engaged in systematizing the home office and the various Selznick branches.

Plot of "The Fall of a Nation"

First Published Outline of the Dixon Drama of National Defense.

THE details which have been lacking concerning the story of "The Fall of a Nation" can now be supplied. June 6 is the opening date at the Liberty theater, New York, of the Thomas Dixon sequel to "The Birth of a Nation," and of Victor Herbert's original operatic score expressly composed for it.

The play proper opens in the New York mansion of Charles Waldron, who loves Virginia Holland, but whose big ambition is to establish the rule of Imperialism in America. Miss Holland is the leader of the Suffragist-Peace group. She comes into conflict with Congressman John Vassar. His bill providing for a large American army is defeated. In the course of their political encounters, the Congressman's heart is won by the many charms of Virginia. She refuses him because he is so decisively opposed to her principles.

In league with the Imperial Confederation of Northern Europe, Charles Waldron hatches the great treason. Twenty thousand subjects of foreign powers, resident in New York, rise in the night. They capture the city from the National Guard, its sole defenders. Patriots and refugees flee to Long Island, where an American army is hastily improvised. But in the meantime a powerful fleet convoying transports has brought 150,000 invaders equipped with Krupps and all the latest death-dealing devices. After effecting a landing they whip the Americans in a three-day battle. The nation falls. Washington, Philadelphia, Boston, next Chicago and St. Louis are occupied. Waldron puts on regal uniform and is hailed viceroy of the "provinces of North America."

Virginia Holland professes loyalty to the new regime. Waldron intrusts her with organizing the Imperial Legion of Honor among American women, indicating that her high reward will be the vicereine's seat at his side or possibly an empress's crown. While touring the country on this mission, the girl secretly enrolls the oath-bound order of the Daughters of Jael. She swears the flower of American womanhood—a million girls and women—to the destruction of the foreign usurpers. Those who cannot be won over by the women are marked for certain death.

In a night like the terrible Sicilian Vespers or the dread St. Bartholomew's Day, the Daughters of Jael and their male colleagues fall upon the reveling Imperial minions. The wireless stations are taken, the forts and arsenals captured, the ships boarded, and the fast-riding American cavalry tramples down and cuts to pieces the drunken foreign soldiers opposing them. "When the sun rose on the harbor of New York the Stars and Stripes flew from every ship and fort. An army of five hundred thousand men, half of them with the best rifles in their hands and big guns lumbering in their lines, were mobilizing under General Wood to capture Boston and Norfolk."

Waldron fell in the final melee. John Vassar claimed Virginia Holland, who had atoned for her Peace-at-any-price folly by defying death to restore the sacred Union of States.

In the cast are Arthur Shirley, Lorraine Huling, Percy Standing, C. E. Geldert, Philip Gastrock, Flora MacDonald, Leila Frost, Edna May Wilson, Paul Willis, Mildred Bracken, May Geraci, Beulah Burns and many others. "The Fall of a Nation" is a prologue and three acts, or twelve reels in film parlance. Bartley Cushing was the principal stage director. William C. Thompson and John W. Boyle photographed the great spectacle.

Bumping It Down to Bayshore

The Fourth Estate, on a Visit to Ralph Ince's Studio, Finds a New Sensation in Cross-Country Bus Riding.

IN ADDITION to the representatives of the American periodicals, there will be representatives of French, English, German, Scandinavian, Russian, Danish, Chinese and Indian papers dealing with motion picture affairs," so read one paragraph of the prospectus of the junket conducted by Louis J. Beck, on behalf of Ralph W. Ince—"Ince of the Atlantic," or to be more precise, Vitagraph Ince, of Bayshore, L. I.—on the morning, afternoon and EVENING of May twenty-fifth.

Again quoting from Mr. Beck's composition, now translated into so many tongues, it was "a most important occasion." For corroboration see the Reform News and Dun Hey Weekly, Jewish Daily Forward, Jewish Morning Journal, Italian Evening Bulletin, the Norwegian News, Courier Des Etats-Unis, or, if none of these publications are at hand, ask Jim Milligan, of The Billboard—he knows.

As the crow flies, Bayshore is some forty odd miles from Park Row, and as Jim Milligan might say, the crow always reminds one of a sight-seeing bus with unimpressionable tires, because it is so different. Jim is very strong on the reminiscent qualities of contrast; but weak on the technique of cross-country bus riding, as mastered by Harry Havens, who meets the bumps as an expert horseman meets the movements of his steed. For the benefit of less experienced travelers it may be well to note Mr. Havens' method. Placing both hands on the back of the seat in front of him and his feet squarely on the floor, he moves regularly up and down, thus avoiding half the bumps because half of the time he is in the air. Mr. Havens found the exercise so invigorating on the outward journey that he boarded the bus again for the trip home and rode blithely, far into the starry night.

With a fine regard for racial characteristics, Mr. Beck divided The Fourth Estate into two parts, those of a daring temperament being shown to a car that sometimes traveled ten miles an hour, the less reckless occupying another vehicle that steadily strengthened a rearguard position. The first halt was in the more or less picturesque suburb of East New York, where it was planned to connect with a train carrying a delinquent member of The Fourth Estate, according to reports an American.

The second stop was unpremeditated. Happy laborers had long since consumed their mid-day meal by the roadside. Mr. Havens was taking the bumps with methodical precision and others were shifting spasmodically in their seats, when far away on the crest of a hill there loomed a group of men and a motionless bus. A bearing had cracked under the strain.

Mr. Beck, fresh from a telephone conversation with Mr. Ince, explained the situation, touching lightly on a subject of constantly increasing importance. Twelve miles away "clam chowder was boiling over and spring chickens were burning to a crisp." Quickly the two bus loads became as one, the driver threw on high speed, and disregarding all warnings to slow down within town limits, maintained an even clip of fully eight miles an hour. In four hours flat, as the bus moves, if not as the crow flies, The Fourth Estate was moved from Park Row to Mr. Ince's studio.

Small, nicely appointed tables lined the sides of the room and at these tables the guests were served. Then there was music, vocal and instrumental, during the luncheon, and for subsequent entertainment, Mr. Ince's latest picture, "The Destroyers," was shown. Lucille Lee Stewart, the star of the production, assisted in welcoming The Fourth Estate. The 5.44 train to New York was unusually crowded.

FIFE PLAY FOR ANN PENNINGTON.

The play in which dainty Ann Pennington will make her debut as a Famous Players star was written by Shannon Fife, and has been selected by Famous Players as a story best suited to Miss Pennington's talent. In the Fife play the former star of the Ziegfeld Follies will have ample opportunity to demonstrate her versatility, being called upon to do everything from classic dancing to the more strenuous role of heroine in a big fire scene.

Light Breaking in South America

Native Experts Describe Situation and Point to Grand Opening for American Producers—How One American Called a Bluff—Interesting Facts and Figures.

By W. Stephen Bush.

WITH the erstwhile substantial profits from the European market dwindling away to nothing—"and the worst is yet to come"—the eyes of many American producers are turning toward the sister republics of Central and South America. Very slowly with halting steps and many a disturbing doubt the American exporter has within the last year come somewhat nearer to this market which in spite of appearances to the contrary is one of the most promising in the world. The tendency not only in the film industry but in other commercial fields as well has been to leave things entirely to the commission house and never go behind its returns. Now of course the broker or the commission house is quite contented with such a posture of affairs. The whole thing gets on the plane of least resistance and the spirit of enterprise and initiative and every trace of progressive and constructive work disappears. The film situation if anything is a good deal worse. From the view point of the American producer it is about as bad as it can be.

The Situation in a Nutshell.

Here is the situation in a nutshell: The film importing and renting business is in the hands of a few men. These men controlling a majority of the nineteen exchanges in South America impose their conditions upon the owners of the motion picture theaters. They themselves own quite a few theaters which in certain sections notably in Argentine makes their grip of affairs pretty well unbreakable for the present at any rate. We had our own monopolistic phases right here in the North but there is a very vital difference between the controlling group of producers that dominated the market here in 1909 and the monopolists of South America. You may say that the industry up here had then fallen under a despotism but you will fail to size up things properly if you do not add that it was a benevolent despotism; yes benevolent and intelligent too. The monopoly in the great country to the South of us is neither benevolent nor intelligent. It is wasteful, destructive, reactionary. It exploits the market ruthlessly just for the profit of today and with no thought of tomorrow. Of course a condition like that breeds cheap films. South America has long been known hereabouts as the dumping ground for the cheapest product. It has been and still is the home of the aged film. Why should the combine bother about quality when they are able to foist the cheapest stuff on the public and the exhibitor?

Why They Prefer the Cheap Stuff.

Why, indeed? A couple of years ago I was talking to an exhibitor in a large town over in Jersey when a booknig agent appeared and offered him a well-known classic film at a very reasonable price. The booking agent talked a good deal as men of his kind will and often must but the exhibitor had no answer for him. Finally he took him into the lobby showed him the waiting crowds all pushing toward the box office and then said smilingly: "Why should I show them any thing better as long as this junk gets the money." The man reaped a short harvest, but today his theater is no more and two blocks from his former field of activities is a new modern theater using the best pictures obtainable and doing a wonderful business.

Notice the perfect parallel to conditions in the South-American market today. The renter and importer buying the cheapest stuff obtainable and getting the money for it while his patrons never see a first-class American-made picture. Not that they do not pay enough of an admission. In Buenos Aires and indeed in the whole Argentine Republic the price of admission averages about 20 cents in American money. Not a bad margin of profit. In the rest of South America the average price of admission is only a trifle below that figure. In Central America and the West Indies conditions are just about the same, though Cuba begins to take to American films as it learns more about them.

Calling a Latin Bluff.

It has been the custom of brokers buying for the South American market to decry American-made films, to feed fat the anti-Yankee prejudice in those countries, to say that conditions in the South American film market were abominably bad, that there was room only for junk and that any American trying to break into the market would only succeed in breaking himself. This story has been peddled around New York for years and many of our producers are tempted to believe it. Many, but not all. I happened to be present at a very interesting interview betwen a buyer for South America and the representative of one of the foremost if not the foremost producing company in this country. Our broker began the ancient Jeremiad about fearful conditons in the South American market. He was anxious to buy at six or seven cents the cream of this company's production. He was quite fluent and plausible but presently he was interrupted by the American who said in blunt fashion:

"Do you know we are tired having you folks come up here and tell us how rotten your market is. It just happens that we know to the last dollar the money your company (the great monopoly) made last year. We have had our own man down there to examine conditions. We find the people of South America are the best patrons of motion pictures of any in the world, we find that they have money and are willing to spend it, we find that they appreciate quality whenever they are allowed to get a glimpse of it. I tell you that we are going into this market with a vengeance and we are going to exploit it according to our own plans. I may add for your further enlightenment that we are reasonably sure to get more than six or seven cents a foot for our films with the most generous allowance for overhead expenses." The broker was dumbfounded. The American asked him to make application for a job whenever the big invasion was started. "We'll be able to pay you a good salary," he added with a most ingratiating smile.

Natives Are Ready for Best Quality.

Now, here is the only practical attitude for the American producer who wants to go into the market and get his share. The most pleasing and not the least encouraging feature in connection with the problem is the help he will receive from the natives. Almost all the exhibitors and some of the smaller exchanges now held down by the monopoly will welcome him. He need not worry about introductions. The natives are waiting for him with the exception of course of the men who now enjoy such a delightful monopoly. Our own Cine-Mundial, the growing Spanish edition of The Moving Picture World, furnishes plenty of evidence to this effect. It has become the rallying point of the independent and the uncontrolled exchanges and of many exhibitors who are in search of quality. This means that "Cine-Mundial" is blazing the way, as it was intended it should, and that it is fulfilling its mission as the herald of the American producer in Central and South America. Only recently a film expert and exchange man from Buenos Aires called at the offices of Cine-Mundial and spoke with wonder and admiration of American-made films. He has now spent something like three months in this country studying conditions.

Best American Films Unknown.

"Your best films are never seen in South America," he said. All the films you now import into South America do not constitute fifteen per cent. The trashiest sort of stuff is the stuff that represents the American film in Buenos Aires and everywhere else in South America. As things stand today an exhibitor will not dare to advertise American films. It would queer him with his patrons. What we see of your films today is sickly sentimental stuff, infantile and imbecile and some Wild West films.

Going into the facts and figures our informant said: "In Buenos Aires alone we have 250 motion picture theaters many of them the equal of the best you have here. I do not count the 'cinemas' run in cafes. Many more are in progress of erection. There is not a village in the whole Republic which does not have its moving picture house. The monthly renting business done in Argentine amounts today to very near $200,000 in American money. In Argentine we have not only daily changes but we often change our programs on the same day. A show rarely consists of more than three reels. Our unit is half a reel and it is no unusual thing to see a five reel feature broken up into ten parts and to show five parts at one performance and then charge another price of admision for the second instalment. Though practiced to some extent in other parts of South America, this method of showmanship prevails principally in the Argentine Republic.

"The daily change is the order of the day in Buenos Aires and the other big cities in Argentine, though of course there are exceptions. In Brazil matters are somewhat different. There daily changes are almost unknown, the program is changed weekly or twice and three times a week. Brazil exacts a somewhat heavy duty on films. It is regulated by weight and amounts on positives to more than five dollars a kilo, a kilo containing 420 feet of film. The total expense for importing say seven kilos is about $13.70. This of course includes freight charges, storage, etc. The tariff is about the same for other South American countries. The monthly import of film into South America calculated on last year's statistics is as follows:

	Metres
Argentine Republic	190,000
Republic of Brazil	170,000
Republic of Chile (deducting the amount of film brought in direct from Argentina, Peru and Bolivia)	30,000
Republics of Peru and Bolivia	100,000
Republic of Uruguay (nothing is imported, as all film comes in direct from Argentina, almost exclusively)
Total amount of material imported from Europe and the United States	490,000

More Facts and Figures.

"There is indeed a splendid future for the American producer in Brazil. Rental prices are very high, offsetting the high duty. The motion picture centre in Brazil is the city of Sao Paolo. The renting business in Brazil amounts to $150,000 per month in American money. Chile has bravely gotten over her recent financial difficulties and it is a great patron of the motion picture. The film centre is Lima in Peru and Buenos Aires, these cities supplying Chile, which imports but little film directly. In Chile itself Santiago is the great film centre. Motion picture houses though numerous enough are not equipped in the luxurious fashion which is found in other parts of South America. The taste of the Chileans is still somewhat crude but with better pictures a better taste no doubt will be developed and a market found for the best quality. It is difficult to form a correct estimate of the rental business in Chile, there are some small distributors in Antofagasta, Concepcion, Valparaiso and Punta Arenas whose busines cannot easily be calculated. I believe however that $50,000 monthly is about right. In Peru and Bolivia the motion picture is making rapid strides and the monthly rental business amounts to about $50,000 in American money. Nowhere however has the popularity of the motion picture been more marked than in Uruguay. In Montevideo alone there are seventy motion picture theaters, the great majority of them of very high class. Splendid motion picture houses are likewise found in Minas, St. Jose, Duranzo, Salto and Paisandu. Uruguay gets its film supply directly from Buenos Aires. The laws of the trade marks and registration which in some of the South Americas are rather hard on foreigners are much more just and equitable in Uruguay." Our South American film man concluded his observations with this significant remark: "The better class of American motion pictures can be introduced into the South American market with very little difficulty and it is a strange thing to me that this fact has escaped observation up here." He spoke in the highest terms of Cine-Mundial.

A Good Word for "Cine-Mundial."

"You are doing great things for the American quality film," he said. "The light is beginning to dawn. Keep up the good work. Yours is a publication which ought to have the heartiest support of every American producer who wants to get into a market whose possibilities up to now seem not to have been realized. I have spoken with many of your producers and have marveled at their ignorance as to South America. Few of them know just what they are selling to South America. I tell you it will pay them to wake up and get busy."

LOUIS GREEN MANAGING BUFFALO EXCHANGE.

Louis Green, formerly road man for the World Film Corporation, and one of the most popular men up-state, is now manager of the Exclusive Features, Inc., Buffalo office. Green states that he will keep open house for all his friend exhibitors, and invites them to call on him when in Buffalo and use his office as their headquarters. He has signed up some of the leading theaters for "The Unwritten Law," the seven-part dramatization, featuring Beatriz Michelena.

HARRISH INGRAHAM WITH HORSLEY.

Harrish Ingraham, prominent in the film world as an actor and director for the past five years, has been engaged at the David Horsley studios and will be seen in an important part in support of the co-stars, Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, in a forthcoming two-reel Centaur drama.

AUSTRALIAN NOTES

THE two big firms of Waddington's, Ltd., and J. C. Williamson Films have amalgamated. The latter only recently reopened their old Sydney playhouse, the Theater Royal, as a photoplay theater, while Waddington's control a chain of picture theaters in Sydney and suburbs.

The Williamson submarine pictures finish their short season this week at the Palace Theater, which will then revert again to the spoken drama. These pictures have attracted large crowds during their fortnight's screening.

When the Triangle films were first screened in America a long program of four pictures was first given a trial, but this was soon changed to the ordinary length of a five-part drama and a two-part comedy.

In Sydney, however, just the opposite has occurred. For the first three weeks the programs at the Triangle Playhouse consisted of seven reels, which ran for a week, and as the pictures were becoming very popular, Australian Films decided to give their patrons an extra treat. So now the Triangle Playhouse opens at 11 a. m. and runs "continuous" with a seven-reel program until 6.30. Then an hour later the evening performance starts. This is composed of a Fine Arts feature, an Ince-Kay Bee attraction, one of which is a comedy-drama, while comedy relief is given in a Keystone. This, with a news gazette, gives an entertainment of three hours, and is the largest picture program ever offered to Sydney picturegoers.

All the programs under the new idea will run for a week, which is now the standard for features in Sydney.

This week's Triangle attractions are: "Between Men," a splendid Kay-Bee photoplay, one of the best yet from this studio; "The Lamb," with Douglas Fairbanks, a Fine Arts comedy-drama; "Dizzy Heights and Daring Hearts," a Keystone.

The initial attempt by an Australian company to film a successful play with the original cast was made by J. C. Williamson, Ltd., during the tour of Muriel Starr through Australia about eight months ago.

The subject chosen was "Within the Law," and the picture, produced under the direction of Monte Luke, is a success.

The story is easily adaptable for screen purposes, and though the scenario writer has left out many fine situations, the whole is well done. Muriel Starr has a good range of expression, which is seen to advantage. She is supported by Sydney Stirling, George Bryant, Boyd Irwin and Theodore Boase.

The picture, which is four reels in length, was released last week.

Since the arrival of Triangle and Fox films, with their higher prices of admission, the various newspapers seem to be waking up to the fact that there is a great future in the moving picture industry.

The Theater Magazine is the latest to announce that five pages will be given to the pictures each issue. These will contain picture reviews for exhibitors and film exchange news and will also contain information for the picture-going public.

Roscoe Arbuckle may be interested to know that he was drowned while swimming on the River Thames last month. At least the editor of the Australian Bystander says so, and concludes with an article on Roscoe's life, deploring the loss to the public.

(Perhaps the editor of the above paper was under the impresion that Roscoe was swimming the Atlantic.)

Features showing in Sydney this week include: "The Straight Road," an old Famous Players production, featuring Gladys Hanson; "A Yellow Streak," one of the best Metro features yet; "Samson," a fine Fox feature with William Farnum. This player is attaining great popularity in this country. "The Moonstone" (World), "The Salamander" (Moss), "Just Out of College" (Frohman), and "The Innocence of Ruth" (Edison).

Spokes From the Hub

By Marion Howard.

WE HAVE had a Barrymore week in good earnest with Ethel in the play, "Our Mrs. McChesney," also in the films in "The Kiss of Hate"; John at three theaters in "The Red Widow" and in an earlier release, "The Dictator," and Lionel at the Bijou in "A Yellow Streak," the respective theaters playing to capacity houses. Then we have Sidney Drew, their relative, at the Park and Fenway in new Metro releases supported by his clever wife and a capable company, in which Miss Franek—our old friend, the spy of "The Battle Cry of Peace," does some splendid comedy work as a servant, particularly in a recent scream, "The Model's Cook." Whoever gave it that title was mighty bright, since the play treated of a model and a cook, who was not a model one by any means.

Miss Ethel Cunningham, formerly of the Hub, going from here to tour in "The Lion and the Mouse" and from the road to the Vitagraph studios, is the latest to enroll in the Film Club here. She writes me that she has signed to appear in the "Scarlet Runner" series and will play the hag under the direction of Wally Van. Miss Cunningham was in "The Battle Cry of Peace," and when in Marion Ohio, in April made a personal appearance at the theater and scored a success in a little speech which, by request, she gave nightly during the run. She has written some scenarios of late, one being considered by a man high up.

"The Kiss of Hate," put on at the Boston and Exeter, did not furnish much cheerfulness, being inspired by hatred all through, and persecution of a helpless race, but it had atmosphere to burn, and there was not a flaw in the acting. H. Cooper Cliffe in a part calling for no sympathy whatever easily carried off the honors. There was too much rampant murder stuff and torture business, which we do not want shown up. It does not go over well, despite the brave efforts of the players. It is the most gruesome of the Metro offerings thus far and has no mission save to show the skill of the producers and the art of acting.

Another piece of good work by "Hart of the Plains" in "The Disciple," seen by me for the first time recently, though released last October. Friends out west recommended it, and so I went out of town for the pleasure. It is old to readers, maybe, but have you seen W. S. Hart do anything better? I wish Bret Harte, the author of the book, could have seen this interpretation of the preacher who went wrong and then found his soul in time to save another's.

Do you expect me to enthuse over "The Dumb Girl of Portici"? Well, so far as little Pavlowa goes all is well, but it could be cut to three reels with profit all round, as the mob scenes are too long, too often repeated, too wild-eyed—but don't they earn their money—the players! So much has been written and so well on the merits that it may seem rank heresy to offer a criticism, but why introduce dancing on clouds as a finale? Many thought it great and applauded, so there you are! To a case hardened theater goer, little Eva's ascent to Heaven is recalled, only in this case minus wings. The dancing was really fine all through, even on the sandy beach, and crowded houses were the rule owing to the personal popularity of the star in the Hub. The Universals are to be congratulated on the great work in producing so elaborate a spectacle.

"The Come-Back" seems an excellent play to introduce Harold Lockwood and dainty May Allison, as new members of the Metro family. It was put on at Keith's Boston theater to seating capacity. While the theme is quite old, the story is well worked out, particularly in the "Way Down East" scenes, with the ever present snow abounding there in season. A very proper person sitting near said she had never seen that nice young man drinking before in any play, and she had been led to believe that he was not a drinking man. I told her that Harold would not get tipsy on that stuff which cheers but not inebriates. It was new to see him in such a lively cabaret scene and placing a necklace round the throat of a naughty girl. We were glad he cut it out and made for the woods to work out his salvation, and incidentally find the girl worth while. It had a good ending, too, with a splendid close up of the pair. The fisticuff affairs brought down the house, and it was some fight—minus deadly weapons, too! George Henry made much of the stern father. The photography was up to Metro standard, and that's saying much.

On same bill was Charles Chaplin in "The Floor Walker," cleverly staged, with the escalator always in action. This was the one thing to cause genuine laughter—not hysteria, the antics being vastly amusing. Apart from that there was the usual slapstick inflictions and much vulgarity like emphasizing certain portions of the anatomy for physical attacks. This is not comedy (perish the thought), but an appeal to—Heaven knows what! After all, we do not have to endure it.

"The Red Widow" in the pictures gives fine opportunity for vivid action not obtainable in the speaking version. We were glad to see Flora Zabelle in the part she created for the stage, as the Hub did not have her. If I mistake not Sophye Barnard did it here. It was also good to see how well she filmed in this picture, for when seen last she was a disappointment, for some unknown cause. John Barrymore's mannerisms fit well, but he is not a Hitchcock by any means. The titles were amusing and caused many a laugh, but to me the wedding scene was about the funniest of all, with the organist playing by mistake "Good Bye Girls, I'm Through," instead of the customary march by one Wagner. Jack Daniels' series seem to please the house and cause wholesome laughter and they never quite reach vulgarity.

Gustave Frohman is making a bid for patronage of the high class photoplays which young folks can enjoy, so he put on for the first try at the Copley theater (which he has leased) "The Fairy and the Waif." Here we have Mary Miles Minter making her first bow as a picture star. Remember Lillian Russells' Wildfire—the speaking play? Remember the little stable boy and his slide down the pole, and his merriment all through? Well, this boy—Will Archie by name—plays the part of a nice little fat brother in a large family. He is tremendously clever, and the boy who plays the waif will be a big star some day. Preceding the five reels we were shown some wonderful bird pictures, a delight to all and so educational for the youngsters. The white heron, with its lovely aigrettes blowing out in the strong wind in their marvellous beauty—God's handiwork—proved the value of the Audubons' plea to leave them where they belong. Fortunately there is a law, in this state, at least, forbidding the sale or wear of these feathers, plucked from the young birds when alive. All such reels are doing a vast amount of good and the kiddies like them and remember the lessons taught in them. We are indebted to the Hearst-Vitagraph for these and many more worth while.

"Maria Rosa," with Jerry Farrar and that admirable pair, Wallace Reid and Pedro de Cordoba, went well and 'most everyone I've heard discuss it seem to feel that this is the best yet for the star. The little play was first put on here at Mrs. Gale's Toy theater by amateurs, with Mr. and Mrs. Roger Noble Burnham (Eleanor Waring) playing opposite and it attracted widespread attention, with the result that playgoers in all the large cities had the pleasure of seeing it with Lou Tellegen in his first English speaking part. The atmosphere, distinctly Spanish, is a compelling feature, but the photography was what stood out as a big feature. What a trio of players we have here and how well balanced is the company, including Ernest Joy, so dependable! The Laskys have a good seller and the picture will never grow old. It will be re-issued years after the modern dramas (filmed) will be out of style, as to costumes anyhow. Even now we can tell by the hobble skirts of last year that the reel is out of date, and don't some of them look queer! That is why the costume plays and those pictured in foreign lands will ever hold their own.

George Baldson, manager of the New England branch of the V-L-S-E, has invited the Film Club to a private view of new reels, at the studio, 67 Church street, on the evening of June 8th. Gustave Frohman has offered to give the use of the Copley theater ballroom the coming season for the Sunday evening meetings of the club.

Burton Holmes is certainly giving some fine educational, or travel films rather, taking us into the very heart of the Philippines and close to the life of the natives of different classes. The industries are shown, like that of hemp manufacture, seventeen million dollars' worth being exported annually. In a reel about Central America I noticed a portrait of Lincoln. Another, a Vitagraph reel, to get a hand presented our navy in various evolutions, and the first picture shown was Admiral Dewey, and on the very anniversary of the Battle of Manila Bay. They are excellent as fillers between long reels in any theater.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

LIBERTY THEATER, SAN JOSE, CALIF.

Careful Study of Conditions Is Nucleus of Success of This Photoplay House—Seats 1,067 and Managed by James Beatty.

THE Liberty Theater, located on Market street, San Jose, Calif., is one of the leading houses in the Garden City, as the metropolis of the beautiful Santa Clara Valley is widely known. It is conducted by the Liberty Amusement Company, under the direct management of James Beatty, and has been a success from the date of opening, about a year and a half ago. The location is near the heart of the city and is easily reached from local and suburban electric lines, of which there are a number tapping the rich outlying districts. When this amusement company entered the field San Jose was already fairly well supplied with moving picture houses, and it was realized that to make a success of the venture offerings would have to be of the highest grade, the theater would have to be the acme of comfort and the management above reproach. That these conditions have been met, and even surpassed, is indicated by the wonderful success of the house and the position it now occupies in the community. The showing that has been made in such a brief space of time is remarkable, especially when it is considered that previous to the opening of the theater Mr. Beatty, the manager, had always been engaged in other lines of business and the amusement field was absolutely new to him.

In speaking of the success that had been met with by the house Mr. Beatty recently said: "The success attained by the Liberty Theater I believe to be due largely to the policy adopted in the beginning of showing only the best, of advertising heavily and thus informing people of what you have to offer and of maintaining a uniform schedule of prices. Many theater managers have been compelled to learn these lessons through bitter experience, but I was unusually fortunate in this respect and had the advice of one of the leading exhibitors of the country. The advice and clear judgment of Eugene Roth, manager of the Portola Theater of San Francisco, has been of wonderful assistance to me in every branch of the business from the selection of films to advertising them and managing the house. Without this assistance the success of the house could not have been so immediate nor of such rapid growth."

The Liberty Theater occupies a lot of irregular size, running through to San Pedro street, with a depth of 192 feet. The frontage on Market street is 42 feet and this width is maintained for 75 feet, when it widens to 60 feet. The ticket booth is located in the center of the lobby, just inside the sidewalk line, and a little farther on is a candy booth, making the entrance way appear shorter than it really is. The foyer is attractively furnished with mirrors, pictures and a thick carpet on the floor, the whole giving an air of California hospitality, which is a feature of the place frequently commented upon by strangers. One is tempted to linger here for a moment, and this is exactly the effect intended, for it serves to accustom the visitor to the subdued light in the theater. From the foyer a broad stairway leads to the balcony, rest rooms, the office of the amusement company, and the operating room. Most of the seats in the theater, however, which accommodates 1,067 persons, are on the lower floor. A large space has been reserved upstairs for a children's nursery, but this has never been fitted up, the demand for such an innovation having not been as marked as was thought probable.

The heating and ventilating systems installed in the house are very satisfactory, the mechanical equipment being installed in the basement constructed beneath the stage. The operating room is splendidly equipped and is located in the balcony adjoining the office. Here are installed two late model Motiographs, purchased new this spring, a stereopticon outfit, and a film cleaner. All films are cleaned both before and after using and are delivered to the exchanges in perfect condition. A motor-generator set completes the equipment and in an adjoining room there is a well equipped workshop where minor repairs are made.

This theater represents an investment of about $100,000, but the building in which it is located is not a new one. Its unusually heavy construction made it particularly adaptable for theater purposes and the change was quite easily made. So well were the plans drawn and so skillfully was the building re-constructed that it is difficult to believe that the entire structure was not built for the use to which it is now placed. A full stage has been provided, but it is improbable that it will ever be used for anything other than moving pictures.

Three changes of program are made each week, Fox and Triangle productions being prominently featured. During the first year business was about the same each month, the variation being but slight, with an average attendance of more than fifty thousand people a month. Of late there has been an increase and the management has been investigating the possibility of increasing the seating capacity. The admission price is 10 cents for adults and 5 cents for children.

GREENBERG ENLARGING HIS GRAND.

Abe Greenberg, owner and manager of the Grand theater, Broadway, Camden, N. J., has recently purchased the property of Charles Foulon at 205 Broadway. Plans are now being prepared to rebuild the Grand and to make it about twice its present size. Nothing but the latest equipment will be used in the new structure, and the comfort and convenience of patrons will be given first consideration. The new Grand will have a balcony. The dimensions of the new structure are 62 by 125 feet, and the auditorium will have a seating capacity of 1,600 persons.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Splitting.

HERE'S the last group photograph of Ralph Ruffner and Ray Bagley that we shall probably have (we only had one other). It shows Bagley turning over to Ruffner the key to the advertising department of the Liberty theater, Spokane, Washington, before departing for the Liberty, Long Beach, Cal. It looked as though Ruffner and Bagley would be permanent, but Bagley's old boss decided to start in California and Ruffner says a lot when he calls him "The cleverest kid in the game." Being a big man, Ruffner is not sore merely because his former side partner is going away. He still knows he is clever, but now he has got to hustle by himself and for a starter he writes:

> A little stunt that doesn't amount to much but which undoubtedly put some sunshine into some poor lives is represented by the attached. We had the Triangle release, "The Habit of Happiness," with Douglas Fairbanks on the boards, and the sermon preached therein gave me the cue to adopt the idea—of trying to bring a bit of happiness and laughter into the lives of the unemployed and the down-and-outers. We polled 68 clippings yesterday and I know there are several in today. It would have done your heart good to see some of the old characters dig up a Smile at the door when they handed our doorman the clipping, and once inside and comfortably seated, the smiles couldn't have possibly slipped off. It is just a case of practicing what you preach.

The clipping reads:

> ARE YOU HAPPY?
> Douglas Fairbanks preached happiness; he taught people to laugh; he went among the unemployed and placed smiles where formerly dwelt a grouch. It would be mighty fine if there were more people like him. Now, let every unemployed man or woman who reads this present ad and a smile at our door today or tomorrow and "Doug" Fairbanks will help us make you forget your troubles. "THE HABIT OF HAPPINESS" can be acquired and it can be seen at THE LIBERTY THEATER. Come on. We'll make you laugh and we'll make you glad and it won't cost you a red cent. Ralph Ruffner, manager Liberty theater.

And do you suppose that this was run as a press story or as half page display? It was NOT. It was run in the help wanted where only those might see it who were looking for jobs. The reading stories came later, but the "plant" was straight and it was put where it would do good. That is the way to get a story that will mean more and be more than you ever could coax out of a city editor with a poor cigar and a lament that the state has gone dry. Maybe you want no "bums" in your theater, but we do not believe that Ruffner got any, either, and we do know that he has cheered a lot of heartsick men. It's good advertising, the finest sort of advertising.

It Would Help.

The Calhoun theater, Minneapolis, gets out a very pretty program, a brown stock printed in deeper brown, but it does not date its days, though there are inches of room. We think it would pay. The house is in line with the Children's Matinee movement and is working it nicely.

May Change Again.

Having done about as well as can be with his present form of program, Walter H. Brooks, of the Auditorium, Coatesville, Pa., contemplates changing to an eight pager. As a sample he sends in a four pager for his Children's Matinees. Here he has hit upon a nice arrangement. At the top is a two line notice of the subject, not florid but something attractive and yet conservative. Then comes the title and a short synopsis and then the line "Saturday morning, May 13th. At ten o'clock sharp." No making any mistake about the date or time here. Mr. Brooks does not act in the least in accordance with the popular conception of a Y. M. C. A. theater man. He is a real manager. And for his kiddie matinees he does not load his program down with a lot of educational stuff. He starts them off with fairy stories: "Rumpelstiltskin" and "The Patchwork Girl of Oz." The rest will probably creep in later, but he does not spoil it right at the start by telling the kiddies what a nice, educational and instructive time they are going to have. And to broaden the interest the proceeds will be given the senior class of the Coatesville High School. They sell the tickets, and as it means a trip to Washington for them it is probable that they sold them in bunches.

Go to It!

A fair exchange is no robbery. With "Bill" Hearst breaking into the picture game Bill ("William") Swanson is breaking into the publishing end. His third house paper is the Greeley (Colorado) Theater News, the others being in Salt Lake City and Grand Junction, Colorado. The new paper is the best printed of the three, the cuts showing up exceptionally well. J. F. Lynch is the editor and he covers two houses, the Rex and the Sterling. A smaller body type would make for a better appearance (and also increase the bills) and a little more local stuff would help. It is this that makes the paper read.

Tube Posters.

"Tube posters" will sound new to Americans, though at least three cities have them, for they are nothing more than posters in the subways, in London called the tubes. The tube posters in question are those put out by Hepworth's Publicity Department under Philip Wright Whitcomb, who turns out about as many good ideas as any one man in the picture business. The posters are interesting on this side in that they show one British angle in "Service Beyond the Films." The posters are large affairs, starting off with a war catchline, running into a paragraph suggested by the head which, in turn, blends into comment on the most recent release. There follows a schedule of places where the release will be shown in London the current week and also giving the show dates of other recent Hepworths. The scheme is not so useful over here, where the houses are generally too widely distributed, but in London it is a handy and effective equivalent for the newspaper advertisements that cover the showing of serials here. But the important point is the care with which even these plain type posters are prepared. The type is well chosen. It is clean cut, but it is a pretty face, which may not be said of all type faces by any means. Just because it is all type is no reason why it should not be all attractive, but Hepworth is one of the very few companies on either side of the water that seems always to consider the cut of the face. And by the same token here is where innumerable American exhibitors fail. They take anything the printer gives them. They do not realize that even some body faces are more attractive than others.

Some of the material can be adapted to program use. Note these:

> FOR SALE—EXPERIENCE.
> If you've seen good picture plays that deal with real-life problems, you know more. When you have seen how strong men and women—and weak ones, too—act under various circumstances, and with what results, you have almost the equivalent of personal experience.
> SPEND AN EVENING WITH YOUR BEST FRIENDS,
> Friends on whom you can always rely—friends who are always clever and interesting. That's the kind of friend that you find in picture plays. From one vicissitude of life to another—from sad to gay, from successful to disconsolate—your picture play friends live with you on the screen. Don't be afraid to call for fear they've go tthe blues. Come tonight.
> in cheerfulness and recreation.

> CHOOSE THE PICTURE SHOW THAT SUITS YOU. Don't trust to luck. Make those two hours at the cinema pay you well
> You can't do that if you pick the first cinema you meet. Choose your cinemas as you do concerts or shops or friends. It will pay you well. The purpose of this guide to cinemas is to let you know where to go to see the biggest and best.

These in the original are all set with the catchline in a rule panel with the rest well indented from the left-hand margin.

True to Color Scheme.

The Colonial, Camden, N. J., sticks to the colonial colors of buff and blue, though A. R. Woodruff writes that he knows these are not effective in printing. The trouble is that he must reverse proportions and print in blue on buff, and he cannot get quite the right shade of paper. Buff will touch up blue, if the latter is deep, but the reverse is not true. Even at cost of striking the colors we would suggest a change. Mr. Woodruff also writes:

> We feel sure that changes could be made to advantage, but we are not printers and therefore apply to the program doctor to help us improve the sheet.

The trouble is that the man who gets these programs out is not a printer, either. He seems to have no idea of display. An early issue is worse in this respect than a later copy, but both are poor specimens of typography. In one example—the earlier—there are four eight point full face machine lines that read:

Pathe Weekly.
Pathe Photocolor.
Pathe Cartoon.
Pathe Presents.

These lines are all taken to the left hand margin. The first three are subjects, the fourth is an introduction to "The Beloved Vagabond." To some extent the house is at fault here, for the relative value of the lines should be indicated to the printer, but no real compositor would ever be guilty of such composition. But this is merely a minor fault compared to the general layout. There are times when trade mark cuts can be used to advantage, but only when they are set into the form by an artist printer. Here the Pathe, Triangle, Bluebird, V-L-S-E and Kleine-Edison marks are all used. No two of them are even approximately the same size, and they are all dumped into the form without particular effort at display. Unless trade marks can be made to increase the typographical appearance, they should be left out. It would be better not to use them than to spoil the appearance, and appearance will always be forfeited when cuts of varying sizes, shapes and designs are employed. All Triangle or all Paramount or all V-L-S-E can be used to reasonably good effect, but they do not work well in combination unless the work is well done.

We think that the Colonial would do well to completely reconstruct its inside pages. As it stands the program is run on pages three and four, three days to a page. It would be better to run the entire program on page three, using some form of marginal date, several of which have been reproduced lately. This will reduce the width of the page and permit the subjects to be given a better relative display in smaller type. Then the page two should be given an editorial head and split into two columns, to be used for house chat and comment on the releases for the week. The back page can carry the underline and some chat of the players, if desired, the house talk now there being taken to page two. If this is not done and it is desired to run three programs to the page, then it would be well to cut down the size of the page and use the South Bethlehem Orpheum layout shown in the issue dated March 4th of this year. In any case the cuts should be eliminated, nor should portrait cuts be used in the program form unless these are of uniform size and can be had one for each day.

The chief aim of the program is to tell the patron what is coming. If this can be done and done well in one page, the use of two merely increases the size of the display, but not its relative value.

Changed Around.

R. L. McLean, of the Capitol, Frankfort, Ky., sends in some more programs and writes:

> I have just read your criticism in the issue of April 22, and thank you for it. I am enclosing two of my later efforts in which I have eliminated all advertising and in which I have incorporated some of the valuable suggestions you give us in the "World."
>
> I am also enclosing some of my newspaper ads. The half page was in a special fashion week issue and with the half page the paper gave me the balance for readers. The ads on Clara Kimball Young in "The Yellow Passport" and Kitty Gordon in "As in a Looking Glass" were all that I used on those days, and they proved big pullers, as we played to capacity both days, and that's going some in the middle of Lent in Frankfort. I am unable to tell you of the results of the "Don Quixote" ad yet.
> If every exhibitor appreciates your aid as I do you will have a hard job listing your well wishers.

Changing the form had given Mr. McLean more space for his program, and because he has this space, we would suggest that he set his titles in larger type. Using advertising around the central space made it possible to use smaller points to advantage. Now with all the space for the program announcement, he has too much white and it does not fill nicely. Unless it is too much of a job to collect for the advertisements, we would suggest that he put some of them back, say an inch or an inch and a half, top and bottom. If this is not done, the printer should be told to get a better display in the space now at his command. The squares should not be filled solid with type, but there should be more on those inside pages if they are not to look too lonesome. This is particularly true in the case of programs that list a single five reel feature. Three by three and a half inches is too much. The back page is given up to solid house talk.

In the advertising Mr. McLean accidentaly stumbled against a new title. The copy had to be sent to the printer in a hurry and there was no chance to read proof. The attraction was "The Yellow Passport." This was played up in the left hand margin. In the right hand division mention was made of the "black hundred" and the printer played this up above the play title and apparently the title proved better than the original. Now there seems to be a chance for someone to write a play by that title. And speaking of plays, Mr. McLean gets an item out of the Photoplaywright department that works in nicely. It runs to the effect that if you see a show and feel that you can write better scripts, it is up to you to go home and do it. It was shot at the script writers who are forever kicking that their own good plays do not sell, but it is a good line to offer those who kick at the stories they see. If they tell you that they can write better plays, suggest that they try. It will keep their minds off other troubles for a time, at any rate.

We are not very strong for the half page advertisement. We do not like half pages in which the lines run straight across the page. It is too much sweep for the eye, even in the larger sizes of type. Some lines can run clear across, but not all should. Mr. McLean has a much better form for his "two eights" in which he runs black type at the left and smaller reading at the right. It is a distinctly good surpasses anything he has before attempted. Hundreds of thousands of people have seen this great actor and form. This reproduction gives but a small portion of one of the advertisements, but it will show how the stuff is worked and also suggest a stunt for "Don Quixote."

On the Front.

The Monarch, Georgetown, Texas, recently showed "The Battle Cry of Peace," and to give it full publicity took the entire front page of the local paper. Full page advertisements are no longer unusual, but a full page of display advertising on the first page, even of a country paper, is unusual. No letter accompanies the paper.

Too Darned Generous.

The Liberty Theater, Tacoma, is a bit too generous. A recent circular is surprising. Monday night they hold a Country Store when the prizes (announced as one hundred) are distributed by lottery. Tuesday is Ladies' Day and any escorted woman may enter free. Thursday is another lottery with money prizes, and every day the house accepts commutation tickets, ten for fifty cents, though the nominal admission is ten cents. And to see that no one is left out, each program is good for a free admission. Nothing whatever is said about the sort of show it gives. As a matter of fact it is to be presumed that the people go to the lottery and look on the films as a prize package, just as some sections require that a prize shall go with each punch board chance, but this will not save the house from trouble if the proper authorities ever see one of those circulars. Even were the lottery tickets free, the requirement that a winner shall be present in the house at the time of drawing is, in itself, a "valuable consideration," and this, in itself, constitutes the affair a lottery, in Federal law, at any rate. This sort of thing is vicious and hurtful to the pictures as a whole.

Bull Protectors.

The "Bull Protector" is nearly a year old, and yet the Gem, Marietta, Ga., sends in the first we have seen put to picture use. The B. P. is a square of card or paper with a die cut that forms an oval about the size of the average ear, save for the bototm part, which is not cut through. The tab is labeled "Bull Protector," and in the card at hand the text urges the holder to put it over his ear when anyone says there are better pictures than are shown at that theater. Bull is cheap slang, but the cards seem to have made a hit where used.

Still There.

H. E. Weber, of Chambersburg, Pa., is still there, though it has been months since he was in last. But his latest contribution is not a very heavy one, though it is good; merely a newspaper advertisement that starts off with:

> After All, the Best Moving Picture Censors are the Moving Picture Patrons Themselves. The people who pay should have the say. We know that Orpheum patrons know good photoplays, that's why we get so many good ones.

If you are bothered with idiotic censorship (and Pennsylvania will need a lot of beating in that line) the best way is to put it up to the people themselves and leave it to their own good judgment.

Get it Right.

The Victoria, Philadelphia, is getting out a program that would be better were it more carefully done. When even the house manager does not know his play titles, how can he expect to interest the public, or how can he expect to hold his public's confidence when they go prepared to see "An Oily Scandal" and find that it really is "An Oily Scoundrel." On the same bill "By Stork's Delivery" is used instead of "By Stork Delivery." A little more pains will help a lot.

Uniform.

The Park, Middleboro, Mass., gets out a vest-pocket that needs only dated days. With one exception all titles are in uniform point and face, the printer arranges the matter nicely and it is printed in green on green with a good tint of stock to go with the ink used. We do not know how large a place Middleboro is, but it has a real city printing office at any rate. In addition to dating the days, we would suggest that the date also appear on the front page. This could appear under the ornament or replace it. It should not rise above a ten point type on this size sheet.

In Keeping.

Gordon F. Fullerton, of the Mission, Seattle, sends in an advertisement he framed up for a Selig railroad drama. In the original it is four tens, which gives ample space for the display and yet keeps so open that it is easily read. The Greater Theaters Co. runs four Correct the Patrons.

F. H. Franke, of the California, Chicago, writes in reply to our recent comment in which we suggested that he should name the starting times. He says:

> Replying to your recent letter of comment on my program I wish to thank you for same; am enclosing another edition for which I invite your criticisms again. The printer made an error in not placing the days in proper rotation.
> The cuts of Bushman and "The White Sister" are my own, as I could get absolutely nothing from the exchange. You note the differenec between the last named two cuts and the one of the "House of Tears" which was furnished by the exchange.
> The exchanges when selling you films promise you most anything, but sometimes one can't even get a slide, herald, or press matter of any kind.
> I note what you say in regard to stating the starting time of the various shows. In reply, I wish to say:
> If you want to go to a so-called legitimate show, you know the starting time is 2.15 at the matinee and 8.15 evenings all over the United States, I believe; at least this is the universal starting time in Chicago, and has been for over 45 years that I know. The moving picture shows start pretty much in the same way, that is about the same time, at 2 at the matinee and at 7 in the evening, so that there is little room for argument as to when these shows start.
>
> Nevertheless, you are right that some people always move into new territory, and also that some people have never went to a show before, and for this reason the starting time should be given. I had ordered my printer to print the starting time on enclosed program, but for some reason or other he omitted it.
>
> In connection with the above I want to say further that we have advertised the starting time of each particular show, trying to educate our patrons to come to the particular shows they might want to attend. We have done this time and again on our screen and in our programs until we were blue in the face without any result whatever.
> I have been inclined to attribute the disregard of this matter to the class of our patrons, which are of the middle class.
> Now I happen to go at times to one of the largest and finest moving picture theaters in the highest class of resident district. This theater furnishes an excellent and select musical program by a very good orchestra from 6.30 to 7 P. M., but to my surprise I find that the orchestra plays to empty seats and a hand full of patrons, and also that the patrons in that house do not pay any more attention to the starting time of the different shows, which all consist of big features, than they do in my house. They come and go as they please, so what are you going to do about it?

It seems to us that Mr. Franke makes out an excellent argument for the short subject program when people come and go as they please instead of trying to make the regular hours of commencement, but in any case, some persons who do not now come and who may not read the slides may appreciate the information, but we do not merely mean that he should announce that the house starts a show at a certain hour. Tell each day. For instance he has a five and a two part picture on one program. The show starts say at 7.30. A man might want to see the five reeler and not the two part comedy. How would he know when to come. But if the program stated that the comedy would be shown at stated hours and that the feature would start at other stated hours, then people might come who do not now come, and those are the ones he most wants to reach.

Mr. Franke seems to be having trouble with his cuts. One trouble is that when he does get them from his exchange they are bad because they are of the wrong screen. Cuts are loaned or rented the exhibitor to help make business and yet the average layout of cuts is either all 50 or 60 or 110 or 120 screen. The number of companies offering both styles of screen is small indeed. If the thing is worth doing at all it is worth doing well and we think it pays Mr. Franke to be forced to have his own cuts made since then he gets them of the proper screen and they mean something to a patron.

From Across the Bridge.

The Lyric, Lancaster, N. H., uses "Just across the bridge" as a house slogan, apparently to overcome some handicap in location. L. W. Carroll writes that lately they gave all women patrons this receipt, nicely enveloped for taking home; "Lyric Cream: Soak a teaspoonful of gelatine in a quarter cup of cold water and dissolve in a quarter cup of boiling milk. Add one cup of sugar and juice of one lemon. Stir until dissolved, then add one cup of mashed banana. Let it stand until it begins to thicken then fold in one cup of heavy cream, beaten stiff, and the white of one egg. Turn into a mold lined with lady fingers, chill and serve with whipped cream." We are not going to run a cook book, but this sounds good enough to pass along for the benefit of bachelor managers. Mr. Carroll reports a good sale of coupon tickets on the basis of twelve, ten cent tickets for one dollar. He uses a throwaway for each day, reciting the program briefly but attractively. The throwaway is most useful in the small towns, but it has its place and these are clean cut and well printed. Post cards written on the typewriter, not mimeographed, are also used for features. Probably the mailing list is small, but even where it is fairly large it pays to send a ribbon copy instead of a blotchy duplication. Mr. Carroll has the right idea.

What Wilby Did.

R. B. Wilby, of the Strand Amusement Co., Montgomery, Ala., did not like a certain film title any more than did many others, but, unlike the others, he did something about it. This is what he did:

A WARNING.

> On Tuesday, May 9th, the Strand will exhibit a film upon which the title "The Crippled Hand" has been wished. It sounds, as we remarked once before, like the villian in "The Exploits of Elaine," but is instead an exceptionally delightful comedy-drama, that you will miss much by missing. You're warned.

Every little while some assinine management kills a good picture with a misleading or uninviting title. Train your patrons to go back of the title for information and it will not hurt you so much. A title means a lot to an exhibitor, but the fact seems to be news to many manufacturers.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing) of photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

Those Darned Synopses.

RECENTLY a man who should know better spoke of the impossibility of using the continuity supplied by the writers and in the same breath said that it was his purpose to improve the standard of films made by the concern he was connected with. THIS IS IMPOSSIBLE. Stories will continue to be rotten just so long as Editors, directors, reconstructors and anyone else about the yard who chances along is permitted to butt in on the careful construction of a real author. We are willing to admit that not many decent continuities are received by the companies, but this is because they do not pay enough money to make it worth while for the man who could do good work. Companies pay several hundred dollars to a man who writes for the Saturday Evening Post. He turns out something that must be whipped into shape, and by the time his style has been edited out of the script the idea that remains is hardly worth working over, but it is still further spoiled by the reconstructor who may fail to see the slight idea the author did have. Meantime the script expense must be averaged up to the usual one to two per cent. of the cost of the film and to save money, synopses only are demanded and purchased for a few dollars a reel. The man who has good ideas and good technique, but who wants to be paid a fairly good price, not looked at. He is ignored and shouldered until he turns back to his fiction work, determined to work up to the first grade magazines and then get the fancy prices. Meantime good stories go begging because they cost a hundred a reel and more good ideas are badly handled because authors do not take the trouble to fix them up properly knowing that they will not be paid for their work if they do.

There are not ten reconstructors in the country today who can take a synopsis of five hundred words to the reel and get from it as good a play as can the original author in spite of his technical deficiencies, and yet the bulk of the stories are reconstructed even where the continuity is purchased because no one around the average plant seems to realize that the story, the plot told in action is the work for which the plant was erected. A photoplay is a story told in action. That is what it should be, at least, but the average photoplay is a once good idea fussed up by two or more studio men working with a bare hint.

Suppose that all the book publishers should suddenly change their tactics and declare that royalty to authors is all wrong. Suppose they hired a few men of the hack grade and advertised for ideas for these men to grind into novels. Suppose that they brought out book after book, all more or less alike because all written by the same handful of men. How long would the book publishers stay in business? The average royalty for a novel is between ten and fifteen per cent. of the advertised price. A novel advertised for $1.50 and selling for something more than a dollar net, pays on a ten per cent. royalty fifteen cents for each copy. Books likely to have a small circulation, technical works and similar volumes pay more than this, but the novel offers the best comparison, because the story and the play are close kin. On a circulation of ten thousand copies an author would get $1,500 for his work. He might also get a flat price for serial rights or perhaps first and second rights, and the book might go into a cheap reprint edition.

Coming down the scale, an author writes the lesser style of stuff, getting from $300 to $500 for a novelette that he will write in a week or $30 to $100 for a story he can do in a couple of days. He seeks to write photoplays. His work shows he can invent situations and lively action, but instead of being encouraged to write he is told to do synopses only. He may get a couple of hundred dollars for a synopsis he could turn into a novelette for $300, but when he sees what is done to his brain children he despairs of ever getting ahead in pictures and turns back to fiction before his reputation is spoiled.

Right now the bulk of manufacturers seem to be encouraging two classes of writers, the literary stars who get fancy prices for the rot they grind out with a bored air and the novices who will take comparatively small sums for their synopses. The writers in between who can and should, serve as the backbone of the business are almost completely ignored.

It is all wrong and things must be changed before affairs can possibly right themselves. Either the changes will be made or there will be no business to worry about.

Much Ado.

Rev. Karl H. M. Gardner, of Los Angeles, seeks to enlist our interest in H. R. Bill 14226, which amends paragraph (b) of section one of the present Copyright law with the idea of further safeguarding the author. This amendment merely adds a prohibition against "abridgement, amplification, augmentation, adaptation or arrangement" of a work. All of this seems to be fully covered by the present law which prohibits novelization or dramatization, according to circumstance, by other than the holder of the copyright. Mr. Gardner contends that if this is done, the authors can print their synopses in any copyrighted publication and get protection from the blanket copyright. It is just as possible to do this precise thing right now, and it can and has been done, but if the author is wise he will gain individual copyright in his own name for his particular contribution as a contribution to a periodical. This will obviate a possibly vexatious tangle as to the real holder of the right to dramatize a synopsis, for the rights lie with the holder of the copyright, who must transfer this right in proper form. Under the Gardner scheme the blanket copyright would issue and then be split up, through assignment, to the individual authors who must, in turn, reassign the right to the purchasing producer. We fail to see that the copyright line is going to scare any hardened thief, and we fail also, to see that the amendment will in the least improve the position of the author, whose rights are as fully safeguarded by the present law. The Copyright Law was well planned when the new enactment of 1909 was made, and we do not believe in cluttering it up with hairsplitting amendments.

Good Advice.

Lillian M. Rubenstein is syndicating advice to photoplay writers and the ninth lesson gives a list of buying companies that offers such concerns as Ramo, Blache, Solax, Essanay (Niles Co.), the old Reliance-Majestic-Apollo-Komic combination, the N. Y. M. P., Solax, Victorgraph, Comet, Pilot, Ryno, Minusa (M-in-A?), Quilot (Pilot again?) and a couple of others. Apparently she does not know that Triangle has been formed, that many of the others have been dead for a year or more and that other brands have been dropped, and yet she sets herself up as a teacher.

Where to Go.

A correspondent writes that last October he paid a dollar for a series of 220 lessons in film acting by famous stars. He received only the October issue and he wants to know what we know about it. We do not know of this enterprise and would suggest to this correspondent and others that complaint should be made in cases of this kind to the Post Office Department. The better way is to write off the dollar and charge it to experience. Such a proposition is foolish on the face of it and very evidently intended to catch the come-ons. There can be no such thing as a mail course in acting. At that, this correspondent is not as badly off as the boob who wrote the Kalem company that the Cruze school shut down before he came to the lesson on make-up and inquiring if this would greatly hurt his chances of getting a job with them.

"German Money" Again.

Perhaps you remember that German Money synopsis that was sprung last winter. The answer was that there was no real plot in the suggested incident, but Edgar James Pulcher, who is with a Canadian regiment, has worked up the incident into an apt little play for regimental presentation as a short film.

This merely goes to prove that no idea is wasted if you buzz around it long enough. This idea seemed worthless, but Mr. Pulcher's idea is so timely that we have suggested to him that he pass it up to the high military authorities to be used in training camps generally where there is a projection machine.

Possibilities.

Suppose that you are going down the street to the grocery. On the way the fire engines dash across the street and for a moment you are tempted to run to the fire, but you keep on to the grocery. The next morning the paper tells you that a factory building burned and that there were numerous thrilling escapes. Had you been less intent on the groceries you might have seen a wonderful sight, but you were going after a pound of butter and that is all you got. Concentration is a valuable trait, but it can be overdone in writing plays. Don't drive your play to a predetermined finish just because that is the way it came to you. Forget your pound of butter climax for the sake of the sensational fire. In other words, be willing to let your plot go where it will. If it goes in the wrong direction, you can always pull it back, but on the other hand you may stumble upon a far better climax than the one you first thought of.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 140.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theatre managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Tell us how you think films ought to be cared for in the operating room. Tell us what tools you think an operator should own, and what the management ought to supply.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 133.

The Roll of Honor on Question 133 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal.; George F. Deutsch, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Worcester, Mass.; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; M. Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada; L. Pagenhardt, Westernport, Md.; J. L. Arnold, Bellingham, Wash.; B. P. Warrick, Worthington, Minn.; H. G. Crose, Gary, Ind.; C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; Walter Collins, Tiffin, Ohio, and O. J. Bean, New Bedford, Mass.

In this instance I am going to publish two replies, namely: those of Ralph W. Martin, and Worcester, Mass.

Brother Deutsch's reply was excellent but too technical to be readily understood by our readers.

Reply to Question No. 133.

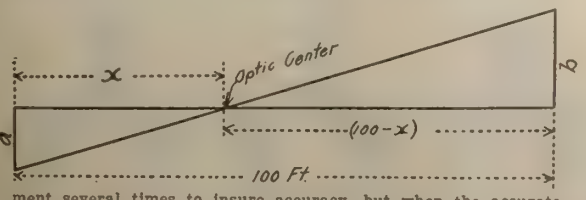
By Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal.

The Question:

What is the easiest and simplest method of measuring distance from lens to screen? The rule is: "Intensity of light diminishes with the square of the distance from its source." Does this hold good in projection light?

The Answer:

There may be a great variety of easy and simple methods of measuring the distance from the lens to the screen, but the most accurate method (excepting none) is to measure directly from the aperture to the center of the screen by means of a steel tape line. This may require pushing a pole through the lens port and dropping a plumb line from its end to the floor, and then measuring from the point on the floor to the screen, and then from the top of the plumb line back to the aperture. In some cases the operation may be still more laborious. This method may not be either simple or easy, and may require repeating the measurement several times to insure accuracy, but when the accurate distance from the aperture to the center of the screen is once known it is worth all the labor spent in getting it, for it allows making very accurate lens calculations, as follows:



$a = \frac{1}{2}$ height of aperture.

$b = \frac{1}{2}$ height of screen picture desired.

Distance from aperture to screen = 100 feet.

x = Desired working e. f. of objective.

Then, $\frac{a}{x} = \frac{b}{100 - x}$, or $x = \frac{100a - ax}{b}$ = working e. f. of objective.

If, however, the exact e. f. or principal focus (F) of the objective is desired, then: $\frac{I}{x} + \frac{I}{(100 - x)} = \frac{I}{F}$ or, $F = x - x^2$.

The Handbook gives a method for finding the length of the throw by using the width of the slide mat as a base line, and also the focal length of the stereo lens, and the width of the screen picture; which will give fairly accurate results, but this method is subject to considerable error on account of the short base line. Also practical rules are given in place of the above formulas, and which may not be so exact but are close enough for the lenses carried on the market.

The rule: "Intensity of light diminishes with the square of the distance from its source," would apply to any case where the concentration of the beam is left unaltered and the intercepting surface, alone, such as for instance, a screen, is moved toward and away from the illuminant. But in the case of projection, when the screen is moved farther from the lens, and the size of the picture maintained the same, a different lens is used so as to further concentrate the beam, with the result that the total amount of light that reaches the screen remains practically constant.

Worcester's reply gives still another method which is both interesting and practical, though why not use tape and line measure direct from lens to screen, instead of making two measurements?

Reply to Question No. 133.

By Worcester, Mass.

As most operating rooms are located above the level of the screen, the easiest method of measuring the distance from lens to screen is to apply the theorem in geometry that the square of the hypotenuse of a right triangle is equal to the sum of the squares of the two legs. In this case the hypotenuse is desired. It is an easy matter to find the floor distance and the distance of the booth above the level of the screen. Multiply each by itself, add the results, and take the square root of the sum. For example; suppose the floor distance to be 100 feet and the distance of the lens above the center of the screen is 25 feet, 100 x 100 equals 10,000, and 25 x 25 gives 625. The sum is 10,625, of which the square root is 112.8 plus for the hypotenuse or throw.

The rule that intensity of light diminishes with the square of the distance from its source applies to light passing freely. The position of the crater and the action of the lens system, however, modify the law to such an extent that it is practically nullified. The only bearing it has is that as you increase the screen area you diminish the light intensity, but this is not controlled by distance, but by lens curvature. Taking the law as it reads, it does not apply.

(But they have not, either of them, set forth the really simple, practical method of doing this particular stunt—that is measuring the distance. My own way would be to take a tape line as long as I could get, and some reasonably unstretchable cord; tie the cord to the ring of the tape line and run the tape all out of its case. Now if it is a 75-foot tape, hold the 75 feet mark about where the center point between the two combinations of the objective lens would be, pull the string tight, assuming that the tape won't reach to the screen, placing the cord at the center of the screen. Now tie a bit of colored string around the cord at the point where it reaches the screen, or tie a knot in it, or cut it off at that point, and double back on the tape line. You will thus get a practically exact measurement with a minimum of trouble. The objection may be raised that the tape and the cord may stretch, and certainly it will sag some. Well, let me tell you, gentlemen, that, whereas, theoretical in the measurement should be precise, in practice the variation of even as much as six inches would make no appreciable difference if the throw was a long one, and two or three inches variation would not make much difference, even if it be a short one. It is almost a cinch you would not get it any closer, by figuring, because machine apertures will vary slightly, and cheap lenses such as are usually used for projection are notoriously inaccurate.)

Amberlux and Front Seats.

One of the advantages claimed for the Amberlux lens is that it very much improves the view of those seated in the front seats. Guy C. Dailey, Grand Theatre, Deleware, Ohio, says:

> People used to balk at going down in front before I installed the Amberlux, but it is different now. They go right down front without grumbling at all, and this feature alone has paid for the lens filter many times over. I have had the Amberlux in for three months, and am more than pleased with results.

It will be remembered that this department long ago approved of the use of the Amberlux lens. The Amberlux is really not a lens at all, but a plano ray filter which softens the glare of the light without materially diminishing its brilliance. These lenses may be had from the Picture Theatre Equipment Company, New York City, or from any large dealer. They cost $3.50 each and are worth the money.

Projection at the Garden.

The one great, big outstanding thing, from the operators and exhibitors' point of view, at the Exposition at The Madison Square Garden, was the projection of pictures in the main auditorium. The installation consists of two Powers Six B machines. The installation was made by William C. Smith, assistant general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, and was in charge of the following operators: Joe Abrams, Ali Polin, Sol Abrams and Abe Adelson.

The distance from the lens to screen was approximately 135 feet, and the screen was a Moon. The results, considering the tremendous difficulties under which the installation worked, were very good indeed. The amperage was variously stated from 70 to 90, but after looking at the carbons I should say 70, or pretty nearly that figure—D. C., of course. True, the picture was not an unusually large one (15 feet wide), but it was plenty large enough, and stood out with surprising brilliancy and wealth of detail, when one comes to consider there was literally a flood of light in the auditorium. Two big chandeliers, each containing hundreds of lights, blazed down, and there were great flaming arc lights, and Cooper-Hewitt studio lamps sending their glare all over the auditorium. Mr. Smith, the operators, and the equipment are all entitled to credit for the really splendid results attained under the conditions.

I noticed one thing particularly well worth attention by exhibitors and operators, viz: The picture was only 15 feet wide, yet standing on the balcony at the opposite end of the great arena, ,fully 100 yards away, I could, with but slight effort, read the ordinary titles and could easily follow every detail of the film story, although my eyes are by no means as good as they once were.

From the Trenches.

Sergeant C. H. Richardson, 26th Battalion, Second Canadian, formerly operator Star theater, St. John, N. B., writes from the trenches in Flanders as follows:

> You will no doubt be surprised to receive a letter from this part of the world. Although I have been in the uniform for eighteen months I am still endeavoring to keep pace with the operator's end of the business. Through the kindness of A. J. Mason, Imperial theater, St. John, I have received the World regularly since last June. My last two copies, January 15th and 22d, arrived two days ago. I have them here with me in the front line of the trenches. After reading will pass them along to my brother, who was also an operator before enlisting. Just now I am operator of a Ross rifle, giving continuous performances from twilight until dawn, and believe me we have some big features over here, though they come entirely unannounced. Things are progressing fairly well, however, and I hope and trust it won't be long before I shall again be back, steering the good ship Projection. Excuse this pencil scrawl, as a fellow almost has to tie himself in a knot in order to write in these confounded dugouts.

My grandfather's name was C. H. Richardson—the C. H. standing for Calvin Howard, therefore Brother Richardson's name attracted my undivided attention, and I am going to send his letter to grandfather's surviving children—"children" is good, the youngest being about sixty-five. Yes, I too hope the brother will soon be back but, well, we have been hoping that for quite some time, and the fulfillment of the hope still seems as far off as ever.

Temporary Film Splice.

C. Patterson, Wilmerding, Pa., says:

> I would like to suggest insulating tape as an excellent temporary film splicer when the film breaks in the machine. Am not in the movie business, although I have a keen interest in it from all points of view, and expect to get into the game in the near future. Have operated several makes of machines in Ireland and in this country.

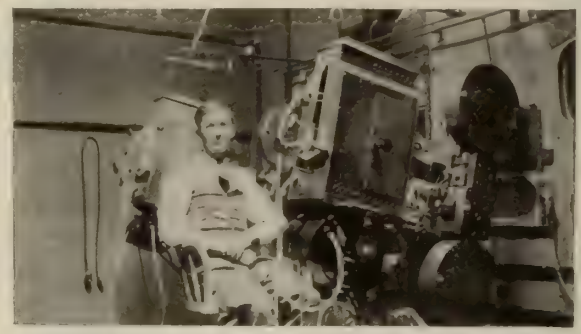
The brother's scheme is to get ordinary insulating tape, and, cutting off about two feet, double it back on itself, cementing the two pieces together, face to face; then dip the whole thing in flour and rub off the surplus. This prevents the back side from sticking. Now, when the film breaks it is only necessary to clip off an inch or so of the tape, first having separated the faces of the two sides, and stick it on the back side of the film, thus joining them.

While we thank the brother for suggesting this plan, still I cannot particularly recommend it, because I think an ordinary paper clip is better, and with the tape the average operator would, I think, use two or three inches intsead of one, and thus unnecessarily ruin several pictures in the film.

Has a Cracker Box.

Guy Hill, North Yakima, Wash., sends order for the new Handbook, and says:

> It is about four years since I wrote to the department, but I have been reading it all these years, nevertheless. I am the chief, with a capital C, at the Empire theater, this city. Have a regular cracker box for an operating room, it being only 14 feet deep by 18 feet long, with a 13 foot ceiling, in which latter there is a skylight 4 x 10 feet, which opens and closes automatically with the port fire shutters; also can be opened by hand when I need the light. It sure is some ventilating system. Am projecting a 20 foot picture at 116 feet, with a 30 foot drop, and have no keystone effect whatever. (Yes, but you have distortion, Brother Hill, though it is not bad on the 116 foot throw and would amount to practically nothing if the picture were smaller.—Ed.) The equipment consists of two Simplex machines, one spot light, a G. E. Rectifier, and Wagner converter. The optical system of each machine is set according to the tables in the projection department, and give perfect results. Have glass in all the ports, the observation port being 14 x18 inches. The house seats 1,300. Show Paramount program five days a week and S & C vaudeville Saturday and Sunday. Pictures ten cents; vaudeville, six acts, ten, twenty, thirty.



The picture I am sending was taken at three o'clock in the afternoon with the skylight open. You can get an idea how nice it is to work under these conditions. Of course there is a window blind over the skylight so it can be pulled across to make the room dark. You will notice by the blur on the lamphouse behind me, caused by the arc, that the machine is running. Well, if this gets in the department I may write again some time; and I might anyway. Oh, yes, we are organized, and all three houses employ I. A men. The scale of wages is far ahead of anything I have heard of in the east, and this is saying something, but it's true. I am using 40 amperes D. C., and a flat, white non-reflecting screen, and am getting some picture if I do say it myself.

Well, Brother Hill, you'd have to show me that picture before I would believe it—a really good 20 foot picture on a non-reflective screen with 40 amperes of current. However, I will be in the state of Washington some time next winter, and it is possible I may be able to arrange to come over to North Yakima, provided it does not entail too much additional railway fare. The Moving Picture World is going to be the "goat" on the financial end, and I will have to see first how much additional goat they would be if I include your city. That is some plant you have all right, and I would like to give it the once-over.

From Galveston.

A. E. Kirk, Galveston, Texas, writes:

> It is quite some time since I had the pleasure of writing the department. You will, however, perhaps remember me as the author of the method of lining the optical system of the projector, which, together with the method for anchoring the machine table, is included in your Handbook. While I am no longer an operator, I have never missed an issue of the department from the time you first began the "Trouble Column," and it has always been a source of instruction, amusement or profit. I now design, build and operate all my own machines and effects for use in local theatricals, spectacular features of dances, balls, etc., and I would like to say right here that "perfect projection,' which you so often preach, as applied to moving pictures, applies equally to the operation of spot lights and stereopticons. It is unfortunate that the average operator pays so little attention to proper handling of the spot light or stereopticon, when these machines are in reality the elder brothers of the moving picture machine.
> I have from time to time noticed some of the boys asking for information as to the best width of shutter blade to fit their local conditions. Several methods have been submitted to the department, the most noteworthy of which is the cutting of a portion of the metal off the side of the shutter blade, and the adding of an extra piece of metal held with screws, so that the blade width may be adjusted to suit. The great fault with this, however, is the absolute certainty of throwing the whole shutter out of balance, which wears out bearings and tends to set up vibration in the mechanism. Since I note you have repeatedly said that a shutter having three blades of equal width is ideal, a method of changing the width of all the blades in an absolute equal amount without destroying the balance of the shutter as a whole has suggested itself to me. I herewith submit it on its merits.

A B C

In the illustration, A represents about the proportion of the regular equal bladed shutter. B and C are two thin shutter discs exactly alike, with the blades considerably narrower than the regular blades in A, say two-thirds or three-fifths the width of A. The actual width determined upon by the operator will depend upon his local conditions. Now, if C be placed on the top of B, with the blades exacity in line with those of B, the result will be one shutter with the narrowest blades possible to use, but if C be turned around on B, B remaining stationary, you will readily see that the width of all blades is automatically altered in equal amount.

Yes, by the anchoring and the lining methods you are duly and properly identified. I expect to be in your city and deliver a lecture on projection some time next winter. Shall hope to then have the pleasure of meeting you. As to your shutter scheme, I don't see any reason why it would not work well indeed, and it strikes me as worthy of attention by manufacturers. Something of the kind is needed, and while I have not studied this matter in all its phases, from a once-over examination it looks pretty good.

Another Opinion.

With regard to the question concerning a 60 cycle transformer (economizer, inductor, etc.) working on 133 cycle, I also submitted this question to the Edison Company, and here is their reply.

If the low voltage transformer referred to is one taking 110 volts from the primary side and delivering about 40 to 50 volts on the secondary side, the only effect of its being used on 133 cycle would be that it would get slightly warm, though not to an extent that would be damaging to the instrument. The loss in efficiency as against its use on 60 cycle current would be about 5 per cent., provided the instrument was of high grade construction.

Standardizing the Optical System.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., presents the following as a proposal for standardizing the optical system.

The ideas set forth in the accompanying drawing represent a scheme for standardizing every possible detail of the optical system. The object, very evidently, is to do away with the present difficulties encountered by the use of different condenser lens combinations and different objectives. The drawing must be considered in connection with previous articles on the same subject.

No doubt these ideas are considerably ahead of the game, and are furthermore wholly dependent for practical success upon many experiments yet to be made; but, nevertheless, the idea is here presented for whatever it might be worth.

I am not going to comment on this particular proposition mainly because I don't know what to think of it myself. It is presented merely as an interesting phase of the subject, which I would recommend to the consideration of those interested in the study of the optical system of the projetcor. In Figure A is another adaption of the same idea, in which the meniscus aperture lens is used. Concerning this Brother Martin says:

Fig. A shows the aperture lens placed between the aperture and the objective. When placed behind the aperture as before suggested, there is difficulty in getting the crater image truly placed at the aperture, and besides this arrangement interferes with the present gate construction in many machines.

There should be little difficulty in placing the lens as shown in Fig. A, at least in most machines, so this idea is just given as an added suggestion to the other articles on the same subject.

The placing of a lens between aperture and objective would not, I think, be practical because of interference with the E. F. of the objective.

Arc Position.

John Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn., says:

With regard to Brother Martin's article on "Crater Position," April 8th issue, his argument is excellent, and I think beyond criticism. However, lest some operator place the arc at the position of the image of the aperture as called for, and condemn the idea because result is not satisfactory, I would like to point out that it is not only necessary to put the arc at crater position, but also to put the crater position where the arc can do is maximum work, because if either the E. F. of the condenser or the distance between the condenser and aperture are not suitable for the objective and amperage used, then it would be useless to put the arc in crater position as called for in Friend Martin's article. It should be first noted that the position of the image "at crater position," and the size thereof depend entirely on the E. F. of the condensers and their distance from the aperture. This is not affected either by the size of the picture being projected, or the E. F. of the objective, so that while it is quite true that the crater and the image of the aperture ought to be located at the same point in order to get he maximum efficiency out of the optical system, it by no means follows that we must move our arc to crater position as indicated by the condensers already in the machine. It means rather that we should change the condensers so that they will move the image to a point where the crater will project an image of itself to the aperture of a size necessary to cover the same. The following points ought to be noted, first: the size of the picture and the quality of the screen determine how much amperage is necessary or desirable; second: the diameter of the objective and its back focus determine the distance between the condensers and the aperture; third: it is the distance between the condensers and aperture, as well as the amount of amperage being used, which determines the E. F. of the condensers.

The condenser sizes given in Table 1, Page 14 of the Handbook, apply in general to average amperages, but in cases of extremes the following will improve conditions, viz: for small amperages use shorter focal length condensers, and for large amperages longer focal length condensers. As an example of how amperages affect the equivalent focus of the condensers, I offer the following: We will assume the image of the crater at the aperture to be the same size in each case, therefore assuming that the small amperage requires the crater enlargement to be five times, and that the greater amperage requires the crater enlargement only four times, which means, in plain terms, that in one instance the spot will be five times the diameter of the crater, whereas in the other instance it will be only four times the diameter of the crater. In each case the distance between the condensers and the aperture equals 20 inches, this being determined by the diameter of the objective lens. Now with the crater which needs enlarging five times, the crater position must be $20 \div 5 = 4$ inches from the curved surface of the back condensers, therefore condensers must be used which will place it there. But with the crater which only needs enlarging four times, the crater position must be $20 \div 4 = 5$ inches from the curved surface of the rear condenser, which would place it about 4 inches from the flat surface of the lens. It will thus readily be seen that it will require condensers with longer focal length to place the crater position four inches from the condenser than it would to place the crater position three inches from the condenser. I quote these examples to illustrate the fact that we must adapt the crater position to the amperage we use. Another way of knowing when the crater is working at the right position is to observe the spot on the shutter, when the shutter is placed where the condenser is focused upon it, and withdrawing the crater from the condenser until the spot on the shutter clears entirely of the image of the arc, and appears evenly illuminated. If the spot at the aperture is now too small to fully cover the same, shorter focal length condensers are needed, and if too large, then longer focal length condensers are needed. Of course it is assumed that the limit of distance is being used between the condensers and the aperture. Increasing the distance between the condensing lenses themselves is equivalent to using shorter focal length condensers, and vice-versa. When a condenser is held up to the light with the eye at the point of focus the lens will appear as an even disc of light. It is the same when the crater is at the point of focus; the image of the condenser will appear evenly illuminated.

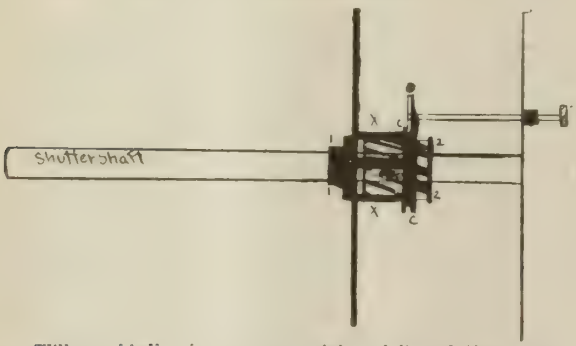
Brother Griffiths had kicked over the soup again, or at least has tried to. Now I may be wrong and he may be right, but I have, or had concluded that we ought to establish 3½ inches as the distance of the crater from the rear lens of the condenser and make other conditions fit that one. If what Friend Griffiths says is correct, then we are going to kick that proposition over and adopt something else, but before I do that I want to know positively that Griffiths' plan is the best plan. In considering this matter there is more than one point to be looked at. In the first place there is increased loss of light when we back the crater away from the lens by even so much as one-half inch, and in the second place backing the arc away from the lens has the effect of making the light beam thicker, or wider at the point the revolving shutter cuts it. Both are important items, and entail light loss or decreased illumination. To my way of thinking this particular matter is close to the heart of the whole question of the optical system of the projector, and I would ask our optical friends to be very careful in discussing same. If I am wrong in proposing to work from a fixed distance, the sooner I know it the better, and, conversely, if I am right the sooner I know it the better, and I am not going to give up on that particular point until I know positively that I am wrong. In other words you must show me on this particular proposition.

Adjusting Power's Shutter.

Seth Wiard, New Haven, Conn., says:

Enclosed find an idea of mine regarding shutter setting device for use on a Powers' Cameragraph, though doubtless it could be used on other machines. It may be installed by any competent operator, and without great expense.



Will you kindly give me your opinion of it, and if you feel so disposed give the matter space in the department. In the drawing 1-1 is a collar on the front of the shutter, just large enough to allow the shutter to be turned on the shaft in adjusting; 2-2 are the slanting transverse guides, preferably seated in a collar enveloping the shaft and the shutter hub, and screwed tight to the same. C-C is the collar which travels on guides 2-2, the same being connected to the shutter by rods X-X. Collar C-C is moved over the guides by metal yoke O which works in a flange on collar C-C. The yoke is attached to the shaft which is actuated by the thumb screw, and which moves back and forth as it works in the screw bearing.

This device is very carefully gotten up, but I would prefer not to comment until I have seen an actual model. I might say, however, that I can see no particular advantage in such an arrangement on the Powers machine. When the shutter is once set there is no reason why it should be changed, except perhaps once in a great while when some repair is made to the mechanism. The invention is interesting, however, and for that reason is given space.

Foos Gas Engine.

During the past several years I have from time to time received a number of inquiries with regard to the Foos Electric Light Plant, which for several years has been soliciting the favor of the moving picture theatre patronage. I, therefore, concluded to make a side-trip to Springfield, Ohio, while on my swing around the circle, and inquire into the chronometer balance and cylinder escapement of this particular piece of equipment.

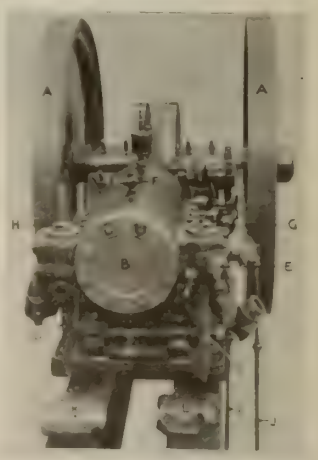
During my visit I made an extended trip through the factory and examined, in detail, into the methods of manufacture. Among the first things that attracted the editor's attention were the cards nailed on the walls of almost every workroom, displaying the legend, in large type, "Quality First." That is a mighty good motto for any manufacturer to adopt, and it certainly may be said to have been adopted when the company posts the legend conspicuously on the walls throughout its establishment.

The methods of manufacture of the Foos Gas Engine make for extreme accuracy. All shafts and crank bearings are ground by means of grinders which have a peripheral speed of approximately 72,000 ft. per minute. This not only assures high polish, but also a high degree of accuracy in diameters and in trueness of the circumference. It also possesses another advantage, in that the wearing parts may be hardened and then ground into their final shape. If you machine a piece of steel down into the finest possible condition and then harden it, it is more than likely to warp out of shape, at least, to some extent, in the process. The grinding method is therefore far superior to any other in making wearing surfaces which must be tempered, highly polished, and absolutely accurate.

Practically all parts of the Foos Gas Engine, both small and large, are made by the use of tools called "jigs." This insures absolute accuracy in the drilling of holes, etc., so that all parts can be made truly interchangeable, a thing which cannot be accomplished by any other possible process. Where holes are drilled and the different parts fitted by means of jigs, it simply means that you can order a new part from the factory and it will fit exactly as well as the old part did. There is no guess-work about it, and you will know that the part will fit, because it is either ground to exact diameter or is made in the same jig, and, therefore, must be not only nearly, but precisely the same.

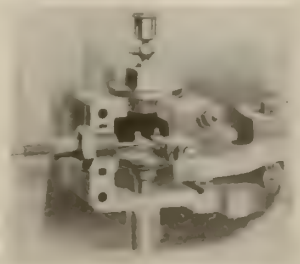
In Fig. 1 we see the engine ordinarily sold to moving picture theaters, although the company makes a great number of different varieties or designs of outfit, and you can get one larger or smaller, direct connected or belted.

In Fig. 1 AA are flywheels of extra heavy weight and large diameter, designed especially for this class of work. These wheels, with their large diameter and substantial weight, make for steadiness in speed. B is the cylinder head, which is removable, in case it should ever be necessary to open the cylinder, simply by taking off the eight hexagon nuts. C is a spring on the rod at the top end of which is the inlet valve. D is a coil spring on the rod at the upper end of which, under the cap H, is the exhaust valve. These two valves are controlled at N by rods, as shown. These rods connect with cams which operate them, and the movement is positive.



In Fig. 2 we get a view of the ignition system (Wipe spark igniter). B and A are the two opposite polarities of the magneto circuit, and when A strikes B (which is a piece of heavy spring steel), the circuit is completed, but as A wipes across B and passes it, the circuit is broken, and is broken with a decided snap. The result of this arrangement is a positively timed and very "hot" spark. The amount of contact B will have with A is regulated by means of screw D, Fig. 2, which may be readily screwed in or out by loosening lock nut E, thus increasing or decreasing contact of A with B.

This company has been engaged in the manufacture of gas engines for 27 years, and certainly is putting out a mechanically well-made product. In this connection, it may be said that the factory guarantees that the speed of the engine will not vary over 2% from no load to full load, and granting this to be the fact, most certainly the variation under normal operating conditions of the moving picture theater, would be to all purposes, nothing at all. Taking everything into consideration, from what I saw in Springfield I have no hesitation in saying that the Foos Gas Engine is a remarkable machine, and I see no reason why it will not, with ordinarily intelligent care and attention, deliver the goods. I would, therefore, recommend that managers contemplating the purchase of apparatus of this kind give the Foos outfit their very careful consideration.



The manufacturer's claim as to the relative cost of current, as compared to current supplied by a power station, is that it will result in a saving of 25 to 75 per cent, the wide variation being due to the possible variation in the price of gasoline, gas and kerosene.

The generator of a standard make may be had to deliver 60, 70 or 110 volts.

Camera Man and Director.

The relations between the camera man and the director of a picture are rarely as intimate as they should be. The production of a film in a proper and fitting manner is one that requires the closest co-operation between every factor of the working forces and the camera man and director are the two greatest factors in this production. When they do not understand one another; when they work at cross purposes, it is self-evident that the production must suffer.

The director is at the mercy of the camera man for the proper interpretation of his ideas upon the screen. Each necessarily imposes all of his own limitations upon the other and it is only through a thorough understanding and the closest co-operation that these limitations are prevented from conflicting with the perfection of their work.

There are many camera men who are jealous of allowing their director to learn what he ought to know about photography and the limitations of the camera and there are also many directors who are too prone to regard the camera man as a mere mechanical accessory, possessing little or no brains. When these conditions obtain neither can respect or have any great consideration for the ideas of the other, but when the director realizes that his camera man is a master of his craft, understands and knows what he can do with the camera and when the camera man knows and realizes that his director knows his business, has a concrete idea as to what he wishes to portray upon the screen and knows that what he wishes to portray can be photographed so as to interpret his idea to the spectator, then the camera man and the director have reached an understanding under which they should be able to produce very nearly perfect pictures.

Both camera man and director should realize that not only are they being paid a salary to produce the best of which they are capable, but they should also have a sense of the dignity of the task which they are doing. Even the production of a rough-and-tumble, slap-stick comedy has a dignity attached to its production. "Anything worth doing is worth doing well," although a trite saying, still holds a world of meaning and though well worn by long usage, is a motto which might well hang above every director's desk and in every camera man's dark room.

Too many camera men and too many directors, as well, fail to understand why they do not make a greater success, when they habitually allow any old thing to do, and perform their task just sufficiently well to enable them to "get by."

I have met many directors who seem to think the best training in stage craft and drama can be obtained from all-night poker parties and the infiltration of booze, and many camera men who kept their photographic eye in practice by sighting along the billiard cue and get the largest part of their technical training from the comic supplements of the Sunday newspapers, and yet they wonder why some camera men are called "crank turners."

Perhaps some of you boys think this is rather drastic stuff, that I slam it in too hard once in a while, but mark this—the quiet fellows who are drawing down the real figures on their pay checks on Saturday night are the boys who put brains into their business; who are "Jerry on the job" and "Johnnie on the spot" when it comes to producing the goods. What they don't know they learn somehow. They don't belong to the clique of those who knew too much to learn any more and they were not too proud to exhibit their ignorance when it came to a question of something they didn't know, but went and asked someone who did know, or spent the necessary time to dig it out for themselves from some text book where they could find what they needed to know.

There has been much talk recently of overcrowding the profession of camera men, thereby bringing about a general reduction in salaries. The man who knows his business does not have to worry; the man at the top will always get the top-notch salary. If you have the determination and stamina to learn and apply what you should know, you will have little occasion to worry about any reduction in your salary. One of the best indications of this is the fact that there are quite a number of camera men today who are drawing larger salaries than the directors for whom they take pictures, and although it is dangerous to prophecy, I am confident enough of the dignity and worth of the profession which bears the commonplace name of "camera man," that I do predict that more and more will come an equalization of the salaries of camera men and directors.

*Copyright 1916, by the Chalmers Publishing Co.

Not alone to the director belongs the distinction of creative ability in the production of pictures. With the raising of the standard of craftsmanship, ingenuity and knowledge required of the camera man, come greater reward when he is able to endow the director's ideas with artistic and pictorial worth.

What to Take for Educational Pictures.

Supplementary to the article "Hints to Newsfilm Cameramen" recently published in these columns a little may be said regarding what to take for Educational Pictures.

Most of the Educational Film Companies have their own cameramen who attempt to cover as far as possible the more important educational features of this country. These traveling cameramen include in their itinerary the principal views of the principal cities, and the best of the natural scenery obtainable. However there are so many important subjects everywhere that may be photographed, that are impossible for the regular cameramen to obtain, that any motion picture camera operator can obtain a ready market for film of the highest class.

For example, one of the largest and best known Educational Film Companies recently started a cameraman on a trip across the continent with instructions to take certain views in New York City before proceeding. His orders were among others to obtain a view of the Statue of Liberty in New York harbor with the sun setting behind the statue. Were it not for the fact that this particular picture was desired the cameraman might have been well on his way westward, but owing to inclement weather, and to the hazy atmosphere so prevalent in the harbor, it was necessary to wait nearly two weeks for this particular picture.

How much better would it have been for this company to send their cameraman on ahead and to advise some local photographer to just take what was required. The local man could be on hand daily, with almost no expense compared to that of the regular cameraman.

There are in every fair sized city, some points of interest that make good educational subjects.

One correspondent living in the small town of Burlington, New Jersey, was quite surprised to learn that an Educational Film Company has sent a cameraman direct to this town to obtain some views of shad fishing in the Delaware river. Shad fishing in this particular spot has been going on for years and years, but the local man never appreciated the fact that this industry might make a picture worth while.

There is as much of a market for first class educational pictures as there is for "Newsfilm." The educational work being the best for the local photographer because there is no great hurry, no mad rush for the particular news value of the picture. Often "Newsfilm Cameramen" become excited and neglect to make some final adjustment of the camera, that often results in a spoiled picture, while the man photographing educational pictures on the other hand may take his time and get the best results obtainable.

Industries of special nature, such as the manufacture of some special article, automobiles for example, make good subjects. Natural beautiful scenery which you may see every day, but which many people may come miles to see; in fact, any subject that is of value to the public in general makes valuable material for educational pictures.

Of course, the more technical part of the Educational work, such as microscopic studies of plants and small organisms cannot be attempted by everyone, but there may be some little feature that occurs to you that might make interesting material for a picture that someone else would like to see.

I have in mind a former professor of physics who has lately taken up moving picture work. He found that the photographing of some of his experiments in chemistry and physics made interesting subjects, and one that had a ready market. Now he is engaged in making a picture of the life and habits of the ordinary frog, so you see there's always a field for those who are alive to the opportunity.

Studios in Jacksonville, Florida.

The editor of this Department has been working in Southern Florida for the last few weeks and stopped in Jacksonville on his way North.

There are five companies at the present time operating in Jacksonville, viz.: Thanhouser, Eagle, Vim, Kalem and Gaumont. The weather is beginning to be oppressively warm and all of the companies except Eagle and Kalem are making preparations to go North for the Summer. The Thanhouser forces left for the North the 25th of this month.

Lawrence Williams, who has been with the Thanhouser Company for several years, leaves at this writing to go with the Famous Players Company, taking the place of his brother, who died recently in the New Rochelle hospital.

All of the studios operating here have open-air stages with the exception of the Thanhouser Company, which has a glass studio for rainy days in addition to a large open-air studio.

The Eagle and Vim studios are the only ones who develop their negatives in Jacksonville, the others sending their stuff North to their respective headquarters for development and printing.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by Clarence E. Sinn and S. M. Berg

Musical Setting for "Notorious Gallagher" or "His Great Triumph."

Released May 29th by the Metro Pictures Corp'n.
Suggestions prepared by S. M. Berg.

(By special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.)

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release, and a sufficient number should be secured to provide one for each member of the orchestra. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 13 T, "Me fer him" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 17 D, "When men climb on porch," is a description of action.

"Buttsy" Gallagher is a harmless product of the slums. One night the gaiety going on in Judge Winter's house attracts him and he crouches on the porch roof to watch where, after a time, he falls asleep. The house is burglarized, a servant is killed and the crooks escape. "Buttsy" is arrested as the murderer and finds himself suddenly famous. Women send him flowers and men argue his case. Bob Ewing takes up the case and forces Peggy, the Judge's daughter, who was hidden in the other window on the night of the murder to tell what she knows. "Buttsy" is released on probationary sentence for having committed perjury as he confessed to the murder, delighted at having so much attention. The picture closes with "Buttsy" in a series of exciting incidents that prove his sterling qualities.

This picture is full of action with many pathetic scenes. Note particularly: Shot 18¼; train effects 55 to 64; struggles and shooting from 64¼ to 71¼.

The THEME selected is "One Fleeting Hour"—Lee.

WILLIAM SHEER OPENS BOOKING OFFICE.

WILLIAM SHEER, familiarly known as "Billy" to his many friends, general casting director of Equitable, World, Paragon and the other allied concerns associated with World Film, resigned his position with that firm this week and on June 1 will open general booking offices in the premises occupied by him while connected with World and Equitable.

Mr. Sheer during his regime as casting director was instrumental in disposing of the grafting and petty larceny agent and his position was created by Arthur H. Spiegel because of the complaints against agents who, according to affidavits of extra people and supernumeraries, collected at times fifty per cent. of the wages. Since Sheer's inception in the position it is worth noting that not one complaint has reached the offices and it was with reluctance that his resignation was accepted.

William Sheer.

Sheer's plans for the future are most ambitious. Already controlling the labors of half a dozen important players and representing a number of stars, and with the optional control of hundreds of types and people who go in for atmosphere and mob material, and has, during his year with the World companies, been noted for his faithfulness to type and local color.

In company with several other well known film and theatrical men Mr. Sheer will soon open his offices at 130 West 48th street. He will make a specialty of casting completely picture play productions, ranging in his people from the leading player and star to the most obscure extra people, and from reports has already made arrangements with a number of the more important manufacturing concerns to supply considerable of their talent.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and PROF. HARDIN LUCAS.

THE "ENTENTE CORDIALE."

Establishing the Relationship of the Moving Picture Trade to Educationalism.

By Rev. W. H. Jackson.

A GOOD example comes to us from England, whereby the relationship of the moving picture trade to educationalism has been established. In the first place, they wisely acknowledge two facts: First, the moving picture was full of power and scope, and that its progressive and educational advantages must be admitted. Second, it must be remembered that it is also a commercial enterprise and that co-operation must admit that the usual legitimate business results shall accrue. Upon this basis of practical common sense, the following resolution was passed: "That this conference expresses its willingness to further the educational aspect of the moving picture, and agrees to show as often as possible pictures of an educational character, as far as a reasonable financial success will permit, the educational authorities to be kept posted as to such displays." It was further resolved that exhibitors would have pleasure in co-operating with educational authorities of all classes by arranging for exhibitions for children and young people, using films dealing with such topics as shall be of interest and value, and in cases of schools, facilities shall be given teachers to give lessons at such performances. It was further agreed that the terms for such exhibitions should be as generous as a financial undertaking could offer. While this is indeed a most worthy "Entente Cordiale" it is a splendid example of what we here call using the chart and compass to direct and regulate the course of affairs rather than an antagonism which engenders strife. It is to be hoped that in this country, as indeed everywhere this same attitude may be adopted to the advantage of all interested. At another conference held in another part of England in which it is reported that the most cordial relations were found to exist between all present, consisting of magistrates, clergymen, teachers and exhibitors, the chairman at the close of the conference remarked upon fact that a more well-balanced meeting could not be imagined. In summing up the work of the conference the chairman said: "Producers and public had not yet realized the great power possessed by the moving picture, which was having and was going to have a great effect upon the future of the people. There were not only dangers to be guarded against, but enormous advantages to be found in it, and if they could be directed in the right way, no one need fear that the country would ever suffer by it. From the above reports we are bound to admit that in England there is an apparent spirit of adjustment rather than one of contention as is too often displayed in this country, they are evidently admitting the fact that the pictures are moving the people and find it to be their duty to direct the movement rather than to combat it. Censorship must mean proper regulation, the Sunday question must mean adjustment to conditions, and the morale of all pictures must be moulded by an enlightened public sentiment; in this way every form of opposition and antagonism will be abolished and the man who opposes the progress of the picture, whether from pulpit, platform, rostrum or bench, will be as scarce as an opponent to printing. In America we seem to be a people of contrasts and extremes, in one place a minister is opposing the pictures as emissaries from the depths of evil, while in another place a minister says he believes that in ten years there will be more preaching by the pictures than by the voice, the picture will be used more than the book, the eye will be used more than the ear. One school-master is doing nothing with the picture because he wishes to wait until the phonographic description synchronizes with the picture, while in another place the school-master is saving his pupils weeks of time and much weary study by a wise and judicious use of the pictures to enlighten and help.

The picture is moving on and moving the world, and the wise are moving with it. Those who moved with it commercially have already risen from poverty and obscurity to wealth and prominence. In educational and all kindred lines those who move with it will rise more rapidly and certainly, while those who fail to take advantage of the tide will be left behind to plod their weary way alone; use and not abuse, help and not hinder, purify and not slander, lift and don't kick, overcome prejudice with enlightenment, ignorance with knowledge of the facts and circumstances, join the great army of those who are pledged to cause the picture to take its rightful place among the great forces for the good of the whole world and your own town, city, community, church or school in particular, it will then require no prophet to predict that when the picture has moved the world to a higher and better place you can remember that you helped it along and in common with numbers of others who can even now say that the experience of an educational progress was yours.

RESPONSES WARMLY FAVORABLE.

From a number of states have now come to me letters warmly favoring the plan for co-operative, economical, profit-sharing film service as outlined in my articles in this department for April 15 and 29, and May 20 and 27. Several of the writers are recognized experts whose opinions must be regarded with great deference and since those who read this page will probably be more pleased if I quote verbatim from a few of the letters received, I shall do so, reserving names and addresses for later disclosure.

From the Pacific coast comes such strong (to me it seems too strong by at least half) language as this:

> I have been working incessantly on the problems of visual education for the last five years and in your Moving Picture World articles in the last two or three weeks it seems I have found the first gleam of intelligence in regard to the solution of the numerous and varied problems that we have to face.

He promises to send in to me some very helpful information, all of which will be gratefully received and duly credited.

Another expert in the field of visual instruction writes:

> We notice with a degree of keen pleasure that your department has been opened in the World. * * * There are a dozen or more high schools and a considerable number of intermediate and elementary schools in this city and county, which have already purchased and are now using motion picture machines. * * * We shall be glad to furnish you with the names of the schools, the persons in charge of the work and any other data. We shall be glad to know of any aid we can render you in your work, for we fully expect to receive benefits from the efforts which you are making. The work of your department will be watched with keenest interest.

The pulse of even the most callous editor could not fail to beat the faster as he reads such responses to his efforts. Such readers are the salt of the earth wherewith (to mix the figure a little!) the lump must be leavened. In the present problem of organizing widely-scattered schools into co-operating circuits invaluable assistance can be rendered by those who know of others who are progressive enough to join our enterprise. I shall be delighted to receive the data referred to and any other helps. Thank you.

Now, please let all others interested send in similar helps at once. Don't wait to inquire whether I shall welcome the assistance. Indeed, I hope each of you will consider yourself a committee to spread correct information about our co-operative, economical, profit-sharing plan for film service. Do this directly by personal letters to officials and others likely to be interested. Tell them of your own prompt action. Urge them to act with equal promptness for the benefit of all.

And here is another type of response that should lift our hopes of success in this effort to organize one or more film circuits before July:

> Please send us the formal contract blank and further particulars, for we should like to present the matter to the local public school superintendent, and also to two of the high school principals, various members of the board of education and the county superintendent, all of whom we know personally.

I hope the condensed form of contract printed on this page in the May 27 issue will suffice for the needs of this inquirer and of all others in cases where a favorable decision has not become practically a certainty. This enterprise is founded upon the principle of rigid economy. In order to make educational films available for use in schools everywhere at the lowest practicable rental, we must eliminate elaborate advertising and other promotion expenses usually incurrd by purely commercial ventures. Our undertaking cannot afford to be loaded down at the outset with heavy charges for printing, mailing, clerk hire and all that, for, of course, the subscribers must ultimately pay all the costs.

Still another interested booster of the use of visual aids in education writes:

> We have read with much interest your article in the Moving Picture World on "Pedagogical Reel-ism." It explains very well the great need at present of educational film. We are in pretty close touch with the schools of the middle states, and everywhere the question is raised—"Where can we get REAL educational film?

It is just for the purpose of answering this very question that I am urging that all who sincerely mean to use educational films systematically should immediately unite in a wholesale purchase and rental enterprise, and in that way (absolutely the only way) secure a continuous supply of satisfactory films at minimum expense.

Finally, among the letters received are these statements also:

> I believe it is not practicable to make all of the material needed, now, for it would cost thousands of dollars; but there is at present a great deal of useful material existing. * * * If all the material now existing in all of the manufacturers' negatives could be properly organized, arranged into courses, and rented out irrespective of producers, it would mean that a lot of dead material would be put to use. * * * When we do organize the material already available, however, and make it possible for a Board of Education to contract for a year's material correlated with the classroom work in a given course, I believe we can finally attain our ideal, to make visual education universal.

The writer's ideas and my own are in exact accord here. I have spoken such thoughts so many times that I was under the impression I had written them down in one of these articles. Perhaps I have failed to make the point so clearly, but that idea has been at the core of all my efforts thus far. My negotiations with film-producers have been conducted wholly upon that basis. They have consented to print for me fresh positives f om their stock negatives at unusually low prices. Ample material being thus assured, it is up to you, Mr. Educationist. How soon will you make the possibility of educational film service a reality?

Is it not now most expedient and reasonable that each person genuinely interested in my proposals should first read carefully the condensed contract above referred to? Then, if you are positively inclined—as I truly hope you will be—you might properly send in a quarter for one or two copies of the full and detailed contract which will soon be in type. The metal will be held for a time so that any desired changes may be made before the final version is determined upon. The quarter mentioned above is only a suggestion, not a requirement; so also is this—namely: if you will send in a dollar with ten or a dozen addresses, contracts will be mailed to each of them.

Please write me in detail any suggestions you may care to offer on any phase of the situation. HARDIN LUCAS.

CHILDREN ARE TO HAVE THEIR DAY.

Had Shakespeare lived in these days he could not have spoken of the boy "going lazily to school" as one of the seven periods of life, for today the children go to school "with tripping feet;" at any rate they will shortly be doing so if the many friends of the educational picture can carry out their numerous and well intended plans. Among the growing army of workers in both theory and practice for the better use of the children's pictures are two ladies who came to the front by conducting a well appointed booth in the recent Exposition in the Madison Square Garden, New York, where they received many interested callers and explained their objects as follows:

"In view of the fact that the insistent cry for better films for children have so far been answered by too few theaters, progressive schools and social centers, we have set ourselves the following tasks:

"To select programs of such charm and beauty that the children will eagerly seek the entertainment provided for them at special Saturday morning performances.

"To co-operate with the exhibitor in securing the support of the neighborhood for his efforts to become a factor in the upbuilding of youth.

"To awaken the mothers to an appreciation of the tremendous powers for good that the motion picture may be made to exert on the impressionable and growing mind.

"To hasten the day when the manufacturers will devote to pictures for the child the genius that will arouse enthusiasm for the noble and elevating; inspire faith in ideals and cause beauty to captivate and mould the young soul.

"Believing the child should be withdrawn from the shows arranged for mature and sophisticated audiences and that it is only with the accomplishment of the foregoing that the question of censorship may be dealt sanely, we are devoting our best efforts to this work."

To the above commendable purposes Mrs. Mary Mason Speed and Mrs. Bess Richey Dessez are now devoting their time and energies in New York City. They have also established an office at 126 West 46th street, where people of kindred minds may communicate with them. In many towns there are now organized Parent Teachers Associations having similar purposes to those outlined above, it will be well for such to come in touch with these ladies, who out of their experience may be able to give them efficient help and advice. The great question of children's pictures in addition to the school and educational pictures in general is one of wide importance and is receiving much deserved attention, doubtless by adding the above enterprise the work cannot fail to gain great momentum.

Two very interesting educational releases by the Pathe Co. are "The Ascent of Mount Rainier" in the Picturesque American series, and Beautiful Lake Chuzenji in the Picturesque Japan series. Both of these pictures are wonderful exponents of the natural beauties of their respective countries.

In addition to their great scenic beauty which makes them attractive at any time, they are by their detailed descriptions splendid lessons in geography and travel, widening the scope of the class room knowledge. Being on the same reel they form a happy contrast of national scenic beauty and have been appropriately chosen; for mountain view, natural waterfalls and sparkling cascades they are without superiors.

USE OF MOTION PICTURES IN FRENCH SCHOOLS.

Consul General A. M. Thackara, Paris, writes in "Commerce Reports" that by a presidential decree of March 25, 1916, an extra parliamentary commission was appointed, in connection with the Ministry of Public Instruction, to study means whereby the use of the motion picture may be generalized in the different branches of public education.

The appointment of this commission is the outcome of a report made on December 23, 1915, to the Chamber of Deputies by the public instruction committee of the Chamber. In laying this matter before the President, the Minister of Public Instruction said in part: "Despite the grave events of the present time, we must not neglect certain measures whose utility, although not immediate, will be realized in the future. After the war, the national school will have work laid before it more important than in the past. It will be its task to hasten and increase the intellectual and moral development of the country. To render its work more efficacious it is essential that immediate steps should be taken to seek out means of vivifying our educational methods and of utilizing all the new resources which science has placed at our disposal.

"The rational use of the motion picture can produce in all our schools most successful results. It answers the natural taste of youth for pictures, it places before the eyes the fact beside the idea, it hastens the working of the intelligence and broadens the experience."

NEW YORK CLUB WOMEN OPPOSE CENSORSHIP.

In speaking of the attitude of the women's clubs of America toward censorship and the motion picture, it may be of interest to note the tabling of a resolution presented at the fortieth convention of the New York City Federation at the Hotel Astor on Friday, May 12. The resolution, drawn up with great care, requesting federal censorship of pictures and the licensing of pictures to be sent from one state to another, and asking members of the clubs to send letters to their representatives in Washington, which was to have been sent to the capitol, was presented for adoption.

Miss Helen Varick Boswell, chairman of the Educational Committee, was immediately on the floor. "I am much opposed, and I feel sure that most of the women in the house are also opposed, to making picture censorship a matter of politics," said Miss Varick. "The motion picture industry has not been allowed time to work out its salvation as yet. The censorship of films should come from the people. It should be the business of club women to increase the demand for good films."

The resolution was tabled by a great majority.

Catalogue of Educational Pictures.

V-L-S-E. OFFICE CHANGES.

S. E. Abel, Chicago manager of the V-L-S-E., Inc., announces that in line with that company's policy of promotion from the ranks, he has chosen Frank Redfield, booker of the Chicago office, as his assistant manager. This promotion will be received cordially by the trade, as Mr. Redfield is regarded a thorough and conscientious worker, and an asset to the industry. With the vast amount of experience he has had, extending back to the pioneer days of the film industry, it is certain he will be well fitted for assuming a position that requires such constant attention to detail. A. B. Philbin will succeed Mr. Redfield as booker.

Two new salesmen have also been taken on at the Chicago office. They are George Berg, who will travel in Wisconsin, and C. F. Troupe, who will cover southeastern Illinois. Jess Levine, formerly of the New York branch of the World Film Corporation, is now with V-L-S-E., Inc., having been engaged by the New York office to succeed W. P. Allen. Mr. Allen has been transferred to the Syracuse branch of the V-L-S-E.

J. S. Hebrew, manager of the Philadelphia office of the V-L-S-E., announces the appointment of Nat Glasser as salesman for the Washington office, and Ernest A. Bezouska as salesman for Philadelphia. Mr. Bezouska has been connected for a short time with the New York exchange, while Mr. Glasser was manager of the Leader Theater, Washington, D. C.

UNIVERSAL CITY CLOSED TO PUBLIC.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company, recognized as one of the greatest believers in publicity to be found in the industry, has decided to dispense with its greatest "ad"—a free one, at that—consisting of showing visitors around Universal City. When it is remembered that many thousand visitors enter the portals of the movie city annually—at 25 cents a head—that they are for the most part tourists from all parts of the globe who go back to their homes and tell about it, that a visit to the city is considered such an attraction that the great railroad lines entering Los Angeles advertise it—when these facts are remembered it is hard to believe that a concern that spends hundreds of thousands of dollars on paid advertising are, of their own will, passing up such a bet!

But H. O. Davis, whom many consider the last word in production efficiency experts, and who is general manager of Universal City, cut off at one stroke this vast source of advertising and income to his company, for the simple reason that he found it interfered with studio efficiency, and anything that, in the Davis scheme of things, interferes with efficiency must go.

KOPFSTEIN WILL AGAIN HANDLE IVAN PUBLICITY.

Jacques Kopfstein, the advertising engineer who was in charge of the publicity and advertising department of the Ivan film productions from the reorganization of that company to about six weeks ago when he resigned, has again accepted the incumbency of that office.

Vitagraph Releases

Week of June 5th Brings Many Excellent Subjects to the General Film and V-L-S-E. Programs.

ON THE General Film Program the Vitagraph releases for the week of June 5th includes "A Strange Case," "New York, Past and Present" and "She Won the Prize." "A Strange Case," a Vitagraph three-part Broadway star feature,will be released on June 10th. In this picture, Harry Morey has a wonderful chance to show his talent, as he takes a dual role. We first see him as Burnham, a great detective, and then as Lefty, the Crook. Supporting Mr. Morey are seen Ned Finley, Frank Holland, Adele Kelly and Edward Elkas. The filming was supervised by Eugene Mullin. Jane Dixon and Roma Raymond wrote the story.

"New York, Past and Present" is the title of a one-part scenic picture, in which Father Knickerbocker personally conducts a tour through his wonderful metropolis. All the familiar landmarks of the city are shown, and when they fade out, the same spot is shown as it appeared in the colonial days. The reel closes with a wonderful panoramic view of the city, taken from the pinnacle of the Woolworth Building.

"She Won the Prize" is a one-part comedy featuring Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno. After winning a prize of $1,000 in a contest, Edith Storey, as Molly, a stenographer, sets out to have a good time on the money. She goes to Lakewood, where, in a swell attire and a beautiful blonde wig, she poses as an heiress. The boss, also in Lakewood for a rest, meets Molly, and, failing to recognize her in her finery, becomes infatuated. Later he proposes and is readily accepted. Josephine Earle and Donald McBride also appear in the cast. George D. Baker and Epes Winthrop Sargent are the authors of the story, and the former also directed the action.

With V-L-S-E for Week of June 5.

In "The Destroyers," a five-part Blue Ribbon feature from the pen of James Oliver Curwood, a new star, Lucille Lee Scene from "Kernel Nutt's $100 Bill" (Vitagraph).

Stewart is introduced and featured. The story, in Curwood's powerful style, tells of a woman, Josephine McCloud, who comes to the frozen timberlands of the North, in search of a man named Peter God. Miss Stewart, as Josephine, is ably supported by Huntley Gordon, John Robertson, Richard Turner, Virginia Norden and Florence Natol. The picture was directed by Ralph Ince, and his usual attention to detail can plainly be seen.

A century note renders valuable assistance and causes a heap of trouble for Kernel Nutt, in "Kernel Nutt's $100 Bill," the latest of the Kernel Nutt series of one-reel comedies featuring Frank Daniels. Entertaining an heiress on 60c is some job. Kernel Nutt is not very confident of succeeding until he finds the big yellow back—then—well, $100 will buy a lot of things. Frank Daniels does credit to the part of Kernel Nutt and is well supported by Alice Washburn and Adele De Garde. L. Case Russell wrote the story and C. Jay Williams produced the picture.

Denton Vane

DENTON VANE of the Vitagraph players, after leaving school in Jacksonville, Fla., made a determined effort to succeed in dramatic work and his ambition seems to have been fulfilled beyond his expectations. He was several seasons in vaudeville, once with Maude Odell, and then as Vance, of the team of Vance and Rogers. He has had great experience in stock, having played long engagements at Portland, Seattle, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, and was a Pacific Coast favorite. He was also in a musical comedy, "The Rich Mr. Hoggenheimer," his rare singing voice being of great aid to him. He was featured once in "Brewster's Millions," and two seasons in "The Fortune Hunter." At different times he has been in the support of Ethel Barrymore, Blanche Bates and other prominent stars. With Florence Gale he made a Western tour, being cast as Mercuito in "Romeo and Juliet." In the season he was with Miss Bates in "The Darling of the Gods" he made so good that he was chosen the next season to originate the part of the young Syrian in the first production of "Salomo."

Denton Vane.

Mr. Vane's first experience with motion pictures was with the Selig company, and then he was four months with the Kalem company, playing leads opposite Irene Boyle. He joined Vitagraph in 1914, and during that time appeared in the following notable productions, "The Silent Plea," with Edith Storey, "The Barrier of Youth," with Norma Talmadge, "The Radium Thieves," with Leah Baird, "Two Women," with Anita Stewart, "Green Stockings," with Lillian Walker, "The Island of Surprise," with William Courtenay, "The Hunted Woman," with Virginia Pearson, "The Ordeal of Elizabeth," with Lillian Walker, and "Hesper," with Lillian Walker. Added to his excellent stage appearance Mr. Vane has a most pleasing personality and is popular with players and public alike.

EDDIE LYONS AND LEE MORAN IN NEW YORK.

A new contract has just been signed in the home office at 1600 Broadway between Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, and the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, whereby these two clever comedians continue under the Nestor brand for two more years. Their contract also provides that they shall jointly direct themselves in their own single and two reel productions at Universal City, Al. Christie and the Universal having severed their connections. Mr. Lyons has not been in New York since Mr. Laemmle sent him to the coast, with the old Imp company over four years ago, and Lee Moran has never been in New York. An effort is being made at the present time to secure a leading woman for them of international prominence.

First Month of Unity Sales

A. J. Cobe Says Corporation Is on Firm Basis—Has Several Popular Productions.

IN ONE short month the Unity Sales Corporation is declared by Andrew J. Cobe, its vice-president and general manager, to have waxed from infancy into lusty manhood and is already proving itself a formidable factor in the motion picture industry.

The purchase by the firm, through negotiations conducted by Mr. Cobe, of the sensational and timely serial "The Yellow Menace" in which the eminent dramatic actor, Edwin Stevens, is starred is not the least of the notable "coups" accomplished since the birth of Unity. An aggressive and widespread advertising campaign has been inaugurated, new offices of great artistic beauty and practical efficiency established in the firm's headquarters in the new Godfrey Bldg., at 729 Seventh Ave., and plans laid for a "service system" which Mr. Cobe declares will result in the maximum of benefit for the exhibitor, exchangeman and producer. Mr. Cobe's long experience in the motion picture field and the regard and esteem in which he is held by all branches of the industry have resulted in immediate success for the new concern, and the Unity offices are fairly flooded with demands for service, and as a logical consequence the working force of the organization and its offices have been considerably enlarged.

The slogan of Unity—"The Concern with a Conscience"—is one which Mr. Cobe has ordered all his departments to live up to in every sense of the word with unflinching exactitude.

"Myself and my associates were impelled to purchase 'The Yellow Menace'" said Mr. Cobe, "because we believe it is going to be the serial of the season. It carries within its sixteen episodes a lesson of lofty patriotism and a message of preparedness, with which the air is now ringing, together with a tender and beautiful love story and thrills galore. 'The Yellow Menace' already has the endorsement of every prominent man who has seen it, and they include some of the most famous names in the country. I have seen thousands of motion pictures in the course of my connection with the industry, but I say without hesitancy that 'The Yellow Menace,' which was produced, by the way, by William Steiner, is the 'best bet' so far offered the exhibitor. It is deeply gratifying to me to observe the response with which the trade has risen to the announcement of Unity's plans and I can assure our friends that Unity will always maintain as its watchword the two great underlying principles of modern business—'service and co-operation first, last and always.'"

Unity reports also record breaking returns on the first two features released through its agency, namely, "My Country First," a feature production in six reels made by the Terriss Film Corporation, and directed and starred in by Tom Terriss; and "The Pursuing Vengeance," an intensely exciting and virile detective photodrama, based on the celebrated novel by Burton E. Stevenson, "The Boule Cabinet." This picture was produced by Martin Sabine, and has gained a vast volume of favorable comment the country over.

"Diana," a wonderfully colored and romantic picture, picturizing the romance of "The Huntress," and the life of the Gods on High Olympus, in which appear the Baroness Von Dewitz and Paul Swan, as Apollo, is still another feature put out under the Unity brand and forms a classic and beautiful addition to any program. There are many unique and beautiful lighting and color effects in Diana, in addition to a classical ballet in Isadore Duncan dances, that are bound to cause a sensation in any community where the picture is played. Many state rights buyers have already ordered duplicates and additional prints of the classic.

General Film Offerings

The Week of June 5th Has Some Good Subjects in Store.

STANDING out strong and distinctly and bristling with attractions that make up an exceptionally forceful program, General Film Service for the week June 5th-June 10th, inclusive, offers its patrons drama, comedy and travel pictures in which acknowledged stars of filmdom figure. The comedies are of the same excellence that the General Film Program has always been noted for.

A Selig three-reel comedy, "A Temperance Town" in which Otis Harlan stars, will be the first thrown on the screen Monday, June 5th. Judging from advance notices, after film inspection, "A Temperance Town" should prove the comedy hit of the week. "New York, Past and Present," a Vitagraph historical production, has a prominent place in the first day's release. It should be a decidedly entertaining picture, presenting an opportunity for comparison seldom offered. Selig-Tribune, featuring all the high spots in the important news of the world is also presented on this day, while Biograph's "The Girl Across the Way" helps mightily to strengthen the day's releases. "Otto, the Reporter," a Lubin comedy, will provide more laughter.

"Orphan Joyce," an Essanay two-part drama featuring youthful Joyce Fair, is the first release for the following day. "Midnight at the Old Mill," a Kalem comedy and a Biograph two-part drama, "The Yaqui Cur," with Lionel Barrymore, Robert Harron, Kate Bruce and Walter Miller in the cast, make up the early part of the day's program. "The Stoning," an Edison production in three parts, has a post of honor on this day.

"In Cinderella's Shoes," a Kalem comedy, and Vernon Howe Bailey's "Sketch Book of Berlin" and Edison's "Love's Labor Lost" provide varied and strong attractions for Wednesday.

Lubin's "The Scapegrace," in three parts with George Routh, Adda Gleason and Evelyn Page sharing honors, will be presented Thursday, as will also Selig Tribune and a Vim comedy "The Sea Dogs."

Knickerbocker heads the list Friday, offering "The Stained Pearl" in three reels, featuring Henry King. In this sensational tale of the sea Mr. King has many opportunities to demonstrate his acknowledged ability. Another strong feature of this day will be "Juggling Justice" of the Sis Hopkins Series. These Kalem comedies always "get over" and "Juggling Justice" will be no exception. Vitagraph and Vim each supply a comedy, the former "She Won a Prize," and the latter "A Dollar Down."

A three reel Essanay production, "Fool's Gold" with Darwin Karr, Nell Craig, Patrick Calhoun and Marion Murray, all film favorites, will be presented Saturday. "Two Smiths and a Half," a Lubin comedy, will be sandwiched in between "Fool's Gold" and a Vitagraph three-part picture, "A Strange Case." Then will follow "The Treasure Train," an episode of the "Hazards of Helen" Series by Kalem. The final picture that will fade on the screen will be Selig's drama, "Going West to Make Good."

Triangle Stars on June List

Willie Collier, Jr., to Follow in His Father's Footsteps in "The Bugle Call"—Fairbanks Coming in "Reggie Mixes In."

TRIANGLE'S June releases will bring Willie Collier, Jr., to the front as a full-fledged film star. In "The Bugle Call" he plays a juvenile, of course. The story is filled with human interest and the spirit of adventure permeates every scene. The settings, lighting and photography are all excellent. In "The Bugle Call," Billy, as played by Willie Collier, Jr., is a particularly likeable lad who is brought up at an army post. He has no mother, until his father introduces a lady to Billy as his new mamma. Then the young man's troubles begin—or at least he thinks they do—and it is not until danger from troublesome Indians threatens and Billy is left to guard his heretofore disliked step-mother, that peace is restored in the family.

The Triangle-Fine Arts feature for release the first week of June presents Norma Talmadge in "Going Straight," a human interest story, melodramatic at times but ringing true throughout. The story is that of two reformed crooks, a man and a woman, who are married. They decide to forsake their old manner of living and the difficulties they experience in living down their past, provides situations that take a genuine grip on the heart. Norma Talmadge, who plays the part of Grace Remington, one of the reformed crooks, has never done anything finer than in this picture. Ralph Lewis, who enacts the role of John Remington, the other crook, is excellent and the children who have by no means an unimportant part in the story quite surpass anything they have ever done before.

Douglas Fairbanks "put over" another typical Fairbanks' success in the Triangle-Fine Arts feature, "Reggie Mixes In." The story provides an excellent vehicle for the buoyant art of the popular screen star and he surely makes the most of every opportunity it offers him. "Reggie Mixes In" serves to bring Bessie Love forward again in a particularly sympathetic role and she scores heavily in the part.

The Triangle-Ince feature for release the same week presents Bessie Barriscale in "The Sorrows of Love," an emotional drama which is featured by the excellent acting, the elaborate settings and the compelling interest of the story itself. Bessie Barriscale gives a most vivid interpretation of Sister Beatrice, who is so stirred by the tale of the outside world's wickedness, which is brought within the convent walls by a young girl, torn from the side of her lover, that she decides to go out into the world to try and better it.

Among the releases to be made during the latter part of the month are "The Innocent Magdalene" and "A Mild Girl of the Sierras," both from the Triangle-Fine Arts studio and "The Deserter" from the Triangle-Ince studio.

Bluebirds on the Wing

Pretentious Little Flock That Will Soon Be Flitting Hither and Yon.

GENERAL Manager M. H. Hoffman, of Bluebird Photoplays, announces several newly selected features for the program he has so successfully projected during the first half of the year, and declares that the forthcoming issues of Bluebirds will contain even better material than has been found to be so generally favored by exhibitors and public thus far in the series.

"We are going to spend the summer getting ready for the regular season," says Mr. Hoffman, "and the way we shall proceed with our preparations will bring profits to the exhibitor while he is fighting the call of summer sports and amusements. We believe that equally good films are required in summer as in the regular season, and we propose to keep our program up to standard regardless of conditions."

"June will start summer and Bluebirds will introduce its series of summer releases with four features that we are willing to have our future judged by. 'The Eye of God,' produced by the Smalleys, with Lois Weber, co-star, gives Tyrone Power the best opportunity he has had on the screen. Lois Weber is accountable for another June release in which we introduce Mary MacLaren, a new screen star, in 'Shoes.' And Bluebird is willing to stake its reputation on this subject," said Mr. Hoffman.

Peter B. Kyne's story, "The Three Godfathers," is a third June issue on the Bluebird program, and Louise Lovely, in "Bobbie of the Ballet," completes the list for that month. Continuing Mr. Hoffman says: "Our July productions have all been arranged for but we are talking now for only three, 'Ambrosia,' 'Broken Fetters' and 'The Grasp of Greed,' with Ella Hall, Violet Mersereau and Louise Lovely, three popular Bluebird stars, in the respective releases."

"Rex Ingram has directed Violet Mersereau in 'Broken Fetters,' a feature for which Mr. Ingram also provided the story and scenario. William Garwood will be featured as Miss Mersereau's leading man, and Kittens Reicherts, a favorite child actress, will also be prominent, having the entire first reel practically to herself. Paul Panzer and Isabel Patterson will be prominent in Miss Mersereau's support.

"Robert Leonard wrote the story and scenario of 'Ambrosia,' and directed Ella Hall in the production. Harry Depp will be Miss Hall's leading man, and for a boy, still in his teens, to be designated as a leading man is but giving full credit to this clever lad. Adele Farrington, erstwhile queen of comic opera, will be the leading lady and others in the company will be Betty Schade, Grace Marvin, Wadsworth Harris and Kingsley Benedict.

"Louise Lovely will make another regular appearance in the series as star of 'The Grasp of Greed,' a feature taken from one of H. Rider Haggard's stories, prepared for the screen by Ida May Park, arriving late in July, with Jay Belasco and Lon Chaney principals in her support, and Joseph De Grasse the director. We have every reason to believe that Bluebird exhibitors are destined to have a mighty prosperous summer," concluded Mr. Hoffman.

BRITISH NOTES

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" concludes its second run in London at the Drury Lane Theater this week, but there are two companies in the provinces with the production. For exhibitors with designs upon the great feature it has been a difficult matter to ascertain exactly who is responsible for its handling on this side and it is generally understood that "D.W.G." himself is exploiting the picture, or at least the first presentations of it. Assuming this to be the case, it has been a subject of strong comment that no provisions have been made to make the screening of the film a practicable proposition to the average exhibitor and the intimation prominently displayed that "this production will never been seen in any but the highest class stage theaters" confines the supposition that "The Birth of a Nation" is, for the exhibitor, forbidden fruit. This policy may be actuated with a natural desire to preserve the picture as a distinct and isolated production, but nevertheless to deny the man, the exhibitor, who, after all, has made such things commercial propositions, savors somewhat of affectation, if not superficiality.

In conference at Newcastle, the Chief Constable's Association were treated to a homily on juvenile crime as affected by the war by the Lord Mayor of that city the other day. As may be expected the moving-picture came in for a good deal of attention, favorable and otherwise, and eventually a resolution was passed at the instigation of the Lord Mayor of Bristol urging the government to establish a central state censorship of films.

* * *

Mention of censorship brings to notice a curious decision of the Shaftesbury Avenue tribunal which has this week refused to sanction the Cines Company's "Life of Christ" without even viewing the production.

Henry Weirick's multiplicity of interests in the moving-picture business appear as though they will see him domiciled in Gerrard Street for some time to come. Apart from a considerable interest in the British organizations which handle the Mutual output here, the Western Import Company and associated companies, he came over from New York with the World Film Corporation's productions for disposal and three of the older Keystone-Chaplins which had not been released here. These were "Dough and Dynamite," "The Trysting Place" and "His Prehistoric Past." Lest the prospect of three consecutive Chaplin's should overcome the exhibition they were immediately bound up with twenty-five more Keystone comedies, that is to say that in order to show the three Chaplins exhibitors have had to book twenty-eight subjects in all. And although the exhibitor kicked previously when the Essanay Company essayed to do half as much, the plan, Mr. Weirick's I believe, has carried admirably and to such an extent that almost every other exhibitor one meets is booked up solid on Keystons for twenty-eight weeks.

* * *

The second hustle of Messrs. Winik & Davies is even more astonishing this time in connection with Triangle pictures. Within a fortnight seven provincial branches were started for the handling of Triangle features, three in England and one each in Scotland, Ireland and Wales and a few days later first trade shows of "Peggy" and "Fatty and Mabel Adrift" were being held in each center. In Manchester, very imposing premises in the second principal thoroughfare in the city have been acquired, while at Birmingham a property owner who started to argue in legal terminology about leases and tenancy agreements was bought out of business. The London premises are next door to the present Gerrard Street offices of the Western Import Company.

Mutual Program

Schedule for the Week of June 5 Announces the First of the Mutual Star Series—Other Good Subjects.

WITH the release of "Whispering Smith" and "Soul Mates," first of the big five-act Mutual Star productions, which top Mutual offerings for the week of June 5, the new feature release policy of the Mutual Film Scene from "Whispering Smith" (Mutual).

Corporation, recently announced, gets into full swing. The new Mutual Star productions promise to set a new record in feature releases in many ways. Each will be written to match the histrionic talents and personalities of the stars. Many of the Mutual Star productions will be prepared for the screen from the latest of popular fiction stories. A staff of noted scenario men are now at work at the various studios where the productions will be filmed preparing the features for the screen.

Frederick Warde, Richard Bennett, Mary Miles Minter, Helen Holmes, Florence La Badie, William Russell and various other stars of the stage and screen will be presented as the featured players in these new Mutual Star productions. Miss Minter is now at work at the American-Mutual studios in Santa Barbara on her first feature release. Frederick Warde has begun his first feature at the Thanhouser studios. Mr. Bennett will leave for the American-Mutual studios just as soon as his theatrical engagement in New York is concluded. First of the Mutual Star productions, featuring Miss La Badie, Miss Holmes and William Russell, have been completed.

"Whispering Smith," produced under the direction of J. P. McGowan, was adapted from Frank H. Spearman's noted story of the same name.

Miss Holmes is seen in the role of Marion Sinclair, which gives her ample opportunity to bring into play her well-known emotional appeal. McGowan appears in the role of Whispering Smith, while the other important roles are in the hands of Paul C. Hurst, Leo Maloney, Thomas Lingham, Chance Ward, N. Z. Wood, Sam Appel, F. Van Norman, Walter Rogers, William Brunton and others.

The Mutual Star production featuring William Russell will be released under the title of "Soul Mates." It was produced at the American-Mutual studios. This production was especially written to match the personality of this virile young star. It was prepared under the personal direction of J. Edward Hungerford. Charlotte Burton appears in Russell's chief support. Others in the cast are Leona Hutton and Harry Keenan.

Mutual releases for this week offer a wide variety of themes and present a galaxy of popular Mutual players. Particularly interesting is the Gaumont-Mutual three-act drama of the week, which will be released June 8 under the title of "Flames of Vengeance." This production presents two feminine stars in the leading roles, something seldom witnessed in motion picture photodramas. Gertrude Robinson, a popular Mutual heroine, long identified with Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, and Iva Shepard, the "vampire" of the Gaumont-Mutual studios, are the featured players. They are supported by a capable company of players, headed by Alexander Gaden.

Four two-reel subjects will be released by the Mutual on the same program. "Jealousy's First Wife," an unusually interesting domestic drama, featuring Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh, heads the list. It is from the American-Mutual studios and will be released June 5.

"John Brewster's Wife," from the Thanhouser-Mutual studios, for release June 6; "The Pilgrim," from the Mustang-Mutual studios, with Frank Borzage and Anna Little in the leading roles, for release June 9; and "The Lion's Nemesis," a stirring drama from the Horsley-Mutual studios, featuring Margaret Gibson and the Bostock animals, comprise the two-act offerings. The latter will be released June 10.

Mutual comedy releases for the same week present a wide range of subjects. eBauty offerings present "Billy Van Deusen's Operation," featuring Carrol Halloway and John Sheehan, and "Thinim Stout," starring Orral Humphrey. They will be released June 7 and 10, respectively. Falstaff offerings include "Advertisementers," featuring Conrad and Oscar, for release June 5, and "Where Wives Win," released June 10. Vogue releases include "A Plane Story," to be released June 5, and "His Blow-out," for release June 11. "Jerry's Big Lark," for release June 9, is the Cub comedy, featuring George Ovey.

"Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine, "The Weekly Mutual" and "See America First" will be released on the usual days, namely, Wednesday and Sunday.

Miss Eva Unsell with Lasky

Well-Known Scenario Writer and Continuity Editor Goes West to Join Studio Staff.

MISS EVA UNSELL, well-known scenario writer and continuity editor, for a long period with the Famous Players and other companies, left New York last week for Hollywood to join the staff at the studios of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. Miss Unsell has to her credit a number of successes on the screen. The Lasky Company has been particularly fortunate with women writers for the screen who have specialized for this branch of work at the Lasky studio. Margaret Turnbull and Marian Fairfax are examples of successful photoplay writers.

Eva Unsell.

Among Miss Unsell's adaptations for Famous Players were "The Man from Mexico," with John Barrymore; "One of Our Girls," with Hazel Dawn; "Wildflower," with Marguerite Clark; "The Morals of Marcus," with Marie Doro, and "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," with Mary Pickford. Miss Unsell left the Famous Players a year ago to devote herself to original photoplays, and among her recent successes are "The Warning," with Henry Kolker; "The Ransom," with Julia Dean, and "The Reapers," written expressly for John Mason. The wide variety of these subjects and their popularity with the public convinced Mr. Lasky that Miss Unsell would be a valuable addition to his company.

Miss Unsell had just opened new offices at the Candler Building, New York City, to cope with the rush of work coming to her from various eastern producers, but the offer from the Lasky Company was so tempting from every point of consideration that Miss Unsell has finally put off all other contracts to become enrolled under the Lasky banner.

GEORGE MARSHALL WINS HIS PROMOTION.

Having won his spurs as an extra man at Universal City and later as an assistant director, George Marshall has been promoted to co-director with Harry Carey to produce western stories featuring Carey, supported by Miss Olive Fuller Golden.

Marshall was for a few months, up until three years ago, assistant director to Henry McRae at the Pacific Coast studios, and was then transferred as assistant to Director Jacques Jaccard, with whom he has worked and to whom he gives credit for his advancement.

World Film Productions

Class and Variety in Pictures Made for Discriminating Patrons Will Be the Rule.

WITH the idea in mind of catering exclusively to the higher tastes of the photoplay patron at large, William A. Brady's forthcoming World Film productions demonstrate his sincerity and further the distinct personality of his original ideas. He has formed a happy blending of players of stellar magnitude, noted artists and casting of more than one star to each production, so that the casts balance in every instance, as has always characterized the Brady stage productions.

Beginning with the June 5th release of the World Film, Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell will characterize the program in "His Brother's Wife," staged by Harley Knoles and is of a distinct dramatic calibre. This will be followed on June 12th by another two-star production, "The Perils of Divorce," with Frank Sheridan, the virile actor, and Edna Wallace Hopper, the dainty stage star, playing opposite each other.

June 19th will be an extreme event on the World program when "La Boheme," with Alice Brady as "Mimi," will be released as the regular unit. This was produced by Albert Capellani and a complete description of it appears in another part of this issue.

June 26th another two-star production, "What Happened at 22," will be the regular release, featuring Frances Nelson, last seen in "Human Driftwood," and Arthur Ashley, recently featured in "The Struggle."

Following the June 26th release will come Kitty Gordon in her third World Film production, and by far the most vital one, entitled "The Crucial Test," and this feature will be followed by Clara Kimball Young on July 10th in an unusual dramatic document, "The Story of Susan," in which Miss Young finds herself admirably fitted and capably surrounded by a production of special splendor.

Another unique event in the career of World Film will occur on July 17th when Robert Warwick will make his next appearance and by far the most important, in Thomas W. Lawson's powerful tale, "Friday, the 13th," which was staged under the supervision of Mr. Brady by Emile Chautard, after which will come Holbrook Blinn in another novel visualization of a powerful story, "The Weakness of Man," and then another two-star feature with House Peters and Gail Kane in "The Velvet Paw," which is a Tourneur picture, conceived and created by Maurice Tourneau, creator of "Trilby," "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "The Closed Road," and other celebrated film classics.

It is Mr. Brady's intention to so blend his players as to bring the important stars into the program at lease once every six weeks.

E. H. SOTHERN READY FOR THE CAMERA.

E. H. Sothern, who is now playing at the Shubert theater, New York, in Justin Huntley McCarthy's play of the period of Louis XI., "If I Were King," will begin his photodramatic career at the Brooklyn studios of the Vitagraph Company of America on June 1. Mr. Sothern comes to the motion picture camera with perhaps the most enviable theatrical record of any American actor now playing on the boards.

Crowd of Exhibitors from Chicago and Surrounding Towns to See a Private Exhibition of Chapters V., VI. and VII. of the "Mysteries of Myra" at the Princess Theater.

General Film Juvenile List

One Hundred and Sixty-five Subjects on This Roll of Distinction Approved by Board of Review.

THE General Film Company, through its Information Department, is calling exhibitors' attention to the fact that the National Board of Review (formerly the National Board of Censorship) has especially designated 165 of its pictures for its list "Selected Motion Pictures for Young People Under Sixteen Years."

This list was compiled by skilled, disinterested critics and was made up from films inspected from time to time, beginning less than a year ago, classified under the captions, "Comedy," "Humor," "Fables," "Cartoons," "Vaudeville," "Stories," "Scenic," and "Miscellaneous." Each manufacturer releasing through General Film Service is represented on this list.

General Film Company is reminding exhibitors that through it they may obtain unusualy attractive, approved films, especially suitable for matinees, when children can best attend moving picture theaters.

Grace Williams

MISS GRACE WILLIAMS leaves the Edison Company after playing the lead in many of their most successful photoplays for the past three years, such as "Waifs of the Sea," "The Truth About Helen," "Faith and Fortune," etc., and known as the popular Edison "Western girl," who found such free expression on the screen. With a person that gives shape and substance to the shadows of screencraft, together with a native wholesomeness that refreshes Grace Williams may well enjoy her distinctive success.

Grace Williams.

Miss Williams is invigorating and lovely to look upon, radiant and athletic, with the true hail-fellow-well-met attitude. When one is intently absorbed in the "Girl of the West," whom Grace Williams characterizes with such convincing charm, it would be irrelevant to remember that she was born in New York City; just as it would be interesting to learn that Miss Williams gained her schooling, so to speak, in Brooklyn.

Miss Williams has embraced a broad experience on the dramatic and musical comedy stages. At the age of seventeen she made her debut with Miss Mabel Hite in "A Certain Party." Then followed a year of the much valued stock training that served to fit Miss Wiliams for some of the big New York productions, among which were "The Rose Maid," "Weber and Fields," and "Sweethearts."

So it was with a valuable knowledge of life and the easy confidence gained from her stage career that enabled Miss Williams to make her conquest of the screen. Her art is versatile, for her interpretations of the sturdy "Belle of the Prairies" is in striking contrast to her exquisite adventuress studies.

Miss Williams has had favorable opportunities at the Edison Studio to display her abilities in sport. She is an equestrienne of exceptional merit, and a very excellent swimmer. She was also with the Reliance, Biograph and Life Photo Film Company.

SARNO REJOINS UNIVERSAL COMPANY.

Hector B. Sarno has been re-engaged by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to play with Allen J. Holubar's company, which will produce a one reel play entitled "Any Youth." Sarno was formerly a member of the Jaccard company playing heavies in underworld film stories. He is a native Italian actor, with many years of experience abroad before entering pictures.

Lasky Releases for June

Fannie Ward and Victor Moore in Two Elaborate Feature Productions.

TWO elaborate feature productions will be released by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company on the Paramount Program during the month of June. They are Fannie Ward, one of the most popular women stars of the screen, in "A Gutter Magdalene," released June 1, and Victor Moore, noted for his screen characterizations of "Chimmie Fadden" in "The Clown" released June 19.

Fannie Ward's starring vehicle is the first of a series of photoplays written for the Lasky company by the well known Scene from "The Gutter Magdalene" (Lasky).

American dramatist, Willard Mack, author of "Kick In" and other Broadway successes. As the heroine Miss Ward appears as a young woman whose sins of scarlet are washed away in the environment of Salvation Army rescue work.

"A Gutter Magdalene" essentially is one of those stories the first telling of which is most successful on the screen. It is a play of action and considerable scope within a moderate period of time duration with numberless interesting and clever characterizations. Miss Ward brings to this picture a fame as a screen star wide established by reason of her Lasky successes including "The Marriage of Kitty," "The Cheat," "Tennessee's Pardner" and "For the Defense." Her supporting cast includes Jack Dean, Charles E. West, Lucien Littlefield, Gertrude Kellar and other members of the Lasky company.

"The Clown," in which Victor Moore is the star, with the support of Thomas Meighan, who is featured in this production; Florence Dagmar, Ernest Joy, Tom Forman and Gerald Ward, is a story of circus life written by Marian Fairfax and produced by William C. De Mille. Unquestionably some of the finest comedy work ever done on the screen is contained in Cecil B. De Mille's productions of Victor Moore in the two "Chimmie Fadden" photoplays, "Chimmie Fadden" and "Chimmie Fadden Out West."

The story of "The Clown" is of gripping appeal as it tells how the children's idol risks his life to save one of his little admirers and later sacrifices his career to protect the honor of another. How he tries to better himself, and how he leaves the woman he has married to protect that she may turn to the one she loves is told in a number of unusual and startling scenes.

STANTON TAKES VACATION.

After having produced the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's serial, "Graft," in forty reels, and then topping off with a two reel film play on the Corona races, and a two reel comedy with Carter De Haven featured, Director Richard Stanton has taken a vacation. He plans to spend a few days at the seashore, resting up his nerves, and then he is going into the mountains, declaring he can catch the limit of trout every day.

FIFE PLAY FOR METRO.

Simultaneously with the renewal of Mabel Taliaferro's contract with Metro, Shannon Fife has been commissioned to prepare immediately an original five-reel feature for the well-known star. Fife's play will be produced by Edwin Carewe.

Big U Program Week of June 5th

A Five Reel Red Feather and Many other Noteworthy Subjects to Be Released.

THE Universal program for the week of June 5 contains six startling features in addition to the five-reel Red Feather release, Flora Parker De Haven in "The Madcap," and the sixth two-reel episode of "The Adventures of Peg O' The Ring," in which Grace Cunard and Francis Ford are featured.

"The Madcap" will be released on June 5th followed by the Nestor comedy, "Never Again Eddie," in which Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Betty Compson act as official funmakers. Eddie and Lee returned to Universal City on Monday, May 22, after a flying trip to New York where they renewed their contract with the Universal.

On June 6 Herbert Rawlinson plays the leading role in "The Rose Colored Scarf," a Gold Seal two-reel light drama in which Mr. Rawlinson is supported by Agnes Vernon. On the same day Matt Moore and Jane Gail co-star in a delightful little Imp comedy, "His Little Story."

"Object—Matrimony," a two-reel Victory comedy, is the feature of the program of Wednesday, June 7. Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby play the leading roles and acquit themselves creditably. The situations and plot of "Object—Matrimony" are screamingly funny and almost actor proof.

On the same day, just for a heaping measure of fun, in come Billie Ritchie and Eva Nelson in a one-reel L-KO, "Billie's Waterloo," which is a regular humdinger. The day closes with Universal Animated Weekly, No. 23.

"Alias Jane Jones," a Laemmle two-reel detective drama which will be released on June 8 with Edward Hearn and Edna Maison playing the leading roles, is an exceedingly tense underworld thriller. It will be followed on the same day by "The Sea Lily," a Big U drama, with Thomas Jefferson and Zoe Bech playing the leading roles. A split reel ends the day. First Mr. Pep appears in "He Breaks for the Beach," a comedy cartoon, and then followed "Pygmies of the Zoo," a Ditmars Educational, both of which are released under the Powers brand.

June 9th leads off with "The Scorpion's Sting," a Victor three-reel society melodrama. This is followed by Ben Wilson in "The Code of His Ancestors," a Rex drama in which Mr. Wilson is supported by Dorothy Phillips. The last number on the day's program is a Nestor comedy, "Twixt Love and the Iceman," in which Neal Burns and Billie Rhodes show how much good wholesome fun can be gotten out of every-day situations.

A two-reel Bison underworld drama entitled "The Cage Man," with G. Raymond Nye and Roberta Wilson playing the leads, is released on June 10, followed by "Betrayed by the Camera," a Powers comedy.

"The Sheriff of Pine Mountain," a two-reel Rex Northwest drama featuring Ben Wilson with Dorothy Phillips, is released by the Universal on June 11 together with the Laemmle drama, "The False Gems," in which Rupert Julian, Elsie J. Wilson and D. Gerard play the leading roles. The day ends with a deliciously funny comedy, "Phony. Teeth and False Friends," an L-KO howler in which Gene Rogers, Reggie Morris and Eva Nelson disport about a dentist's agony shop.

KOLB AND DILL IN MUTUAL COMEDY.

After years of continuous success on the vaudeville stage, where they gained national fame as entertainers, Kolb and Dill, German comedians, are shortly to make their initial appearance as the co-stars of a five-act American-Mutual comedy. This production, something unique in feature releases, is now under way at the American-Mutual studios in Santa Barbara, under the direction of Director Rea Berger. It will be released by Mutual under the title of "A Million for Mary." It was written for them especially by Al Santell from Aaron Hoffman's story of the same name.

BARNEY BERNARD IN YIDDISH COMEDY.

Barney Bernard, the original Abe Potash, arrived at the Vitagraph studios Monday, May 22, and began work on a Yiddish comedy under the direction of Paul Scardon. Mr. Bernard is assisted in his first comedy by James Morrison, Miss Marion Henry, Edward Elkas and a number of others. The first of the comedies was a conception by Samuel Tauber and presents a vivid picture of Jewish life in the metropolis wherein the peculiar strains of pathos and humor peculiar to the Jewish race are cleverly interwoven. Mr. Bernard will appear to his friends in a familiar role, that of the successful but married business man with a wife who is something of a social climber.

Alice Brady in "La Boheme"

World Film Production Based on Famous Opera Will Be Shown at Forty-Eighth Street Theater, New York.

ONE more big picture is to be added to the number of important film productions which will characterize the coming summer season at Broadway theaters, and this time it is a World Film Brady-Made production with the renowned manager's daughter, Alice Brady, seen in the title role.

As announced in the Moving Picture World several months ago, Miss Brady attended a performance at the Metropolitan Opera House of Puccini's "La Boheme," and between the acts visited back stage. Cavaleri was playing the role of Mimi, and Miss Brady, during a general talk in the green room, brought up the subject of motion pictures. Cavaleri immediately spoke up and said: "Why don't you do Murgur's story in films, Miss Brady?"

Alice Brady

When Cavaleri mentioned the matter of visualizing "La Boheme," Miss Brady began thinking. When Albert Capellani, the director, was taken into council, it was definitely decided that "La Vie De Boheme," as the story is originally named, would be Miss Brady's next picture. Capellani knew well the tremendous dramatic possibilities of "La Boheme," and at once began building and assembling his production.

Coincident with the statement from the World Film offices that "La Vie De Boheme" would be visualized, came a warning from Signor Puccini, the composer, that he would consider the production of "La Boheme" an infringement on his rights and instructed his attorneys to institute restraint proceedings. Despite this, Mr. Brady proceeded with the play and it was completed last week.

Nathan Burkan, representing Puccini, informed Mr. Brady that he was about to secure an injunction against the World Film Corporation and stop the releasing of "La Boheme."

Scene from "La Boheme" (World).

and Mr. Brady, without ever having seen the finished picture, invited Mr. Burkan and a number of the Metropolitan opera stars to witness a private showing of the picture last Saturday afternoon.

The picture was shown and to the surprise of even Mr. Brady, the attorney, the noted singers and several of the Metropolitan directors rushed over and congratulated both Mr. Brady and Miss Brady.

"The picture is too beautiful to be interfered with," said Mr. Burkan, "and further, I shall cable Puccini that I am in favor of its being distributed; it is the most irresistible subject I have ever seen." And then and there Mr. Brady decided to put the show on Broadway, with the result that it will open at the Forty-eighth street theater on June 5.

No Injunction for Chaplin

Application Made by Sid Chaplin to Stop "Carmen" Burlesque Is Denied.

JUDGE HOTCHKISS of the Supreme Court of the state of New York on Monday, May 24, denied the application of Charlie Chaplin for an injunction to restrain the V-L-S-E and the Essanay Company from distributing the four-reel Essanay-Chaplin comedy, "Charlie Chaplin's Burlesque on 'Carmen.'" In the opinion denying Chaplin's motion for injunction, which was argued originally on May 12, Judge Hotchkiss said: "Notwithstanding the earnest argument of counsel for the plaintiff, I think this motion should be denied principally for the following reasons:

"First. Plaintiff's right under paragraph three of the contract of December, 1914 (assuming such contract to have remained in force unaltered), to enjoin the production because he had not approved of the play is doubtful.

"Second. The play itself is undoubtedly the property of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, by which company plaintiff was employed, and the circumstances of plaintiff's services in connection with the creation of the play distinguishes the case from those cases which have applied the principle of an author's exclusive right of literary property.

"Third. The facts do not justify a claim that the association of plaintiff's name with the play, as produced, amounts to a fraud upon the public. A fair construction of the advertisements of the play, is not that plaintiff is the author or producer, but that he is the star or principal actor.

"Fourth. It is not claimed that so far as he is pictured in the play his part is garbled or distorted. Whatever of him is shown is a truthful representation. Whether plaintiff's contract rights reserved to him rather than to his employer the sole privilege of determining what of his pictures shall be incorporated into the play produced, is at least doubtful.

"Fifth. Whether plaintiff will suffer any damage from the production is problematical, while an injunction is certain to work loss for defendants."

This opinion, it would seem, decisively disposes of Chaplin's contest against his former employers, but it does not absolve him from further sessions with courts. As a result of the suit brought by William M. Seabury, attorney for the Essanay Company in Los Angeles, on May 18, he will have to answer to an action to recover $500,000 damages brought by the Essanay Company, as previously outlined in these columns.

CHAPLIN APPEALS.

An appeal from the decision of Supreme Court Justice Hotchkiss in the suit of Charles Chaplin, the Mutual comedian, against the V-L-S-E to restrain the release of the burlesque of "Carmen" has been filed by Nathan Burkan, counsel for Mr. Chaplin.

In carrying the case to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Chaplin asks for $100,000 damages and further demands an accounting from the V-L-S-E of the profits accruing from the release of the picture, which Chaplin alleges injured his reputation as a comedian.

RICHARD W. McFARLAND APPOINTED ASSISTANT TREASURER OF V-L-S-E.

At the last meeting of the board of directors of the V-L-S-E., it was formally announced that Richard W. McFarland, the Lubin New York representative, had been elected to the position of assistant treasurer of the Big Four, to succeed Paul Melies, who recently resigned. Mr. McFarland brings to the office a well rounded experience, acquired in the various managerial ends of theatrical enterprises.

His initiation into motion pictures was about twenty years ago when, as a next door neighbor, he helped Mr. Lubin carry his parlor furniture into the yard. At that time Mr. Lubin used his yard as a studio, his cellar as a laboratory, and his neighbors as actors.

JACK MULHALL JOINS UNIVERSAL.

Jack Mulhall has joined the Pacific Coast studios of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to play juvenile roles and already has commenced work with Miss Cleo Madison's company. He is considered one of the best juvenile types before the motion picture camera and has been with the Biograph Company for over three years. Before that time he had played in stock in various parts of the country.

"Who's Guilty"

Third and Fourth Numbers Uphold the Dignity of the New Pathe Series.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE present showing on the new series which is being produced for the program of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., by the Arrow Film Corporation promises that the social problems which are to be presented to the public by means of these films with the affix of "Who's Guilty?" will be presented in a manner both entertaining and profitable. The stars who have been chosen for the series, namely, Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore, have already proved themselves sufficiently magnetic.

Scene from "Who's Guilty?" (Pathe).

Number three under the title of "The Tangled Web" deals cleverly with the problem of a young woman whose guardian has with the object of pecuniary and social benefit tricked her into marriage with a man whom she does not love. Later when she discovers the true nature of the man she has married and the manner in which she has been tricked, she seeks revenge by working with her husband's enemies to bring about his financial ruin. The end of it all is that she and the man she really loves are shot dead by the husband, practically unbalanced under the stress of circumstances.

The fourth number, entitled "The Silent Shame," presents another domestic problem, that of the woman whose husband has ceased to love her. Discovering that she is in love with another man, the husband, with the aid of a dishonest lawyer, pretends to gain a divorce. When she has married the man she loves and has lived with him for some time she learns that she is still the legal wife of the other. After years have passed and she has lived in seclusion abroad, she returns to find her daughter about to be married to the man whom she has illegally married years before. An interesting number, well produced.

"The Battle of Hearts"

Exciting Fishing Village Melodrama by Fox—Masterful Hero Left Under Cloud, Wins Girl in Spite of All.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IN THE latest Fox melodrama, "The Battle of Hearts," the character of the hero, the masterful superman kind, belongs with a more recent type of story, and this character decidedly takes the development of the plot in charge. The heroine, too, is a captain of a fishing smack. Yet there are many of the good, sure-fire things in the incidents, and it will make a very acceptable offering (five reels long) for the average picture house. It is the kind of picture that people are sure to like. Oscar Apfel adapted it for the screen and directed it and his ability in putting over this kind of tale is beyond question.

At the start the hero is masterful. He is rich and the owner of a fishing fleet. The girl doesn't care for him and prefers Jo, the son of the lighthouse keeper. The hero tells her that she is his mate whether she is willing at present or not, for neither God, the devil nor man can take her from him. A storm wrecks his fleet and he has to begin again; but this doesn't take from him his determination. Now a band of smugglers is encamped there and Jo falls under their influence. He steals from his poor father and gets the hero blamed for it. The excitement has been built up by gradual degrees and gets more edge to it. One night Jo puts dope in his father's coffee and the lighthouse is not started. In the dark the smugglers get a load of booty in their cave; but the heroine's ship is wrecked. The hero rescues her and in an exciting group of incidents captures the band. The climax is tense. The whole will prove an acceptable offering for all kinds of exhibitors.

"Fate's Boomerang"

Mollie King Appears as Mountain Girl in Paragon-World Film Picture Presenting Conventional Story.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

EVEN to the concluding scenes, in which an unworthy wife is killed in order that the husband may be free to marry a loyal, untutored girl of the mountains, this five-part World Film drama runs true to a familiar form. It is an average offering, lacking distinguishing marks in plot construction, but well enough produced by Frank Crane, with Mollie King giving a quite appealing characterization of Zell, the ingenuous, pretty heroine. Then there is the unfailing attraction of picturesque backgrounds photographed in a mountainous country being penetrated by a railroad.

For dramatic contrast the attention of the audience is frequently shifted from the blameless life of the young engineer in charge of building the railroad to the frivolous existence of the wife he left behind because she was unwilling to forego the pleasures of society. Most of the characterization is rather elementary and the situations are obvious, though not necessarily ineffective.

Probably the most startling incident in the picture is the death ride of the wife, who, accompanied by a detective, has gone to the mountains to secure evidence on which she may divorce her husband. The drunken driver loses control of the horse and after a wild race down a rocky road on the edge of a precipice the rig overturns and the occupants, according to the story, are killed. With this thrilling happening, handled in an entirely realistic manner, the story virtually closes, for there never is any doubt about the engineer finding a more congenial mate in the person of little Zell. In fact, the picture might be more interesting if the outcome appeared less inevitable.

Miss King possesses the youthful appearance and assumes the childish spirit desirable for a character such as she is given here. Beyond that her performance suggests little comment, for notable acting is not required. June Elvidge is always successful in suggesting the nature of the frivolous, flirtatious wife, whereas Charles Gotthold has no difficulty in portraying the sterling qualities of the engineer. With the exception of a few scenes, photography is good.

"His Trust and His Trust Fulfilled"—A Civil War Drama in Two Parts—"The Blue or the Gray," a Single Reel.

Rviewed by Lynde Denig.

WHEN Griffith made "His Trust and His Trust Fulfilled" in 1911 the two reels were released separately under the titles now bracketed for the reissue of July fourth. While not designed as an Independence Day picture, it may be classed as a seasonable offering, in that considerable powder is burned in the first reel, the occasion being an engagement between Union and Confederate troops. For about five hundred feet we have a battle spectacle of no mean proportions, in which an officer, around whose family the story centers, is killed. A faithful old slave is entrusted with the care of the officer's little daughter, and henceforth the picture is concerned with his fulfillment of the trust.

Scene from "The Blue or the Gray" (Biograph).

Wilfred Lucas, playing the devoted negro, gives a capital characterization of the type of slave that we like to read about in southern fiction. Life is only of value to him in so far as it is of service to the two helpless women in his charge. When the child blossoms into a young woman and there is no money to pay for her education he draws upon his own meagre savings to send her away to boarding school. Presently even this fund is exhausted and the outlook appears rather gloomy until a handsome young cousin with money comes to marry the girl and relieve the faithful slave of his responsibility. Despite the number of years which have elapsed since their production, these two reels will stand comparison, on technical points, with those of a similar nature being made today. Moreover, the acting is of the best, with Claire McDowell, Dell Henderson, Dorothy West and Harry Hyde in the cast.

"The Blue or the Gray" is another Civil War drama, but quite different in tone. Here the dramatic action, and it is very dramatic, is based on the brutality of soldiers whose passions have been released by drink. Most of the scenes are laid in a southern home where the women are imperilled by Union officers. Donald Crisp, Alfred Paget, Robert Harron, Irene Howley and Mildred Manning are in the cast.

"Into the Primitive"

The Book of Robert Ames Bennet Vividly Visualized by Selig, with Kathlyn Williams, Guy Oliver and Harry Lonsdale in the Principal Roles—Ably Directed by T. N. Heffron.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

I CAN fearlessly recommened "Into the Primitive," a five-reel production by Selig, released through V-L-S-E, Inc. May 29, as an enthralling photodrama, in which the story, acting and capable direction are all worthy of praise.

No other producer could have furnished the wild animals that appear in it and used them with equally appropriate surroundings, as has been done by the owner of the Selig Zoo. We see the big black-maned lion stalk through the forest and the underbrush not only by ones, but sometimes by droves at a time, while leopards, monkeys and other wild denizens of the African forest—not omitting crocodiles in secluded, stagnant pools—strike our vision and complete the impression of primitive wildness. And these wild creatures never appear unless there is a particular reason for it; they play their part in the development of the story just as fittingly as do the human characters, and contribute to the creation of a perfect atmosphere for the action of the story.

This atmosphere has been made still more real by the settings given the filmed story by Director Heffron. The scene showing the hut of the three castaways during the tremendous hurricane that sweeps the jungle on the East African coast, one night, is the most realistic of its kind that I have ever seen in moving pictures. The havoc wrought on the trees and on the barricade in the vicinity—brought actually before our eyes as it takes place; the torrential downpour of rain, and the vivid flashes of lightning that reveal the fury of the storm form impressions that are akin to awe.

With artful touches Director Heffron has prepared the spectator for the approaching storm. He gives us a view of an angry sky through the forest treetops, and afterward we see Jenny Leslie (Kathlyn Williams), the girl castaway, walking restlessly in her sappling-netted hut, suffering from the moisture-laden, suffocating air.

Finely appropriate sea coast views that fit in well with the requirements of the story also reflect nice directing care on the part of Mr. Heffron.

The entire action of the photoplay is sustained by Kathlyn Williams, Guy Oliver and Harry Lonsdale, who appear, respectively, as Jenny Leslie, an American heiress; Thomas Blake an American civil engineer, who, through a turn of fortune, has become a wanderer and a drunkard, and the Hon. Cecil Winthrope, a pseudo nobleman who turns out to be nothing more than the valet of an English duke.

Miss Williams is positively rejuvenated in the part of Jenny Leslie. Never has she appeared more charming of face or in manner. The fine scorn that she shows for Thomas Blake at first, when all three are cast on a savage shore, after the shipwreck, must have hurt that worthy, but he never lets his face or manner show it. He is the boss of the castaways for their own salvation, and although the proud American heiress calls him a brute to his face, she finds out in the end that he is the gentleman and not the Hon. Cecil Winthrope, whom she had trusted.

Mr. Oliver's Thomas Blake is sturdily played. He is just overmastering enough to escape the charge of being brutal. The gradual restoration of the true manhood of the man who has been cheated of his fortune, and who, in turn, cheated himself of his character, is well drawn by Mr. Oliver.

Harry Lonsdale's Winthrope stands up well in contrast with the fine characterizations of Jenny Leslie and Thomas Blake.

Excellent photography prevails throughout.

With my review it will be interesting to read the following letter, written by Robert Ames Bennet, author of the book, to William N. Selig:

"Permit me to express to you my profound gratification over your splendid production of my book, 'Into the Primitive.' The Denver V-L-S-E staff courteously gave a private run of the film for me. I went in a hypercritical mood, for I had seen the stories of other writers sadly mangled in the filming. But this five-reel picture is magnificent in every respect—acting, animals, settings, scenario and photography.

Scene from "Into the Primitive" (Selig).

"I am taking the liberty of expressing my appreciation direct to Mr. Heffron for his wonderful artistry as director, and to Miss Williams for the charm of her appearance and acting. She not only plays the part to perfection, but she looks it, because of her beauty.

"Mr. Oliver and Mr. Lonsdale are no less perfect in their roles; the animals are a delight to a nature lover like myself; the photography is wonderful—in fact, there is everything to praise about the picture and not the slightest thing to criticise."

"Committee on Credentials" Completed.

Director Harry Carey and George Marshall have concluded the production of Peter B. Kyne's story, "The Committee on Credentials," in two reels, featuring Carey, with Olive Fuller Golden opposite. Carey and Marshall are now working on a new two reel Western drama, entitled "The Bludgeon Man." with Carey featured and Miss Golden opposite. This film play provides strong action for the company of Western actors and cowboys. The story is by Harvey Gates, of the Universal City staff.

"Her Husband's Wife"

Five-Reel Melodrama of Studio and Theatrical Life, Written and Directed by Ivan Abramson.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN PLACE of Husband read ex-Husband, and the cryptic nature of the title of Ivan Abramson's latest photoplay disappears. Taken by itself, such a title suggests French farce. Familiarity with Mr. Abramson's work, however, teaches that the writer of "Her Husband's Wife" deals only in serious dramatic material preferably that which contains plenty of popular punch. His latest photoplay has several lively goes with the Seventh Commandment, and, incidentally, hits the spectator a wallop between the eyes, when the present Mrs. James Gates is introduced to the first Mrs. James Gates and the fact is brought out that the two ladies are mother and daughter. Although floored, for the instant, by such a situation, one is bound to sit up and take notice of what follows. And the road to this dramatic knockout is not bathed in sunlight nor strewn with roses.

The action of the drama opens in Paris. The wife of a photoplay actor runs away to New York with a sculptor and leaves her six-year-old daughter with her father. Once in America, the lady throws over the French gentleman and becomes the wife of an American theatrical manager. Quickly tiring of him, Mrs. Gates has an affair with a man in her husband's employ, is found out and divorced, goes back to Paris to renew her relations with the sculptor (her first husband died shortly after she deserted him), returns to America to collect her alimony, finds that her second husband has married again, and that the new wife is her own daughter; the march of events leading up to this unusual situation not transgressing the laws of stage fiction laid down for dramas of this class. In her surprise, the mother blurts out the truth; then, retracts her statement, takes poison, and dies. Food aplenty in such a story for moral reflection—albeit, a bit strong in flavor. On its artistic side, the picture has rapidity of action, clear-cut character drawing, and holds to the main thread of its plot with gratifying constancy. A well-balanced cast has been intrusted with the acting. Sally Crute played the first Mrs. Gates and indicated the many moods of the woman, with ready skill. Mignon Anderson was an appealing figure as the daughter, and Augustus Phillips, Edward Mackey, Bradley Barker, William Bechtel, Arthur Law, Brindsley Shaw and little Kittens Reichart were always equal to the task assigned them. The author appeared in one of the minor roles.

"Reggie Mixes In," Five-Reel Fine Arts, and "The Sorrows of Love," Five-Reel Ince.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"REGGIE Mixes In" is delightfully imbued with Douglas Fairbanks, though a little less of him and a little more of Bonnie Sweet Bessie Love would give the flavor more delicacy. Not that his personality lacks interest. It is so strong and forceful that it suffers from a surfeit of those admirable qualities, admirable when they are delivered in nice proportion—his excess of enthusiasm carries its own condemnation. He is so ever-present that a story must be written for him, one that he can carry on his own shoulders, one that makes every move dependent upon his strong will, physical prowess and exhaustless energy. It must portray him as irresistible and superhuman, irrespective of logic or verisimilitude. He is now so well established in favor, a veritable motion-picture artist, that he can afford to appear in plays dealing less with surface aspects of character and those more subtle which penetrate underlying motives for action.

"Reggie," as impersonated by Fairbanks, is a wealthy college athlete with a penchant for adventure in walks of life hitherto unexplored by members of his family, those of the underworld, and he sallies forth with a pickeled-faced valet, who soon becomes pickeled indeed, to seek whom he may devour in a dance hall much frequented by murderous toughs. He there finds a fairy-like little dancer, "perfectly straight" in spite of her crooked environment, engaged in supporting a mother of decayed gentility. Of course Reggie rescues the little dancer from all kinds of perils and mixes it with the toughs, both singly and in groups. He is now in his element, but love for the little dancer decides him to return to civilization. He secretly provides her with a fortune, a supposed inheritance, tries her love to the utmost and reappears as a Prince Charming at the end. The story is very animated, contains a large number of elements of popularity, and it should prove a money-maker for producers and exhibitors.

"The Sorrows of Love."

"The Sorrows of Love" is the story of a girl brought up in an atmosphere of rigor and emotional suppression, that of a convent who slips out into a world of ill-suppressed emotion, that of Venetian struggle between a patrician class engaged in making oppressive laws and a working class clamoring in vain for justice. There her religious training inspires her to successfully advocate honorable methods instead of violent ones for oppressed working people, while she seems to be unable to apply her fine principles to her own conduct. She deserts her lover in a fit of suspicion, informs on the working people when they seek to redress their wrongs by revolution, and brings on the death of the man she loved, whom her suspicions deeply wronged. Having accomplished swiftly far more evil than good, she retires to the protecting shelter of a nunnery to repent at leisure.

The story is far from impressive in spite of its picturesque backgrounds, intelligent treatment and the strong interpretations of Miss Barriscale and Wedgewood Nowell. Barriscale is satisfactory, but not attractive, in her unattractive role. She is artistic in conduct and costume, but she neither suits the part, nor could it suit her. The play itself lacking any visible and vital motive or any modern reason for existence, the only chance to make it effective is through characterization, but characterization is not there. There is very little of interest to be revealed, hence the subtle qualities in which Miss Barriscale excels are wanting in the role to which she was assigned.

"The Fangs of the Tattler," the Eleventh Instalment of "The Social Pirates," and "A Bunch of Flivvers," a One-Reel "Ham" Comedy.

SOCIETY journals that derive their chief income from practicing the gentle art of blackmail, have been the subject of considerable dramatic literature this season. The "Tattler" of the eleventh instalment of the George Bronson

Howard serial is one of the publications that thrive by threatening to uncover the skeleton that is popularly supposed to be hidden in nearly every family closet. The editor of this particular disreputable sheet is a prominent society man, and his victims are members of his own set. He bribes the maid of a young woman to steal a package of compromising letters from her mistress. The lady has put this weapon in the hands of the editor by trying to help a friend, and is unable to pay the sum demanded as hush-money. Mona and Mary are called in, and a neat little plot is set in motion, by which the fangs of the "Tattler" are extracted in anything but a painless manner. The blackmailer's printing plant is made to look as if wrecked by a shot from one of the big guns at Verdun, and the proprietor is forced to evacuate the scenes of his nefarious means of livelihood.

The way in which Mona and Mary accomplish their object makes entertaining matter for the spectator and gives all good men and their wives an opportunity to rejoice at the downfall of a scoundrel. Director James W. Horne shows no abatement of his interest in the screening of the series, and Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby still do their excellent team work as the two heroines and, also, maintain their friendly rivalry in fetching frocks and frills. Frank Jonasson, Edward Olisbee and R. L. Dell play the male characters.

"A Bunch of Flivvers."

A great mystery is solved in this one-reel "Ham" comedy. For over twenty years many worthy persons have wondered in what part of the universe lay that Sargasso into which the wrecks of flivvers and sea-going taxies finally drift. The answer is simple. The Kalem company have cornered the flivver market and shipped them all to its Western studio to be used in the latest "Ham." They form a remarkable collection and one fraught with many dangers, but the intrepid Lloyd V. grasps the steering gear of each and every one and, like another Casabianca, does not desert his ship until it is blown from under him A lively and highly amusing reel, with Bud Duncan, A. Edmondson and Norma Nicholls, members of the crew.

"The Pursuing Vengeance"

Mystery Story Offering Many Complications and Swift Action—Handled by Unity Sales Corporation.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

ADAPTED from a story by Burton E. Stevenson, these five reels are well devised to arouse interest in a first rate story of crime, mystery and detective acumen; to maintain suspense up to the denouement and altogether to provide a very satisfactory hour and a quarter's entertainment. As in all mystery tales worthy of the name, author and director presuppose close attention on the part of the spectator, for an intelligent comprehension of the meaning of the swiftly moving scenes is dependent upon a clear comprehension of the characters and their varied purposes. To drop in on this picture after the first reel was underway and attempt to pick up the plot thread would be a task of no little difficulty; but carefully followed from the beginning, it is only fair to state that it is a photoplay of cumulative strength.

Sheldon Lewis, facile as ever at assuming the varied disguises so necessary if one is to achieve preeminence among photoplay criminals, acts Crochard, the instigator of numerous villainies that baffle the keenest minds in the police departments of New York and Paris. In the particular exploit chosen for "The Pursuing Vengeance," the center of mystery is concealed in a Boule cabinet, shipped from France to an American connoisseur. To all appearances it is a harmless piece of furniture; but as a matter of fact it is an extraordinarily evil contrivance that causes deaths at the rate of about one a reel. Marks on the back of one hand, seemingly punctured by poisoned prongs, are the only clues offered for the solution of the mystery.

Naturally, the audience is given occasional suggestions of the game Crochard is playing and is allowed to draw its own conclusions about the real history of the cabinet, supposed to contain love letters which a countess is intent upon recovering; but for a complete and correct solution it is best to wait for the concluding reel. Scenes are short, the action is snappy, the continuity is good and the acting of Mr. Lewis, Jane Meredith and Henry Mortimer suffices. Newspaper inserts and the typographical arrangement of the sub-titles might be improved. Martin Sabine directed.

"What Love Can Do"

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Featuring Adele Farrington in Part of Experienced Newspaper Woman.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

ADELE FARRINGTON, whose long experience on the legitimate stage has given her a certain deftness in character work, appears in this number as a trained newspaper woman, slightly passe, but possessing the attractions that are frequently found in a clever mentally alert woman. The characterization is excellent, but there is a break in it toward the middle of the story which seriously weakens the production as a whole.

Miss Farrington first appears as an actress searching for an engagement. She has written a novel which she leaves with the theatrical manager, who afterward decides to dramatize her story and let her play the leading role. This is the part of Lil Magill, the cleverest newspaper woman in her city.

The story of Lil Magill carries a strong heart interest in the opening scenes. She is beloved by the city editor, known as "Old Grouch," but for five years has been the friend of Paige, owner of the paper, whom she thinks will marry her. Paige, who has a grown daughter in California is playing fast and loose with Lil. She discovers this and decides to call him to account.

While it is perhaps true that "hell hath no fury like a woman scorned," it seemed that Lil's sudden filling up on liquor and her rush to Paige's home with a revolver in her handbag with which to kill him, was overdone. Cutting out the drinking scenes, or toning them down considerably, would hold the sympathy of the observer to better advantage. Straight dramatic handling in place of exaggerated melodrama, would have made the scenes in the Paige home much stronger. The strike feature is quite well presented, though the continuity is not maintained at all times.

The production, written by Gertrude H. Andrews and directed by Jay Hunt, is one of moderate strength.

"Pirates of the Air"

Two-Reel L-KO. Comic Number Makes Feature of a Race Between Two Aeroplanes in Midair.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS two-reel comic production makes an interesting feature of a race between two aeroplanes. The fact that they are suspended in a studio, with a moving background of clouds behind them, does not materially detract from the burlesque. When Alice Howell climbs in her agile way from one aeroplane to another, the scene carries very well for burlesque purposes.

The aeroplane race is the strong feature of the number. The opening scenes, taken in a country inn, contain considerable laughter, but the humor is not in the best tone. The frequent squirting of water and soup out of the mouths of waiters and customers is overdone and the kitchen scenes lack cleanliness.

The plot centers about the theft of a newly invented aero-plane. The waitress in the hotel learns that it is hidden upstairs and puts her friend, the secret service man, wise. This leads up to the double flight in the air. Simultaneously with this, an automobile on the ground below tears through houses and fences.

Fatty Voss and Phil Dunham are also in the cast. The number is not as strong as some previous ones, but is better than the average comic in certain respects.

"Bobbie of the Ballet"

Louise Lovely Featured in Appealing Five-Part Melodrama for Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE story of the pretty ballet girl whose mother died leaving her the care of two small children is nicely suited to portrayal in film; nor could a more appropriate one have been chosen in which to exploit the charms and talents of Louise Lovely. The original story by Grant Carpenter was put in scenario shape by Ida May Park, and produced by Joseph De Grasse with a cast consisting, in addition to Miss Lovely, of Jay Belasco, Jean Hathaway, Gretchen Lederer, Gilmore Hammond Lon Chaney, Lule Warrington and two exceptionally clever children.

There is a wholesomeness about the way in which the production has been staged, and there is never a moment when the moral balance is lost sight of. The manner in which Bobbie becomes the butt of circumstances and is tossed at last to safety in the home of the Stimsons, whose son she marries, is portrayed in a distinctly appealing way. Bobbie's struggle to evade what the children term the "'doption people" and the quaint scenes in which Hook Hoover, a criminal who accidentally finds refuge in Bobbie's attic room, appears, will please old and young. The consistency with which the story works out the effective human details which have been interpolated, together with excellent photography are prime factors in making the picture one of the most enjoyable of the season. In the opening of the production there might be an objection to the number of apparently unnecessary closeups of Miss Lovely which were evidently suggested to the director by the unusual beauty of the star. And in the minds of some spectators an objection might arise to the use of the criminal as a benefactor. The fact that the production is developed along melodramatic lines, however, will in a measure justify the employment of an extreme situation.

FRANK BORZAGE has learned the happy faculty of making western pictures that the public like, clean and wholesome, containing touches both of comedy and tragedy combined with simple, near-to-nature atmosphere.

"Jack," in which Borzage himself plays the title role, presents a simple tale of human hearts. It dabbles not at all with problems of a more serious nature, and the director has evidently concentrated on developing the single thread upon which hang the destinies of the characters of the play. Anna Little plays the role of a society girl who goes west with high-flown ideas concerning the homage due her from other people, especially the plain man of the west. Jack, a cowboy on the Gilmore ranch where Frances goes to visit succeeds in bringing her to her senses, a mutual affection springs up between them, and upon her return to school, Frances gives her promise to marry Jack. The remainder of the story concerns itself with a near tragedy owing to Frances suddenly changing her mind. Others of the cast are Jack Richardson, Dick La Reno and Margaret Nichols.

"Sawdust Love."

Billy Armstrong and Tommy Hayes, Mlle. Ottawa, Carl Lang, Ed. Roberts and a number of others have a place in this truly amusing farce comedy which takes the form of a dream in which Simpkins and Jigger are transported to a circus heaven. Simpkins becomes the hero of the day, and the hit of the circus, and is about to take unto himself a sweetheart in the person of the circus queen, when he awakes to find it all a dream. During the course of the dream Simpkins performs some amusing acrobatic feats. The picture will be amusing to any audience, and is reasonably free from vulgarity.

Peggy Hyland Scores in Her Famous Players Debut in an Adapted Henry Arthur Jones Play.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

A YOUNG woman introduced to us as "a noted English stage favorite" bids fair to become an American film favorite. Peggy Hyland, in "Saints and Sinners," from the play by Henry Arthur Jones, and the latest Famous Players release, shows marked adaptability for film work. She has intelligence and charm of personality. She shows deftness of touch in lighter moments and real strength in sterner situations.

"Saints and Sinners" is a play of English country life converted to an American locale. It is a simple story, devoid of the spectacular, but nevertheless possessing human elements that make for interest. Letty Fletcher, the daughter of a minister, through her infatuation for a man against whom she has been warned by her father, is guilty of an indiscretion—an indiscretion that is sinless but is sinister in aspect. That Letty does not fall is due to inherent force of character, the result of home teachings. The picture is wholesome in tone in spite of the villainies portrayed by the libertinous Fanshawe and by the avaracious Hoggard.

The cast is adequate. Standing out are Albert Tavernier as the gentle, fatherly old minister; Estar Banks as the equally gentle spinster housekeeper, and Clarence Handysides as the banker who would employ in forcing the minister to violate his trusteeship of an estate the purloined evidence of what on its face was a major misstep on the part of Letty.

The exteriors are staged in picturesque spots in Florida by James Kirkwood, and the subject is splendidly photographed. "Saints and Sinners" is a good picture.

"The Thousand Dollar Husband"

A Meritorious Lasky Production in Which Blanche Sweet and Tom Forman Take the Leading Parts.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THERE is a good deal of genuine pathos and not a little of genuine humor in this play. The story deals with the unselfish love and devotion of a girl in an humble station of life. The object of her combined affection and devotion is a young man whose social standing is very far above her own. How the seemingly unbridgable gulf is finally bridged by mutual esteem and love is very prettily though at times somewhat diffusely told in the development of the plot.

Blanche Sweet plays the part of the naive and unsophisticated servant girl who through an access of unexpected good fortune suddenly becomes wealthy. The young man whom she has learned to love faces disgrace and poverty brought on by his own fault when the girl comes to his rescue willing to sacrifice not only her money but her entire happiness to the salvation of the youth she loves. At first the latter accepts the sacrifice without any thought of his own obligations in the matter. Gradually, however, he begins to realize that he owes something to the girl. The latter's views and character develop with her improved opportunities and this of course aids in the drawing together of the young souls.

All the usual adjuncts and characteristics of the Lasky school of art are found in the picture. Theodore Roberts endows a subordinate part in the story with his usual power and skill. Blanche Sweet shows more cleverness than usual in the portrayal of a semi-comic character, while Tom Forman gives a most plausible rendition of a part, which needed much skill to make it acceptable to the audience.

"The Fool's Game" (Horsley).

Desert land close to Newhall, California, just outside of the beautiful San Fernando valley, will serve as the setting for a number of the scenes in the forthcoming David Horsley production, "The Fool's Game," an unusual story from the pen of Crane Wilbur, who will also be seen as the star in this picture.

"The Fool's Game" is a story which may be termed different. It appears to be the best work of Mr. Wilbur and besides providing for him an entirely new character for portrayal, it introduces Miss Gaston and Mr. Oaker in roles which they are suited for.

In the cast there are but three characters of prominence. The star and author will be seen as a multi-millionaire of about middle age, big hearted but stern indeed when he is dealing with an impostor. He falls desperately in love with a pretty face which fails to betray a life of laziness and sham affection. That part falls to Miss Gaston.

Mr. Oaker is called upon to shoulder a part which gives him unlimited opportunity for fine acting. He, too, is of the lazy calibre, and is the rival of the rich man for the hand of the woman. Work he hates, but he loves to "work" others. With the girl a scheme is launched whereby she shall marry the millionaire for a price, to soon after have her "love" melt and with her new wealth marry the lazy youth.

The scheme is successful, but before the woman can carry out her desire to overthrow the man who really loves her, she is unexpectedly surprised by her husband and defeat is handed to her. Then comes the weary hours, days and weeks on the desert with the working up of the "Fool's Game" to the great climax of the love test.

It's called "A Matrimonial Martyr," and features Ruth Roland, the charming star of the "Who Pays?" series, "The Red Circle" serial, the Gold Rooster play, "Comrade John," the forthcoming Gold Rooster play, "Sultana," etc. Andrew Arbuckle, the "Smiling Sam" of "Red Circle" fame; Daniel Gilfether, Balboa's best character actor; Marguerite Nichols, of "Who Pays?"; "Little Mary Sunshine, popularity; Mollie McConnell, the Balboa grandame, and R. Henry Gray are numbered in the supporting cast. "A Matrimonial Martyr" was produced by the Balboa company for Pathe.

"Hungry Hearts" (Vim).

Woes of a penniless artist whose model is an heiress, but doesn't know it, give a sprightly turn to the events which succeed each other rapidly in "Hungry Hearts," the Vim comedy release of June 15. A patron wishes to buy a full-length study of the girl en deshabille. Rather than submit her beauty to the gaze of alien eyes, the artist destroys the picture when temptation proves too strong. For this and other acts of faithfulness he wins a rich reward.

OTTO THE HERO (Lubin), May 22.—The valiant gentleman who hires a pair of thugs to assist him in acting the hero, is not a novel character in the stage fiction. Jack O'Neil has followed a well blazed trail, in this one-reel comedy. The situations are always amusing, however, and D. L. Don is the right actor for the title role. George Egan, Bernard Seigel, Florence Williams and Patsey De Forest act the remaining parts.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 41, 1916 (Selig), May 22.—U. S. troops camp in streets of El Paso; Flora Pageant, Vicksburg, Miss.; auto race at Sheepshead Bay; Naval Reserve diving, Chicago; Glen Springs, Tex., scene of Mexican attack; parade at Navy Yard, Charleston, Mass.; Preparedness Parade, New York.

THE COST OF HIGH LIVING (Vitagraph), May 22.—In this one-reel comedy, written by Joseph F. Poland, a young college chap, tries to run away from the girl picked out for him by his friends,with the usual results; he falls in love with her before he learns that she is the lady he is trying to avoid. The picture makes an entertaining offering, and is acted by Wm. Duncan, Corinne Griffith, Carmen Phillips, Edgar Keller and Anne Schaefer.

HAM'S BUSY DAY (Kalem), May 23.—In this one-reel farce Ham and Bud becomes inmates of a hospital and rivals for the hand of one of the nurses. The comedy is of the "rough house" order and was produced by Harry Edwards.

THE CECROPIA MOTH, AND TOM THE TAMER AND KID KELLY (Edison), May 24.—This split-reel is made up of five hundred feet of cleverly photographed educational film and a half-reel of amusing cartoon comedy.

THE BOGUS GHOST (Kalem), May 24.—Ethel Teare has the leading role in this one-reel comedy. As a young woman in need of a job, she secures a position with a pair of fake mediums and plays ghost for them. A love affair in which the lady medium takes part and tries to capture the ghost's young man is another comedy motive. The picture is spiritedly acted and contains a number of laughs.

A BABY GRAND (Kalem), May 26.—Because a family has a baby grand in the house, that is no sign they have a grand baby. It is this mistake that creates the comedy in this one-reel Sis Hopkins, and Author Frank Howard Clark has turned out a laughable farce. Rose Melville's grin is as guileless as ever, and the members of the supporting company, including Henry Murdock, do the same dependable work.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE (Selig), May 25.—Judge Thomson of Cihcago, acts the part of Solomon; McKinney Springs, Tex., U. S. soldiers pursue Mexican bandits; opening of concrete bridge, Sacramento, Cal.; searching Mexicans at El Paso; opening day at Brighton Beacn, Cal.; American prisoners capture their guards at Deemers, Mex.; pupils of school at Morgan Park, Ill., act like soldiers.

THE MISSING MILLIONAIRE (No. 9 of "The Social Pirates") (Kalem), May 22.—A review of this installment of the George Bronson Howard serial was printed in the issue of May 27, page 1534. Two unscrupulous stock manipulators have a millionaire confined in an asylum, while they raid one of his railroad holdings. Mona and Mary come to the rescue. Familiar material but well constructed.

PRISONERS OF CONSCIENCE (Lubin), May 25.—A review of this three-reel photoplay was printed in the issue of June 3, page 1710. The picture is a modern melodrama, in which a man and a woman sacrifice their own happiness when they learn that the woman's husband, who they thought dead, is still alive.

THE FLIRTING BRIDE (Knickerbocker), May 26.—A comedy situation, introducing some melodrama in the last reel, is reasonably well handled in this three-part picture, reviewed in the issue June 3d. Jackie Saunders is particularly attractive in the title role.

THE TEST OF CHIVALRY (Selig), May 22.—The outstanding virtue of the leading characters in this three-reel photoplay is their lack of selfishness. None of them thinks of himself first, the women of the cast being as ready as the men to sacrifice their own happiness. The story is an earnest and skilful piece of writing by Elizabeth R. Carpenter, and has been effectively produced by Wm. Robert Daly, Fritzi Brunette and Edward J. Piel play the leads, and Vivian Reed, James Bradbury, Wm. Scott, Frank Clark and Lillian Hayward complete the cast.

THE CONDEMNATION (Essanay), May 23.—A man's unreasoning jealousy forms the groundwork of this two-reel drama. The sequence of events leading up to the climax where the jealous husband is about to shoot an innocent man is well put together, the characters being of good social position. The sets are mostly handsome interiors. Neil Craig, Darwin Karr, Edmund F. Cobb and Jane Thomas comprise a quartet of efficient principals.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

BOBBIE OF THE BALLET (Bluebird), June 12.—A five-part melodrama featuring Louise Lovely. The play is clean and wholesome, treating of the struggle of a ballet girl whose mother dies leaving her with the care of two children. The manner in which circumstances toss her about has been told entertainingly. A full review of the production will be found on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 73 (Gaumont), May 24.—A diversified number containing glimpses of the New York "Preparedness" parade, motor races at Sheepshead Bay, Suffrage envoys in Washington and war sidelights in Europe and on the Mexican border.

PREPAREDNESS (Cub), May 26.—This is an amusing farce comedy, featuring George Ovey. Jerry, in love with the daughter of a Southern colonel, finds a troublesome rival in a policeman. In seeking to rid himself of the policeman he hitches one end of a rope to his rival's belt and the other to a wagon, thus hoisting the policeman to the top of a telegraph pole. The close of the story shows Jerry being conveyed to the police station. Very funny.

REEL LIFE, NO. 4 (Gaumont), May 28.—An excellent number of the mutual Magazine in Film showing a total eclipse of the sun as seen at the Paris, France, observatory, wild life in the Florida Everglades, including the Sacred Ibis, the herons, the egret, the Diamond Back rattlesnake, the King snake and the water moccasin. The humane execution of animals by the Animal Rescue League of Boston, the operating room in the Angell Memorial Hospital at Boston, showing a couple of cases where ailing dogs are being attended, and a kittenless cat mothering young chicks and ducks are also exceedingly interesting items.

NATIONAL NUTS (Vogue), May 28.—An amusing baseball farce with Paddy McGuire, Ben Turpin and Rena Rogers in the leading roles. Jeff, a substitute pitcher, in love with the daughter of a multimillionaire, plots to ruin the chances of Strikeout Murphy, who is admired by the pretty maid. The umpire, who has been bribed by Jeff to put arsenic on the ball, confesses to the fact, and Strikeout Murphy wins in the love match.

SHY THIRTY CENTS (Vogue), May 30.—A Rube Miller comedy, done in characteristic burlesque style. The gypsy camp makes a good setting. The hero tries to get the $1 ransom money in order to procure the girl's release. A keg of dynamite plays an important part. This comes under the head of entertaining nonsense; it contains laughable spots.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 38 (Gaumont), May 31.—An excellent series of scenes taken on the ascent of Pike's Peak, on the famous cog railway. This tourist trip has been pictured in films before, but is splendidly picturesque and worth seeing again. A half reel subject.

ESCAPADES OF ESTELLE (Gaumont), May 31.—On same reel with above. Estelle, a buxom negro girl, is thrown into the water while fishing. A goat eats up her clothes while she is drying them. These animated drawings are clever and laughable.

SAWDUST LOVE (Cub), June 2.—This farce comedy, in which Billy Armstrong is featured, will be found unusually entertaining. Simpkins and his pal, in a dream, are transported to the scene of a circus where the most amusing occurrences take place. A review of the film will be found on another page of this issue.

PETERSON'S PITIFUL PLIGHT, (Falstaff), June 3.—This pictures the adventures of a young business man, who marries while up to his ears in debt. His creditors pursue him constantly and he pretends they are relatives. There are not enough plot complications in this; it is only mildly interesting as it stands.

'IMA A KNUTT GETS A BITE (Beauty), June 4.—Orral Humphrey is the central figure in this comedy, which will be found very entertaining. Ima Knutt, a peculiar type of New England farmer, is scrutinized closely by his wife. One day Ima is persuaded to attend a Sunday school picnic at the beach. Here he gets into trouble over the pretty ladies who cavort in the water and on the beach in bathing suits of the briefer sort. In an escapade during which he follows the girls into the water a big crab takes a death grip on his toes. This is really very amusing. A fall off the pier by Ima is taken advantage of to interpolate a short bit of cartoon work, showing what happens to him at the bottom of the sea.

THE RECLAMATION (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe), May 25.—A five-part American, featuring Winnifred Greenwood and Franklin

Ritchie. The production is well made and attractive. It abounds in consistent and interesting action, and deals with the attempt of a wealthy land owner to gain control of the water rights in the arid belt in which his property lies. To avoid the ruin of their prospects the older settlers conspire to outwit the opposing side. This is done indirectly by the clever manipulating of the situation by the daughter of one of the men.

JACK (Mustang), May 26.—A two-part western drama, directed by Frank Borzage, who also plays the title role. Anna Little, playing the feminine lead, portrays intelligently the character of a society girl who comes west for a visit and looks in vain for the trifling attentions paid her by male friends in the east. Dick La Reno, Jack Richardson and Margaret Nichols are also in the cast. A full review of this interesting production will be found on another page of this issue.

THE KAFFIR'S GRATITUDE (Centaur), May 27.—A two-part production from the Horsley studios, featuring William Clifford and Margaret Gibson. The story, which treats of how a young girl journeys to Cape Colony to marry her lover and is pursued and kidnapped by a would-be suitor, is told rather too much in the narrative style to be classed with legitimate drama. There are a number of minor details to be criticised, such as the wearing of high-heeled shoes in the saddle. A splendid old lion figures in the latter part of the picture.

THE RELEASE OF DAN FORBES (American), May 29.—A two-reel subject, by Kenneth B. Clarke, featuring Wm. Stowell, Helen Rosson and Harry Von Mater. The plot is conventional to the extent that it concerns a returned convict, who barely escapes being sent back for murder. The construction, however, is unusually good and some quite strong dramatic effects are obtained. The development is natural and unforced, and when the tenser scenes occur they are effective. Familiar in plot material, but well handled.

THE NYMPH (Thanhouser), May 30.—A two-reel number, by Philip Lonergan, featuring Barbara Gilroy, Thos. Curran and Robert Vaughn. It is the story of an artist who finds a fisher girl bathing off the rocks. He paints her picture in the nude, after she has indignantly refused to pose for him. Later he exhibits it in the city, and the girl's fiance takes a very proper revenge, by punishing the artist and slashing the picture. Miss Gilroy is attractive in the part of the girl. This is not an especially strong subject, but tells a good running story and holds the attention well throughout.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

BOBBY BUMPS GOES FISHING (Bray Studios), June.—There is rather more of a comedy story here than one usually finds in cartoon drawings and it has been very cleverly handled by Earl Hurd. Bobby and his father are assisted in the fun-making by a dog and a cat, portrayed in a distinctly humorous guise. The reel closes with one of E. L. Ditmars' nature studies, "Our Animal Friends and Foes," showing how field pests do thousands of dollars' worth of damage to crops. Interesting as the scenes are, some of those giving close-ups of a black snake are too repellant for mixed audiences.

PICTOGRAPHS (Paramount), June.—"The Making of a Sailor," started in an earlier issue, is continued here with intimate views of life on a battleship. In the Better Babies section, a plea is made for the right of every child to profit by a summer vacation in the country with all that it means in the way of opportunities for a first hand education. A section of considerable instructive value shows how various minor injuries may be treated.

SIBERIA, THE VAST UNKNOWN, NO. 7 (Pathe), May 15.—In this number of the Siberian series is presented an unusual scene in the rounding up of possibly 10,000 reindeer by the Eskimo herders. They are then lasooed for the purpose of clipping their ears as a mark of identity. A most remarkable and enjoyable number. On the same reel with "On the Island of Luzon."

ON THE ISLE OF LUON (Philippine Islands), May 15.—A series of interesting views on this beautiful island, showing the primitive methods employed by the natives in attempting to follow out progressive ideas such as irrigating the land. On the same reel with "Siberia, the Vast Unknown, No. 7."

LUKE'S LATE LUNCHERS (Rolin), May 22.—A laughable slapstick comedy, in which Luke handles people and things about the restaurant in which he is employed with amusing indifference. Any audience will be pleased with this film, which contains surprisingly little that is vulgar.

LEAP YEAR (Pathe), May 22.—In this animated cartoon by Rube Goldberg, an unusually unattractive feminine makes desperate attempts to trap a husband. On the same reel with "How to Bring Up a Child."

WHO'S GUILTY, NO. 3 (Arrow), May 22.—"The Tangled Web" is the title of the third of the filmed stories dealing with crimes of circumstance. The problem presented in this number questions whether or not a woman who has been tricked into a loveless marriage is justified in revenging herself. The picture has been directed by Lawrence B. McGill in a capable manner and is a thoroughly enjoyable production.

THE IRON CLAW, NO. 13 (Feature), May 22.—"The Hidden Face" brings us to an interesting point in the story of "The Iron Claw" serial, where Margery Golden learns, with great joy, the identity of the Laughing Mask, while we are still left guessing, firmly believing, however, that we also have the question solved. Margery is again called upon to hide this mysterious personage, this time in her own apartments. This is an intensely interesting number.

WHO'S GUILTY, NO. 4 (Arrow), May 29.—"The Silent Shame" deals with the problem of the woman whose husband has ceased to love her. Anna Nilsson plays a double role opposite Tom Moore. As mother and daughter in a play presenting a peculiar and unusual situation in which the man to whom the supposedly divorced wife has been married, later becomes engaged to the daughter, Miss Nilsson does good work. This number has been elaborately staged and will be found enjoyable.

NEVER AGAIN, EDDIE (Nestor), June 5.—A farcical comedy, by J. Lewis, in which the young wife and her brother dress up to turn tables on the flirtatious young husband. Billie Rhodes appears in boy's clothes. This makes an amusing offering. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are also in the cast.

HIS LITTLE STORY (Imp), June 6.—Matt Moore appears in this number as a tramp, who tells a sad story in a wine room to a chance visitor and the waiter. While telling the tale he deftly abstracts the man's watch and the waiter's money. This holds the interest closely and has a really humorous windup.

THE SEA LILY (Big U), June 8.—A pleasing sea tale, by Burton C. Law. Thomas Jeqerson, Zoe Bech, Frank Newberg, Marjorie Ellison and the author appear. The keeper of the light adopts a little girl he finds floating after a wreck. Later a pretty love story develops. The settings and plot are attractive.

THE CODE OF HIS ANCESTORS (Rex), June 9.—A pleasing subject, featuring Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips, Charles Ogle, Lois Alexander and others. The young husband surprises his wife's former lover by serving up brace of revolvers in a soup toureen. The check feature is handled a little vaguely, but there is enough originality in the main situation to make the number a good one.

BETRAYED BY A CAMERA (Powers), June 10.—A rather pleasing little number in which some children get into a moving picture unawares. The actors are also caught shaking dice by the camera, and the manager's wife is pictured flirting with the leading man. Not much plot, but a fairly amusing number.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THE SCORPION'S STING (Victor), June 9.—This three-reel number, produced by Percy Nash and presented by an English company, is melodramatic in tone, but not the intense sort of melodrama that appeals most strongly. It never rises to any great dramatic height and the settings and presentation are not particularly good. It depicts the career of an ex-convict who sells his soul to the devil for power and riches. The devil appears to him in person at intervals during the story. The closing scenes contain considerable action and are the strongest in the offering. As a whole, it is but mildly interesting.

AS IN A DREAM (Rex), June 4.—A three-reel subject, by L. V. Jefferson, featuring Sydney Ayres, Doris Pawn, Olive Fuller Golden, Richard Sterling and others. The story is not very strong in certain respects, there being considerable lack of continuity in the opening scenes. The hero is a preacher in a slum mission house. He saves the daughter of a factory owner, who is suffering from loss of memory and is about to become the victim of a wealthy young despoiler. The contrasts of wealth and poverty are well shown; the story itself is familiar in theme and only mildly entertaining.

THE CAGE MAN (Bison), June 10.—A two-reel number, by Harold E. Burr, featuring C. Raymond as a convict. Others in the cast are Hayward Mack and Roberta Wilson. The story of the convict's past is shown in a series of flashbacks—how he was successful in love over a rival, his dissipation after marriage, and the shooting of a policeman in a fit of jealous rage. He returns, after years in prison, to find his former wife married to the rival and living happily. This theme is a very old one and there is not much novelty in treatment. At the same time the offering is quite well presented.

THE MADCAP (Red Feather), June 5.—A five-reel production, based on a story by George Gibbs. It features Flora Parker De Haven in the part of a rich young girl in search of happiness. She falls in love with an artist and travels with him on foot through France, he painting portraits and she singing. This is uniformly artistic throughout and makes a strong appeal to the eye. It is slow in action during the first three reels, but contains some good dramatic scenes in the last two reels. The love story is complicated by the intrusion of a second woman, who tries to create a scandal and almost succeeds. Slight in plot, but unusually pleasing in a pictorial way.

THE HOUSE OF MYSTERY (Universal Special), May 19.—No. 5 of the "Peg o' the Ring" series. The burning of the circus tents and the attending excitement make a good feature. Peg is carried away from danger in the box by Lund, Jr. Later he falls unconscious and the box is taken by the gang to its headquarters, a mysterious building full of trapdoors and other devices. Lund, Jr., follows and battles once more with the gang in hand-to-hand fashion. There is no plot action in this, but the incidents are quite sensational and entertaining.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 41, 1916 (Vitagraph), May 23.—Coliseum, Chicago, ready for Republican Convention; Senator Warren G. Hastings; Theodore Roosevelt; Russian soldiers in France; school girls play basketball, Philadelphia; launch of U. S. supply ship, Charleston, Mass.; Suffrage envoys in Washington; dog kennels at Redwood, Cal.; Founders' Day parade, Newark, N. J.; opening of bathing season, Venice, Cal.; blasting stumps, Melrose, Mass.; militia on Mexican border; flood, Rochester, N. Y.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 42 (Vitagraph), May 26.—Marathon race at New York; nursing bottles for dogs, Washington; Military mass, Charlestown, Mass.; same service at Navy Yard, Philadelphia; Governor Whitman kills censorship bill; Russian soldiers in Paris; U. S. Battleship Oklahoma, New York; outdoor dancing, Boston; military review, Sheepshead Bay; the Dublin roats.

World-Equitable.

FATE'S BOOMERANG (Brady) Made), May 29.—A story of the faithfulness of an uneducated mountain girl in contrast to the selfishness of a society woman, the wife of an engineer, is adequately presented in these five reels, reviewd lswhre in this issu. The picture is convntional, but not uninteresting, as acted by Mollie King, Charles Gotthold and June Elvidge.

Miscellaneous.

THE PURSUING VENGEANCE (Unity), May.—A five-part mystery picture handled by the Unity Sales Corporation. The story holds the attention and was adequately produced. A review appears elsewhere in this assue.

CASEY'S SERVANTS (Reserve Photoplay), May.—One-reel farce by Johnnie and Emma Ray that is a laugh-maker. There is plot and idea in it. A longer review will be found on page 1534, issue of May 27, 1916.

CASEY, THE WHITE WING (Reserve Photoplay). May.—One-reel farce by Johnnie and Emma Ray that will amuse. A longer notice of it will be found on page 1534, issue of May 27, 1916.

CASEY'S DREAM (Reserve Photoplay), May.—Farce by Johnnie and Emma Ray. It has liittle plot and no real comedy idea. A longer notice will be found on page 1534, issue of May 27, 1916.

CASEY'S KIDS (Reserve Photoplay), May.—Farce by Johnnie and Emma Ray. It is a collection of slap-stick incidents with little plot behind it. There are a number of laughs in it. For a longer review see page 1534, issue of May 27, 1916.

"The Return of Eve" (Essanay).

Adam was the first leading man, but it remained for Eve to conceive the first plot and to do the directing. Since then several billions of Eves have been creating plots and doing the directing. And when the directing results disastrously, or there's static in the negative, or something else goes wrong in the scheme of things, the modern Eve blinks innocently and passes the blame to Adam—and he, poor spineless creature, takes it. Nevertheless, the great original plot remains the most absorbing of all the seven, or thirty-seven, or whatever number it is that have come after.

Therefore, in this year of revivals—Shakespearean and otherwise, it is fitting that the marvelous initial drama be revived—but in a modern guise, of course, and so it will be when Essanay presents its new five-act feature "The Return of Eve," starring Edna Mayo.

This story by Lee Wilson Dodd is one of the most truly delightful topics of which filming has ever been attempted. The plot is startling in its theme and daring in its development.

Imagine two babes living in the wilderness and attaining the age of 19 years without ever seeing their own kind. Speedily transplant these two children of nature to a New York drawing room. Hurl their honest hearts and pure minds into society's sea of shame. What happens? In their disgust they return to their Eden.

But, having tasted of the world, Eden is a dreary place There are no cabarets, no automobiles, no pretty clothes or jewels. Both are honest, without deceit and naturally perfect. This is no fun, so they—being essentially human—return to civilization and its sins.

A powerful cast is to be selected to support Miss Mayo in this production. Arthur Berthelet, who has just completed "Sherlock Holmes," with William Gillette, will direct the new feature.

Popular Pictures Develops Business.

With the beginning of their new policy, to release one feature a week, beginning September first, the offices of the Popular Pictures Corporation have become unusually busy. There is a lively demand for franchises on the part of producers who desire to market their pictures through the Popular's line of exchanges, and President Milton M. Goldsmith finds himself the center of unusual activities. The work of planning out a complete line of Exchanges that will thoroughly cover the United States and Canada is now in progress.

The first picture to be handled by this new organization will be "The House of Mirrors," which will also be the first picture produced by the Rialto Film Corp. It was directed by Marshall Farnum and is a story replete with thrilling and interesting situations. The story is by Frederick Chapin.

Five Strong Knickerbockers.

Unusually well balanced and varied is the Knickerbocker Star Features program for June, which, in addition to the five-reel feature, "Pay Dirt," already announcd, includes five strong three-reel dramas.

"Shadows," a drama of modern social conditions, featuring Frank Mayo and Lillian West, tells a strong story of the lengths to which a man's hopeless passion for a girl drove him and the unfortunate victims of his fury.

"The Stained Pearl," featuring Henry King, is a sensational tale of the sea, whose swift and vivid action centers about a bloodstained gem. It is scheduled for release on June 9.

"An Old Man's Folly," featuring Daniel Gilfether and Marguerite Nichols, is the release of June 16. It is a story of a father who endangers his daughter's happiness by placing himself in the power of an adventuress. An unscrupulous detective gives a startling turn to the course of events.

A new Knickerbocker star will be seen for the first time in "The Ancient Blood," a remarkable drama of the Canadian Northwest. Virginia Norden has the role of a half-breed girl, who saves the life of a young Englishman, marries him, and is later introduced into high society when he inherits a title. In the strange environment she fails to hold his love, and returns to her mountains, where she finds happiness. This is the release of June 23.

Frank Mayo and LilHan West are featured in "The Master of the House," the release of June 30. This is an unusual story of a society reporter who, following a clue accidentally picked up, is brought by a remarkable chain of circumstances to an uninhabited island off the coast, in company with a young millionaire whom she has the best of reasons for believing to be a burglar. In his absence from home the burglar entertains his aunt and cousin. Remarkable double exposures are a feature of this picture.

USING SIMPLEX MACHINES.

Globe theater, Broadway and Forty-sixth street, New York, is now showing George Kleine's serial masterpiece, "Billie Burke" in "Gloria's Romance." Mr. Kleine, the man who knows, selected Simplex Machines to attain results. Go and see some projection; it is worth while.

Charles Urban of London, who brought over the feature: "How Britain Prepared," which is shown in the Lyceum theater, Forty-fifth street, uses Simplex Projectors.

Mary MacLaren, New Star in Bluebird

LOIS WEBER, whose craftsmanship has done so much for the success of Bluebird Photoplays, has accomplished a lasting benefit to the program by "discovering" Mary MacLaren, the young star who makes what is practically her first screen appearance in "Shoes," the sociological problem Bluebird has prepared for release June 26.

When Miss Weber was writing the scenario of "Shoes," from the Stella Wynne Herron story in Collier's, Miss MacLaren applied for work as an extra. Impressed by her style and peculiar type of beauty, Miss Weber arranged to give her a "bit" in "Where are My Children?" which the Smalleys were at that time producing.

Mary MacLaren.

The more Miss Weber considered Miss MacLaren for the leading role in "Shoes," the more firmly was she convinced of the young girl's fitness. It was finally decided not alone to give Miss MacLaren the star role in "Shoes," but to furthermore elevate her at once to stardom in the Bluebird ranks. She gave Miss Weber the name of Mary MacDonald when she applied for work, and, considering turn about fair play, Miss Weber gave her the name of Mary MacLaren when she made her a star.

"The First Stone," will be Miss MacLaren's second medium in the Bluebird series, Miss Weber being now engaged in the advance preparations. Mary MacLaren is a mighty lucky young lady to have Lois Weber sponsoring her future upon the screen, for in this event Mary's future is right here, and she is a full-fledged star in about the fastest time known to screen history.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

THRILLS IN "THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE."

Thrills run riotously through "The Secret of the Submarine," the big Mutual-American serial with the preparedness theme. Each chapter has thrills that are new to the picture-going public. In the eighth chapter, for instance, there is a retrospective view of the house that is sent tumbling over the cliff as a climax to the sixth chapter.

Almost before one has recovered breath there is a tremendously realistic collision between two trains in a tunnel. The struggle of the survivors to reach a place of safety is illustrated in the accompanying picture. The tunnel used as the location for this scene is El Canejo, midway between Ventura and Los Angeles.

Then while a gay crowd makes merry in a cafe the building is destroyed by an earthquake. Director George Sargent has "put over" this remarkable scene with a most telling vividness, every member of the big picture's cast measuring up to the tensity of the situation. Director Sargent had arranged to have buckets of Fuller's earth and flour (representing plaster and dust) thrown on to the struggling players when the building is first swayed by the earthquake shock.

And when the clouds of earth and flour descended there was no need for acting, because the flying particles filled the eyes and lungs of the players, making their efforts to reach the open air absolutely sincere. They were all just as anxious to get out as Director Sargent was anxious to have them look anxious to get out.

They crawled madly over the fallen walls and debris. As the scene resulting was just what Director Sargent wanted he offered no apologies for taking his players by surprise, although the danger to which they had been exposed was greater than was either expected or intended. When it was found no one was injured or any worse for the tumbling walls and bricks and things, the enthusiasm of the company was unbounded.

"THE SEA LILY" (Universal).

Thomas Jefferson is rapidly endearing himself to Universal photoplay lovers for his splendidly sympathetic acting in homely roles. In "The Sea Lily," a Big U drama, he again co-stars with dainty little Zoe Bech, the Universal child actress whose wonderfully natural acting is alike the marvel of the Big U studio and to those who see her on the screen.

In making "The Sea Lily" Mr. Jefferson and company visited the San Pedro lighthouse near Los Angeles, where permission was granted them to set up lights in the interior. The great reflector which warns ships off the coast plays an important part in the story.

The living rooms of the lighthouse keeper were turned over to the Big U players and every facility for the taking of pictures was granted the Universal forces. As a result the scenes in "The Sea Lily" are realistic in the extreme. Many long weeks passed before a storm sprang up on the coast which Mr. Jefferson deemed severe enough to take pictures of, but when it came three cameramen were on hand in the lighthouse and on the rocks below to catch the rollers as they piled up on the rocky shore.

MARC MacDERMOTT'S FIRST VITAGRAPH PICTURE UNDER WAY.

Marc MacDermott, now a recognized Vitagraph player, is making great headway in a Blue Ribbon Feature by Louis Joseph Vance, in course of production under the direction of William Humphrey. The story was especially written for MacDermott and gives that capable artist many opportunities to bring into play the talent which has won him the thousands of admirers who are always awaiting a release in which he is featured. It will be completed in time for release during the early summer.

In this latest story Mr. Vance tells of the struggle for existence of a young girl who endeavors to make a name for herself in the theatrical world. How she is assisted by a young playwright who falls in love with her gives a good idea of the life and people of "the painted world."

The cast includes such well-known Vitagraphers as Naomi Childers, Robert Whitworth, Josephine Earle, Templar Saxe, William Shea, Katharine Lewis, Jack Bulger and Emmanuel A. Turner.

"A TEMPERANCE TOWN" (Selig).

"A Temperance Town," written by Charles Hoyt, and featuring the famous comedian, Otis Harlan, will uphold the enviable standard set by the Selig Company in General Film Service when this production is released Monday, June 5th. T. N. Heffron, the director, is to be complimented upon retaining the Hoyt comedy in this film. Mr. Harlan is supported by an all-star cast, and no time or expense has been spared to present "A Temperance Town" with elaborate scenic effects and mirth-provoking action.

"A Temperance Town" should appeal to the patrons of all motion picture theaters in the United States, for the cities and towns are few, indeed, where the "Wet" and "Dry" factional campaign has not been waged. "A Temperance Town" hits off the many laughable details in connection with many of the campaigns, particularly in smaller communities. There, during the course of campaigns for and against Rum, excitement rises to a high pitch, and nothing is left undone by either side to win a victory. In the Selig feature Jonesville is the scene of the "Wet" and "Dry" campaign. There are the usual mass meetings, the customary crusades against "blind pigs," the doctor, who does a thriving business writing prescriptions, and the drugstore which flourishes through filling them. There are a number of exciting climaxes, and a love story runs through the comedy. Exhibitors will make no mistake in booking "A Temperance Town," for the action is that which can be appreciated by almost everyone.

"FOOLS' GOLD" (Essanay).

This is the story of a young wife lured by the fascination of the gaming table until she is on the brink of ruin. Nell Craig, as the dashing young woman, carries out the wife's early adventures with a swing and buoyancy that well befits the part. Later she is called upon to display more emotional work when she faces the crisis, having become so deeply involved in debt that she fears to face her husband with her losses. But she is saved from final disaster by a detective who is looking for a notorious criminal and finds it is the same man who holds the reckless wife's I. O. U.'s. The criminal is caught and the gambling accounts destroyed. But the young wife learns her lesson and is content thereafter to settle down to the joys of married life. Darwin Karr, as the well-to-do and stable husband, enacts his role with his customary ability, while Patrick Calhoun does clever work as the gambler crook.

"THE REDEMPTION OF DAVE DARCEY" (Blue Ribbon).

"The Redemption of Dave Darcey" is the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature for Monday, June 12. This five-part picture, from the pen of Charles T. Dazey, author of "In Old Kentucky," depicts the difficulties encountered by a thief when he tries to go straight. James Morrison is seen as Dave Darcey, a crook, who, after accidentally shooting a rival gangster, escapes and is given a chance to reform by the owner of a steel works. When Benton, his benefactor, forgetting his affianced bride, falls in love with a woman of whom Dave is suspicious, he tries to warn Benton, but is reprimanded for his insolence.

Scene from "The Redemption of Dave Darcey" (Vitagraph).

He tracks the woman, and, learning that she is a foreign spy, plotting to destroy Benton's plant, he tries to prevent the deed. When the spy and her accomplices overpower him and escape he is caught in the ensuing explosion and later arrested as one of the plotters. Cleared of this charge, he is accused of the murder of the gangster he had shot, but when it is brought out that the man had not been killed, but only slightly wounded, Darcey is freed. After the disclosures which Dave has brought about Benton and his fiancee are happily reunited and Darcey grasps the opportunity to start life anew when a better position is offered him at the steel works. Excellent support is given Mr. Morrison by Emanuel A. Turner, Billie Billings, Belle Bruce, Mother Maurice, Robert Gaillard and many other prominent screen artists. To Paul Scardon goes the credit for the direction of the picture.

"THE FLOWER OF NO MAN'S LAND" (Metro).

"The Flower of No Man's Land," the five-part Metro-Columbia wonderplay, in which Viola Dana, the newest Metro star, makes her debut on the Metro program, will be released June 19. This feature was written and directed by John H. Collins, who was formerly associated with Miss Dana at the Edison company. There is a strong supporting cast in "The Flower of No Man's Land," which includes Duncan McRae, the well-known English dramatic actor, Mitchell Lewis, Harry C. Brown, Fred Jones, Nellie Grant Mitchell, Eldine Steuart and Marcus Moriarty. Mitchell Lewis plays the role of a big Indian in this production, which is a similar part to that which brought him no little fame when he appeared with William Favessham in "The Squaw Man."

The production is mounted on an elaborate and pretentious scale and there are scores of big scenes. One of the interesting features is a series of scenes which were actually photographed in the Metropolitan Opera House, showing the world famous "diamond horseshoe," the dressing rooms and other interesting glimpses behind the scenes. In contrast to the scenes made around New York, are some realistic effects showing the Great American Desert, and many colorful and picturesque locations of the far West. There is a mining camp with all its familiar types, and here much of the action is staged. An old stage coach that saw service for many years in the far West is introduced into the picture and figures in a thrilling accident.

"THE SPATULATE THUMB" (Gaumont).

What is by far one of the most interesting three-act photo-dramas the Gaumont company has ever produced is "The Spatulate Thumb." The authors are the well-known actors and screen artists, Lionel Barrymore and Wright Huntington. Their knowledge of the silent drama has eminently fitted them for the work of photoplay writing. Their exceptionally strong story is founded upon that freak of physical nature, the "murderer's thumb." This is a short, stubby thumb, differing from the one on the individual's other hand. It is said to occur in only one person out of every one hundred thousand. It is indicative of fierce and sudden passion.

In the story of "The Spatulate Thumb" the method of identification of the real culprit in an unusual crime depends upon the clever manner in which the lawyer for the defense of an innocent man ferrets out details because of his love for the girl whose sweetheart is accused. Alexander Gaden plays the brilliant role of the young attorney. Miss Lucille Taft appears as the sweetheart of the weak young man, enacted by John Reinhard, whose one false step involves him in a net of circumstantial evidence that comes near costing him his life. The star role opposite that of Mr. Gaden is in the capable hands of Miss Iva Shepard. Carroll, who is the possessor of the spatulate thumb, is played by Henry W. Pemberton.

"The Spatulate Thumb" will be released as a three-act Mutual Picture June 22.

POLI CIRCUIT BOOKS ALL IVAN PLAYS.

R. H. Miller, who supervises the booking of motion pictures in the Poli houses has contracted with the various Ivan Exchanges to play all Ivan features in the circuit of theaters owned by Mr. Poli.

"SHOES" (Bluebird).

There is a new screen star projected in this Bluebird, and Mary McDonald, who has previously been referred to in conjunction with "Shoes," takes on a new name—Mary McLaren—for her entry into the list of regular Bluebird stars. Miss MacLaren is a "genuine find," according to Bluebird's publicity promoter, and until the professional critics have had opportunity to controvert the assertion so let it stand.

Lois Weber, who prepared the scenario of "Shoes" from the story by Stella Wynne Herron, published in Collier's, discovered Miss MacLaren and gave her a "bit" in "Where Are My Children?" When Miss Weber approached her work of producing "Shoes" Miss MacLaren so perfectly fitted the role that the part might, in fact, have been written with the frail and demure girl in mind.

"Shoes" depicts with gripping intensity three vital weeks in the life of a shop girl—the half-slave, under-paid pawn of commerce. At home her mother takes in washing to support two smaller children—and a lazy, good for nothing, novel reading, "can rushing" father; a male too lazy to even look for work, in the mortal dread that he might find it. For every dollar that the shop-girl and her mother can earn there is pressing need—the rent is to be paid, the butcher and baker demand cash, and father simply must have money for tobacco and beer!

What matters if the shop-girl's shoes are worn to tatters, that pasteboard soles are required to keep her feet from picking up splinters from the rough floor behind the counter where she stands? There is need for every penny at home; and so, after three weeks of promises that she may take $3 from the unopened pay-envelope she lays each Saturday night in her mother's lap and buy a pair of shoes—the girl gets them.

When she comes home with the shoes on her feet her mother follows the downcast eyes of her oldest child to where their steady gaze falls pitifully upon the new shoes—and then the girl throws herself in her mother's lap. The tears of these two stricken women mingle in a flood of understanding and unspoken forgiveness—and the sins of the child are washed away.

There is a greater sociological lesson in "Shoes," according to the Bluebird publicity service, than there is in "Where Are My Children?"—for in "Shoes" the problem is approached before the fact instead of afterward; because in "Shoes" the problem of the masses and not the classes is revealed. And in dealing with its subject Miss Weber has surpassed herself in craftsmanship, turning out a picture that strikes the heart broadside and overwhelmingly instead of with the mooted "punch" of most encounters with problems.

KING BAGGOT IN "HALF A ROGUE" (Universal).

The accompanying scene shows King Baggot, with hat and arms extended, making a speech to the now picture-wise inhabitants of Savannah, Georgia. The scene of which the still was taken is a part of "Half a Rogue," the five-reel Red Feather-Universal photoplay in which Mr. Baggot takes the role of a playwright who returns from New York to his home town to run for mayor.

The playwright is seen making a speech to a crowd of five thousand and striving to overcome the evil effects a slanderous statement, published in the local paper, has had upon his candidacy.

In order to get the crowd Baggot advertised in the local newspapers that he would publicly thank the citizens of the town for their courtesy to the Universal company during their visit to Savannah. The newspapers ran long stories about the photoplayer's life and adventures and as a result a dense crowd packed the heart of the city when Baggot got up on a platform to speak.

Scattered through the crowd were a number of moving picture cameramen, the Universal "regulars," of course, being close up to King Baggot. The scene when incorporated in "Half a Rogue" shows Baggot apparently making a political speech. "Half a Rogue" was released on May 22 with Edna Hunter and Clara Beyers, supporting Mr. Baggot. The story of the play was originally published in novel form by Harold

Scene from "Half a Rogue" (Universal)

MacGrath, and will also appear in a forthcoming number of "The Black Cat Magazine" in short story form. The play's popularity among exhibitors has been instantaneous.

"FARMER AL FALFA'S TENTLESS CIRCUS" (Paramount-Bray).

Big tops of the Barnum and Bailey days never held such enchantment for the small boy who crawled under the tent to see Buffalo Bill or carried water for the elephants to get a glimpse at the three-ring show, as scenes and audiences are offered in "Farmer Al Falfa's Tentless Circus," a future release of the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons.

When Farmer Al Falfa, Paul Terry's hero of the Paramount-Bray short reels, decides on a circus of his own out on the farm it rivals any yet staged under canvas. In the opening scene a poster is seen on the screen announcing the coming of the circus. Farmer Al Falfa, catching a glimpse of the placard, decides at once to arrange a show of his own.

Returning to the farm, Al Falfa decides to make his pig play the part of the bare-back rider's horse while he takes the part of the circus performer. They dash off at top speed, Al Falfa performing strange and wonderful acrobatic feats on the animal's back, while the pig is dashing around at top-notch speed. An added thrill is injected into the picture by the mule, who engages Al Falfa in a kicking match of which the venerable farmer gets decidedly the worst.

"THE EVIL THEREOF" (Famous Players).

"The Evil Thereof," a powerful photoplay with a great moral lesson, written by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, is the Famous Players release on the Paramount program for June 5th. Frank Losee, whose remarkable performances in Famous Players productions, notably in the role of Josh Whitcomb in that company's adaptation of Denman Thompson's celebrated "The Old Homestead," won him international distinction, is featured in the leading role, with Grace Valentine, Crauford Kent and others of equal prominence in important parts.

Scene from "The Evil Thereof" (Famous Players).

The scene opens with a gay party presided over by a wealthy broker—the role assumed by Mr. Losee. As favors the women each receive one hundred dollar bills, which are accepted with a nonchalance that tells plainly in what slight esteem these bills are held by the recipients.

Then the history of these one hundred dollar bills is traced—the suffering and misery, the heart-ache and the poverty which have resulted from the ruthless manner in which they have been wrested from the poor, the innocent and the helpless.

Robert Vignola, who directed "The Evil Thereof," has done remarkable work in obtaining complete realism, particularly in those scenes which show the broker's final dinner and the interior of the barber-shop. The production, both in theme and in treatment, is an exceptional one and is sure to create unusual interest because of the great moral lesson which is embodied in this thrilling and pathetic story.

LUCILLE LEE STEWART IN FIRST PICTURE.

The first picture in which Lucille Lee Stewart appears for the Vitagraph Company of America is entitled "The Destroyers," and is from the novel "Peter God," by James Oliver Curwood. The production is scheduled for release on June 5th as a Blue Ribbon Feature. Miss Stewart plays the leading role in the drama and those who have seen the film proclaim her to be all which Ralph Ince, who directed the picture, prophesied her to be. Although this is Miss Stewart's first picture for the Vitagraph Company, having played minor parts before, she has instilled a naturalness and sweetness into the role that will help make it a production worthy of the director.

MARIE DORO ON HER SECOND LASKY PICTURE.

One of the most successful feature play productions of several months is Marie Doro in the Lasky production, "The Heart of Nora Flynn." This popular star, who is now under the Lasky management for a long period, has started work under the direction of William C. De Mille on her second production for the Lasky Company written specially for her by Marian Fairfax. Miss Doro will practically have an all-star cast in her support.

EXTENDS "NE'ER DO WELL" ENGAGEMENT.

So enthusiastic was the audience that attended the opening week of "The Ne'er Do well" at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, that an extension of "The Ne'er Do Well" has been arranged by Mr. Shea. Mr. Shea advises that this big production has gone far beyond all expectations in drawing power, and what is better still, his patrons showed unmistakable signs of being well pleased.

A CORRECTION.

Through an error F. W. Hiller was given credit on the film for the authorship of Vitagraph's three-part Broadway Star Feature, "The Accusing Voice," which was released on Saturday, May 13. In reality the story comes from the pen of Ross D. Whytock, who has written many other Vitagraph successes.

KERRIGAN COMPANY IN MOUNTAINS.

After having spent twelve days in the Cuyamaca mountains, about seventy miles east of San Diego filming scenes for the big feature photoplay, "The Silent Battle," the J. Warren Kerrigan company, working under the direction of Jack Conway, has returned to Universal City. On this trip the company encountered not only rain storms, but also snow in the high mountain peaks, and more than once the members, including Miss Lois Wilson and Harry Carter, had fun with snowballs. Conway reports some very successful photography, as splendid locations were found for the film play.

M. RENE PRIEUR GETS RAY COMEDIES.

Mr. Prieur of London and Paris was a pleased attendant at the initial presentation of the Johnny and Emma Ray Comedies at the Broadway theater last Monday, May 15. Immediately after the showing Mr. Prieur went direct to the offices of C. Lang Cobb, Jr., manager of sales and publicity of the reserve Photoplays Company, and insisted upon a three-year contract to represent Ray Comedies in Europe and Australia. After a masterful presentation of facts regarding the enormous business accomplished for Mr. Cobb on his Ramo Features, the genial manager of sales agreed to appoint Mr. Prieur once more his European representative—only this time for Ray Comedies.

EVART OVERTON IN VITAGRAPH'S LATEST CURWOOD STORY.

Evart Overton, whose work in "The Ordeal of Elizabeth" caused so much pleasing comment, is now working under the direction of Eugene Mullin in a three-part dramatic story by James Oliver Curwood. Overton will be seen in a role especially suited to his distinctive type. Adele Kelly, Edward Elkas and Denton Vane are the other Vitagraph favorites who appear in the cast. Charmine Mayfield, recently appointed a member of the Vitagraph Stock Company, also makes her bow in this picture.

"THE GUIDE" (Mutual Star.)

After ten days spent in shooting exteriors on 'The Rim of the World" on Little Bear Lake, fifteen miles up in the mountains from San Bernardino, Calif., William Russell and his company of players appearing with him in "The Guide," a forthcoming Mutual Star Production in five acts, have returned to the Santa Barbara studios to put the finishing touches to the piece. The trip occupied nearly ten days and a number of exceptionally interesting scenes were obtained.

"The Guide," as the name implies, is a romance of the great North Woods, in which tragedy and love go hand in hand. William Russell, in the leading role, appears as a guide, whose unusual literary abilities are but seldom associated with one of his calling. Charlotte Burton, as the daughter of a publisher, essays the chief supporting role. Others in the cast are Jack Prescott, who also acted as co-director with Russell, Harry Keenan and various others of equal note.

The story of the piece deals with Russell, in the role of Garry Murdock, a noted guide and trapper who, between seasons, devotes himself to writing poetry. John Condon, a publisher, has his summer home deep in the woods where Murdock lives and hunts. With the publisher lives his daughter Mable, who is engaged to Meynard Randall, a wealthy New Yorker, whose god is money and who is backing her father in his business. Mable lacks faith in him. Murdock, under an assumed name, sends his poems to the publisher and in time they are published and make a fortune for both. Murdock, after many adventures, marries Mabel and Randall disappears. Considerable of the villainy of the piece is furnished by Pierre, a half-breed, portrayed by Jack Prescott.

WAR AND PEACE IN MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 74.

Preparations for war and memories of war vie with the arts of peace in Mutual Weekly No. 74. An echo of a past generation is the screen presentation of the confederate veterans' reunion at Birmingham Ala. Vincent Astor is seen in the war aeroplane he has given to the New York Naval Militia. At Sheepshead Bay, N. Y., ten thousand national guardsmen are shown in war games. It is to this meeting that Victor Carlstrom flew from Newport News, breaking the American record for distance. The Mutual Weekly also shows him as he starts his flight for Washington. Charlestown, Mass., sends pictures of the launching of a new naval supply ship. A new kite type war balloon is tested before the motion picture camera at Cleveland, O., before U. S. government officers and attaches from the embassies of several European powers. Work little heard of is what the women of the border are doing for the sick and wounded in the Mexican campaign. The Mutual Weekly in this issue shows Mrs. Frederick Funston, wife of the commanding general, with women of Fort Sam Houston at work at sewing machines as exemplars of American Red Cross preparedness.

The closer binding of the ties between this country and Canada are shown in the removal of restrictions upon automobiles crossing from one country to the other. Sacramento, Cal., celebrates the completion of a million-dollar causeway connecting the east and west banks of the river, and Los Angeles, Cal., celebrates "Olive Day" by giving away thousands of gallons of the ripe fruit. The Wellesley college girls have their annual war canoe race; and at Medford, Mass., there is a back-to-nature revel of classic dancers.

EDNA GOODRICH FILM FINISHED FOR MOROSCO.

The initial Edna Goodrich photoplay to be released by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co. on the Paramount Program has been finished at the West Coast studios. "The Making of Maddalena" is the title of the next Morosco offering and will be released June 8th.

As a play this subject by Mary and Samuel Lewis has met with big success throughout the country having starred Mary Emerson in the original title role. In preparing the story for the screen the Morosco company gave its producing staff full sway in the matter of financial outlay in order that the best results obtainable may be secured. Early reports from the coast indicate that the photoplay offers another excellent subject for the Paramount Program, not only because of the fact that it is understood to present the best work of the star and an exceptional cast, but on account of the capable and elaborate manner in which it has been staged. As an instance of the care with which each feature of the photoplay has been treated might be mentioned the fact that Miss Goodrich spent three weeks and over three thousand feet of film in tests working for the perfection of her make-up. Great artistry was required to simulate the Italian type of beauty in contour, eye shading and character shadows of the face before the beautiful star was satisfied with the result. In staging the big dramatic scenes of the play musicians were on hand to bring out the best efforts of the artists. Directed by Frank Lloyd, with the assistance of Waldo Walker, "The Making of Maddalena" is expected to score another triumph for its producers. Included in the cast are such able players as Forrest Stanley, Howard Davies, John Burton, Mary Mersch, Juan de la Cruz and Colin Chase while the photography has been entrusted to James Van Trees whose novel effects in Morosco pictures are creating no little attention.

Simultaneous with the completion of "The Making of Maddalena" another Morosco company has commenced work on Mme. Rita Jolivet's vehicle, "An International Marriage," by George Broadhurst. This is expected to be Mr. Broadhurst's initial subject for the Paramount Program as a result of his recent affiliation with the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and is planned for release in July.

KALEM'S "LOTUS WOMAN" ON JUNE 28TH.

As a result of Kalem's desire that exhibitors in all sections of the country should have an opportunity to view "The Lotus Woman" before booking, June 28th has been set as the release date instead of June 20th, as stated in last week's trade papers. "The Lotus Woman," which features Alice Hollister, the original screen vampire, supported by Harry Millarde, will be released by General Film and prints of the subject are being shipped to the exchanges for the pre-release showings.

In explaining the plan a Kalem official declared, "The policy of 'showing the goods' worked so well with 'The Social Pirates' that we are following it wherever possible. It is in order that exhibitors even in distant sections of the country may 'see before they buy' that we have set the release date back.

"'The Lotus Woman' may be secured in the regular program service of the General Film Company without extra rental, but even under those conditions we feel that the day is past when a theater owner can be asked to book a 'pig in a bag.' We want exhibitors to see this five-act feature and judge of its merits themselves."

Feature or Program?

Boston Exchange Men are Warmly Discussing the Future of the Show Business—Are the People Going to Ask for Big Features or Will They Prefer, for the Most Part, the Diversity Offered by the Program?

By William M. Flynn, Boston Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, MASS.—There is a friendly controversy going on at present among the film exchange men in this territory as to which are going to triumph in the long run, the big feature photoplay productions or the short one and two reel film subjects and the exhibitors are watching for the outcome with much interest. So far honors are about even but the exhibitors have profited by the arguments hurled back and forth.

One exchange man, who specializes in two and three-reel subjects, claims the big productions are overdone and that many small houses are going "over their heads" trying to make a front.

"The moving picture business is a five and ten-cent business first, last and always," he said one day last week.

"There is hardly a story that is now being told in the multiple reel feature that cannot be told with greater force and convincing power in one and two reels. Yet the tremendous cost of five, six or more reels, is freely indulged in. And the cost of features with its attendant search for effects and rapidly depleting supply of scenaric material is getting greater and greater."

This man's opinion is not shared by the great majority of those who handle the multiple reel features who claim that the huge photoplays have lifted the motion picture business out of the realm of the commonplace and paved the way for its wonderful development. They assert the future of the trade rests in maintaining the high standards that have been set by the artists and capitalists who have put years of study into what has come to be recognized as one of the greatest industries of modern times.

Meanwhile the controversy goes on and the exhibitor says "I need them both."

Frank H. Vine Gets Loving Cup.

Boston, Mass.—Frank H. Vine, New England manager of the In ernational Film Service, one of the ten branch managers presented with a loving cup by William Randolph Hearst for the records of all previous serial bookings with the "Mysteries of Myra," is being congratulated by exhibitors and his other friends in this territory for his achievement. "Beaming" Frank with his usual modesty has accepted the felicitations and says he hopes to do even better with the split reel comedies he is handling in New England for the International in addition to the American army in Mexico reel, which he claims is going big.

Mrs. Carter Signs the Contract.

Boston, Mass.—It is reported that contracts have been signed by Mrs. Katherine Carter and Gustave Frohman, in her new association with the Gustave Frohman Photoplay Exchange in Boston, placing the distribution and management of all educational subjects under her immediate care.

Mrs. Carter's intimate knowledge of educational films and her reputation among school and church interests are expected to be a big boom not only to her department but the patrons of the department as well.

"Canada's Fighting Forces" Draws.

Boston, Mass. — "Canada's Fighting Forces," the Canadian government official films, are playing at the Tremont Temple in Boston and drawing large houses twice daily. Sergt. Fred Wells, the veteran newspaper man and correspondent, who was wounded during the fighting in Europe, is lecturing with the films.

BUFFALO NEWS LETTER.

By Joseph McGuire, Special Correspondent, 611 Erie County Bank Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

J. M. Gorchof Will Represent Fox.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—May 24.—Several changes in the positions at the Buffalo film exchanges were a feature here this week.

J. M. Gorchof, whose picture appears herewith, has been appointed representative of the Fox Film in the Buffalo territory as far east as Syracuse. "The new million - dollar Annette Kellerman production will receive my attention," said Mr. Gorchof.

J. M.Gorchof.

Mr. Gorchof at one time managed the Victoria theater at Lafayette, Ind. He has had ten years' experience in the show and film business in Chicago and other cities and enjoys the friendship of many exhibitors in this territory.

"Please mention, if you wish, that I was the first to suggest the formation of the Buffalo Screen Club," said Mr. Gorchof. "After I solicited some of the local film men on the subject, they quickly offered their co-operation."

He was formerly Mutual road representative in this territory.

J. R. Levy to Manage Local World Film.

Buffalo, N. Y.—J. R. Levy has been appointed manager of the local branch of the World Film Corporation, succeeding J. L. Mulhauser.

Details of Mr. Levy's appointment will be given later.

V. H. Bendell Succeeds Frank Leonard.

Buffalo, N. Y.—V. H. Bendell, formerly special representative of the Essanay Company in Chicago, is now located at the Buffalo branch of the General Film. He succeeds Frank Leonard, who handled the Mary Page pictures. Mr. Leonard has been appointed road representative of the World Film in the Buffalo territory.

Louis Green Heads Exclusive Office.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Louis Green has resigned as the World's road representative here and has been appointed manager of the Buffalo branch of the Exclusive Features, Inc., with offices in the Chapin block.

E. Auger Visits Local Mutual.

Buffalo, N. Y.—E. Auger, special representative of the Mutual Film, visited G. H. Christoffers, manager of the Buffalo branch of this company, this week. Mr. Auger recently completed a three-months' trip through the Central West.

"Business was satisfactory in the various points I covered," said Mr. Auger. "Of course, some of the film companies are complaining that their business is being cut up and divided among the various exchanges. All our patrons are enthusing over the Chaplin series, his "Floor Walker" picture being a great success."

The Edisonia Closed.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Edisonia, a five-cent moving picture theater, has been closed. At one time this house, which is located in a good, residential district, was a money-maker. The building of two palatial theaters not far from the Edisonia, however, naturally cut in on the patronage of this smaller house, of which Tracey & Walsh were the proprietors.

Elmer S. Davis Back at Elmwood.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Elmer S. Davis, former manager of the Elmwood moving picture theater, Buffalo, has assumed that position again. This is a high-class house in one of Buffalo's best residential districts. Mr. Davis features the Paramount service and has a nine-piece orchestra. He reports a satisfactory patronage.

A New Corporation.

Buffalo, N. Y.—For the purpose of doing a general theater and hotel business, the General Hotels Company of Buffalo was recently incorporated with a capital of $500,000. The directors are: S. B. Nye and W. W. Sears of Buffalo and Frederick W. Rockwell of Albany.

Buffalo Times Service Making New Features.

The Buffalo Times Film Service is preparing a series of feature pictures, with Helen Green and Earle Metcalfe as stars. Seventy-five leading newspapers and many smaller ones are printing the features of this company, whose studios are at 423 Classon avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Park Theater to Open.

South Dayton, N. Y.—D. D. Bacon will open the Park theater, South Dayton, N. Y., some time this month. The house will cost upwards of $30,000 and will have a large stage, six dressing rooms, a fine ventilating system, a pool room for the use of patrons and other features.

NEWARK, N. J., LETTER.

Reorganization at Universal.

Newark, N. J.—Lee Gainsborg, manager of the local branch of the Universal Film, at 286 Market street, has effected an entire reorganization at his office.

S. E. Fried has been appointed new road man, and has brought in some very fine accounts. In addition, Mr. Gainsborg has appointed Mr. Fried assistant manager.

In line with its policy of betterment and expansion, the Universal has installed a special poster department, and George Nocke, an experienced poster man, has been placed at the head.

Even the office force has been changed, as Miss Mildred Piken, formerly at the Royal Feature Film, is the new stenographer at the Universal. Miss Piken is always ready with a smile to greet the arrivals at the exchange.

Harry Weiner is another new face at the Universal office.

Metropolitan Theater Opened.

Newark, N. J.—The Metropolitan theater, Charlton and Montgomery streets, is now showing pictures. The house is now under the management of Samuel Ross. The projection is in charge of Jack Gold, chief operator.

World Film Going Well.

Newark, N J.—Leo F. Levison, manager of the Newark branch of the World Film, 59-60 Strand Theater Bldg., reports tremendous demands for Brady-Made-World pictures. Among the theaters to recently book the new productions are Empire theater, New Brunswick; Royal theater, Perth Amboy; Ampere theater, Ampere; Lincoln theater, Bloomfield; Colonial theater, West Hoboken; Bellevue, Newark, and Fox's Carlton, Newark. Since May 15 when Equitable pictures were discontinued, and all pictures already released placed on a wild-cat basis, it seems that exhibitors all over the state are taking advantage of the opportunity.

New Philadelphia House

Stanley Amusement Company Buys Ground on Southeast Corner of Nineteenth and Market Streets on Which It Will Build a Splendid Picture Theater—Will Seat 3,000 Persons and Will Cost a Half Million Dollars.

Special to the Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service..

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—Wword has been received in local moving picture circles that the Stanley Amusement Company have concluded negotiations for the acquisition of a large plot of ground at the southwest corner of Ninteenth and Market streets. A model moving picture theater will be erected on this spot at an estimated cost of about $500,000. The building will be of fireproof construction and will occupy an area of 100 by 186 feet, and will have a seating capacity of 3,000 people.

The site of the new theater is directly opposite the Nineteenth street subway station, thus making it extremely handy for residents of West Philadelphia and other points. The work of construction will be rushed forward with all possible speed and it is thought that the theater will be ready for occupancy on or about the first of the year. The Stanley company, with headquarters in the Palace Theater Bldg., 1214 Market street are proprietors of the Stanley theater, Sixteenth and Market streets, Philadelphia's leading moving picture theater.

NEW THEATER IN LANCASTER.

George M. Krupa Building a 2000 Seat House.

Lancaster, Pa.—George M. Krupa, proprietor of the Hippodrome theater, Lancaster, is now having a theater constructed at that place, which, when completed, will be the largest and most beautiful in that section of Pennsylvania. The new house will be fitted with luxuriant furnishings and will have a seating capacity of 2,000 persons. The work of construction is progressing rapidly and Mr. Krupa declared that he expects to be open by the 4th of July. Practically all of the equipment to be used in the new theater has been purchased at the Calehuff Supply Company, 1301 Race street, and includes several projecting machines, a screen and other such paraphernalia.

ACCIDENT TO BUILDERS.

Balcony Ceiling Collapses and Injures Workmen.

Reading, Pa.—A most deplorable accident recently occurred during the remodeling of the Palace theater, on Penn street between Sixth and Seventh streets, Reading, Pa., recently taken over by Carr & Schad. The balcony ceiling collapsed while a force of plasters were at work resulting in the death of one man and the serious injury of three others. Attorney for Messrs. Carr & Schad advances as a reason for the accident the fact that a metal ceiling was stripped off and that of plaster was being supplied when the supporting beams gave way under the extra weight. The coroner is investigating.

Palace Theater Leased.

Norristown, Pa.—A. & L. Sablosky, operators of the Grand opera house, the Garrick and other moving picture theaters in Norristown, Pa., have recently leased the Palace theater, Main and Mill streets, from Frank Leichthammer. The same character shows will be exhibited at this theater as have popularized other theaters conducted by the Messrs. Sablosky and it is expected that the patronage of the Palace theater will steadily increase under the new management.

John Smith Improving Liberty Theater.

Tacony, Pa.—John Smith, proprietor of the Liberty theater, Tacony, and well known in local moving picture circles, has recently made many improvements to his theater, including the installation of considerable new equipment. Mr. Smith, who has the reputation of being an expert on projection, purchased a new Super-Edison machine from the Calehuff Supply Company. This machine is the most expensive on the market and has obtained a wonderful reputation by the clear manner in which it projects pictures upon the screen.

Visitors to Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Many out of town visitors recently paid their respects to Philadelphia and the local moving picture supply houses report accomplishing considerable business along this line. Numbered among the visitors were I. H. Trout, proprietor of Murphy's opera house, Front Royal, W. Va.; Mrs. Reese, of the Reese theater, Harrington, Del.; William Hunt, well known exhibitor of Wildwood, N. J., and many other exhibitors.

Theater on North Broad Sold.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The moving picture theater, 4817 to 4821 North Broad street, lot 60 by 135 feet, has been purchased by Nell L. Carodisky from Rosario Magizzi, for a nominal consideration, subject to a mortgage of $14,000.

Decker & Harper Take Local Theater.

Waynesboro, Pa.—Messrs. Decker & Harper, exhibitors of this vicinity, have assumed charge of one of Waynesboro's leading moving picture theaters and have purchased considerable new equipment from the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street, including a new 6B projecting machine.

Revokes Orpheum License

License Committee of Bayonne's Common Council Votes to Suspend License of E. A. Schiller Who Is Showing "Damaged Goods."

By Jacob J. Kalter, Special Correspondent, 51 Strand Theater Bldg., Newark, N. J.

NEWARK, N J.—What is regarded in many circles of Newark as a most high-handed proceeding took place Wednesday when Chief of Police Long caused the arrest of Emanuel A. Schiller of Bayonne, exhibitor of the photoplay, "Damaged Goods," playing at the Orpheum theater. At a meeting of the license committee of the Common Council, the members of the committee unanimously voted to suspend the license of the theater for a period of three weeks covering the time of the lease obtained by Mr. Schiller. The serving, however, of the formal notice of the suspension of the license has been withheld until the aldermen can obtain some legal advice on the atter.

At the time of this writing, the Orpheum was still running the photoplay, and Mr. N. R. Greathouse, who has the state rights on the film, informed the Newark correspondent of the Moving Picture World that he expected to exhibit the picture till the expiration of his lease.

The meeting of the license committee Wednesday evening was held for the sole purpose of considering the Orpheum case. But at the conclusion of the meeting counsel for Mr. Schiller denounced the procedure, saying that only one side of the case had been heard, and had the committee given them a little more time, they would have produced several prominent men in the community to testify to the morality and goodness of the film.

Four of the members of the committee testified that they had seen the play and had adjudged it immoral and indecent. The decision to revoke the license was unanimous, however. The action was taken at the instance of Chief Long, who pronounced the picture as "unclean, unwholesome and immoral." The witnesses called by the chief were Police Lieutenant Harris and Quinn, Dr. Richard G. Tunison, owner and manager of the Lyric theater, 211 Market street, and Jules Gerstle, manager of the Strand theater, 120 Market street. The picture exhibitor was represented by Arthur F. Egner and the owner of the picture, Mr. N. R. Greathouse, by W. D. Salter of Bayonne.

It developed during the hearing that the license inspectors employed by the License Department had investigated the picture and had found nothing immoral in it. They were not called to testify.

Mr. Salter, speaking for Mr. Greathouse, said that he had offered to show the picture to Chief Long prior to its public exhibition, but the chief had rejected his offer. He then read testimonials from prominent men testifying to the good work done by the picture.

The two exhibitors, Dr. Tunison and Mr. Gerstle, both said that although they had had an opportunity to book the production, they had refused to show it at their playhouses.

Representing the owners of the theater, Saul Cohn said that in this case his client was the goat. He could see no reason why the license of the Orpheum should be revoked permanently in view of the fact that the theater owner had absolutely no connection with the picture.

The case will be tried this week in the offices of the vice-chancellor.

Advertising Bill Passes

District of Columbia Bill Curtailing Extravagant Statements in Local Advertising Passes House and Senate—Will Doubtless Be Signed Before This Is Read —Provisions of the Measure and Penalties for Infraction.

By Clarence L. Linz, Special Correspondent, 635 Tenth St. N. E., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—There will soon be placed upon the statute books of the District of Columbia a law that will tend to curb the use of extravagant statements in advertising where there is intent to defraud the public. The Johnson bill, concerning which from time to time reports have been printed in this column, has been adopted by the House of Representatives and the Senate and has gone to President Wilson, who will no doubt place his signature upon it before the Moving Picture World reaches its readers.

Under its provisions "it is unlawful for any person, firm, association, corporation or advertising agency in the District of Columbia, directly or indirectly, to display or exhibit to the public in any way, whether by handbill, placard, poster, picture, film, or otherwise; to insert or cause to be inserted in any newspaper, magazine, or other publication printed in the District of Columbia; or to issue, exhibit, or in any way distribute or disseminate to the public; or to deliver, exhibit, mail, or send to any person, firm, association, or corporation, any false, untrue, or misleading statement, representation or advertisement with intent to sell, barter, or exchange any goods, wares, or merchandise, or anything of value, or to mislead, deceive or induce any person or persons to purchase or in any way invest in or accept as collateral security any share of stock, note," etc.

There is also a provision striking at similar advertising where the advertiser seeks to induce the employment of his services by another. This may have its effect upon any attempt to operate a "school for photoplay acting," should some of those we read about attempt to obtain a footing in the District of Columbia.

Fines of up to $500, imprisonment for not to exceed six months, or both fines and imprisonment in the discretion of the court, are provided for violations.

There is no need for exhibitors to become panic-stricken because there is so strict a law upon the statute books, as its provisions strike only at those who would defraud the public to an extent that is noticeable. In other words, a misstatement in light of a mistake would not carry prosecution—It must be a wilful fraud.

PATHE TAKES TWO LOCAL MEN.

Manager C. W. Bunn and Assistant H. E. Friedman Go to Chicago.

Washington, D. C.—Local filmdom may lose two of its best known and best liked film men, for Clarence W. Bunn, manager of the local branch of the World Film Corporation, and Henry E. Friedman, his assistant here, go to Chicago in similar capacities with respect to the office in that city of Pathe, Inc.

Clarence W. Bunn.

Mr. Bunn came to Washington from the Boston office of the company from which he is now severing his connections less than a year ago. His appointment as manager of the Chicago office of Pathe comes as a distinct promotion, for that is the second largest office of the company in the United States.

During his short stay here he has made a host of friends, all of whom regret that he is to leave the city. "In a way," said Mr. Bunn to the World correspondent, "I dislike leaving Washington. It is a very beautiful city and a most delightful one in which to live, and I am just beginning to get nicely acquainted with the exhibitors and film men in this territory. But the inducement to go to Chicago is such that I do not feel like refusing it. My home is near Chicago, while that of Mrs. Bunn is in the city itself, so there are two big inducements for me to move westward. Then in addition to these there is a further inducement offered by the fact that I am even more familiar with that section, having lived in and traveled through the territory prior to coming east, and it will prove much easier for me than any other part of the country.

"I started in the film business with the World Film Corporation and, of course, am sorry to leave it, but I believe my prospects are much better in this larger office."

It is to be remembered that on April 1st, Mr. Bunn sprung a surprise on his friends in this territory by slipping off to Chicago and marrying Miss Mable Larsen, when everybody thought him to be a confirmed bachelor. This in all probability is what started his thoughts again towards the west.

H. E. Friedman.

Friedman broke into the film game right here in Washington about a year ago and since that time has been traveling through North Carolina and Virginia. He is enthusiastic over the business and has done much to even up conditions in the territory to which he has been assigned. He was of considerable aid to the exhibitors in North Carolina when they set about to organize their league and he has always been very prominent at the conventions which have followed.

In his position as assistant manager of the Chicago Pathe office his future is also better assured. The Washington correspondent of the Moving Picture World can recommend "Friend Henry" to the exhibitors in the Chicago territory as a good fellow, one who always sticks to a pal, and who will meet you half way in any reasonable deal. The boys in this locality are truly sorry to see him go and wish both he and Mr. Bunn every possible success in their future activity.

J. Frank Brown with Masterpiece Film.

Washington, D. C.—J. Frank Brown, formerly a member of the corporation which markets Metro productions in this territory, is back in Washington preparatory to traveling through Maryland, Delaware and Virginia for the Masterpiece Film Attractions Company. In addition to the states named, Mr. Brown will also look after the bookings in the District of Columbia. He is to market "Neptune's Daughter," "The Spoilers," "Cabiria" and "Somewhere in France."

Toward the King Row.

A checkerboard move is being made by two of the local exchanges for the Mutual, of 428 Ninth street, northwest, is to occupy the quarters now tenanted by the Washington Film exchange, which markets the Universal program, at 419-421 Ninth street. The latter goes to a building in the next block adjoining the offices of the Fox. Both companies will be doing business in their new homes within a very few days.

Washington Expects Perfect Exchange Building

Local Exchange Managers Are Looking Forward to Having a Most Up-to-Date Home For Distributing Offices.

Washington, D. C.—This city is to have one of the finest film exchange buildings in the United States if the plans of Macneil and Macneil, architects in the Union Trust Bldg., materialize, and everything points to their success at the present time. It is understood that already several of the exchanges now located in various parts of the city have signed leases or have signfied an intention of securing space in the building.

The Washington Film Exchange Building is to be modern in every particular. It will be thoroughly fireproof, and will be of reinforced concrete construction. The front is to be very attractive in golden tapestry brick ornamented with white matt-glazed terra cotta. The floors and the trimmings of each of the offices are to be of hardwood, while all of the walls will be plastered and ornamented. Attractive electric fixtures and modern plumbing fixtures will be installed throughout.

At the front of the building there will be a modern electric passenger lift, while at the rear there will be installed a separate freight elevator. Each tenant is to have the use of fireproof vaults that are to be built in.

General Exhibition Room and Library.

In the basement there will be an exhibition room and a library. It is contemplated that the exhibition room will be equipped with fifty opera chairs, and a motion picture screen and frame. It is to have a paneled ceiling and hardwood floor. The library will also have a hardwood floor and suitable shelving for the filing of books, magazines, trade papers, etc., and will contain a library table and comfortable chairs for the convenience of readers.

Each tenant will have joint use of the exhibition room and library and will also have a large locker space located in the basement.

All of the public corridors will have terrazzo floors and marble base. The stairs will be of ornamental iron with slate treads, except the first floor which will have marble treads. On the first floor space is to be provided for private telephone exchange and telegraph office. On the roof there will be a roof garden, a recreation room, and separate retiring rooms with toilet facilities, for male and female employees.

Heat, water, elevator service, janitor and charwomen will be furnished at all reasonable hours. Each floor is to be subdivided, but should a prospective tenant desire an entire floor the central partition will be removed and, in the event of one desiring more than a single floor, arrangments will be made for private stairways connecting them. It is said that subject to promptly obtaining leases, occupancy can be given on or about December 15, 1916.

Will Fill a Need.

Washington has long been in need of a building of this type, one that is really fireproof, new and constructed to fit the needs of the rapidly growing business. It has been in the minds of a number of people for some time, but this is the first real announcement of intentions. The building will be located somewhere in the vicinity of Ninth street, where there are a number of motion picture theaters, and will be easily accessible from all parts of the city. With all of the principal film exchanges under one roof it will be of considerable advantage to visiting exhibitors from other cities who may not care to chase all over town in order to be able to visit perhaps a half dozen exchanges. The movement is a commendable one and will probably receive the earnest consideration of a number of concerns who have long wanted for something of this type.

Sidney B. Lust's Business Extends.

Washington, D. C.—Sidney B. Lust, who operates the United Film Service Company in this territory, has extended his activities to the point where he not only carries a line of accessories, but is in a position to do poster mounting. He is now utilizing the entire upper floor of the building at 903 E street, northwest, for that purpose and he has installed an outfit which he claims will enable him to give prompt service. C. J. Dexter, who formerly did this work for the local exchanges, having his place of business at 414 Ninth street, northwest, is no longer in the field.

Change Affecting Local World Film.

The North Carolina territory of the World Film Corporation, formerly looked after by the Washington office, will hereafter be controlled, according to report, by the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, having headquarters in Asheville, N. C. It is said that this organization has closed for the World service in ten or eleven of the Southern states. The service will hereafter be from the Atlanta office of the World Film. The S. A. Lynch Enterprises control a large number of theaters through the South, as well as being interested in other connections.

Manager Thompson Badly Burned.

D. J. Thompson, manager of the Chelsea theater, a colored house on M street, near Nineteenth street, northwest, is in one of the hospitals badly burned, as a result of a fire in the theater operating room, which burned out the front of the house and destroyed a large number of films. It seems that when the operator saw that there was danger, he jumped from the booth. Mr. Thompson quickly went up into the room and did his best to put the fire out. As a result he was badly burned about the head, face, hands and arms and his mouth was very badly burned. He deserves great credit for the pluck that he showed. It will be several weeks before he can again be on the job. The machines, a Power's 6-A, in good condition, was also damaged.

F. B. Wathne Gets Loving Cup.

Fritz B. Wathne, manager of the Washington branch of the International Film Service, has been made the recipient of a loving cup, one of the ten offered by the company to the branch exchange managers as a testimonial of their success in handling first-run bookings for its serial, "The Mysteries of Myra."

BALTIMORE NEWS LETTER.

By J. M. Shellman, Special Correspondent
1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore Md.

Another Pearce and Scheck Theater.

BALTIMORE, MD.—It was announced by Nat Keene, manager of Pearce and Scheck's Victoria theater, 415 East Baltimore street, that plans are now under way for the erection soon of a large theater in the 400 block of South Broadway consisting of 12 lots, near the Leader theater, another one of their interests. At the time the Hippodrome theater was opened, in which they now have large interests, they were contemplating the building of a theater on this location. The pressure of business in regard to this enterprise, however, forced them to postpone the project.

Pictures at Casino.

Baltimore, Md.—Another surprise in the building line is the announcement that the old Casino building, which is located on East North avenue near Charles street, is shortly to be remodeled for use as a large moving picture theater. An ordinance will shortly be introduced in the City Council asking for permission to proceed with the enterprise. Architects are now preparing plans for the remodeling of the structure into a theater.

Theater for South Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—An offer of $8,500 was made to the city on May 17th, through John B. A. Whetle, counsel for the Parkway Theater Company, for the former public school building at Light and Poultney streets.

The object of the Parkway Theater Company in acquiring the property is to erect a $150,000 moving picture theater on the site, and the offer was made providing the city will authorize the erection of a theater. It was also stipulated in the offer that the sale would carry with it the transfer of an irredeemable ground rent of $217, now being paid by the city.

The Board of Estimates, to which the offer was made, stated that it is did not think there would be any difficulty about the passage of the ordinance, but would not guarantee the transfer of the ground rent.

New Crescent Opens.

Baltimore, Md.—The New Crescent theater, 1509 Lafayette avenue, opened its doors to the public on Monday, May 22d, in gala array after having been entirely renovated. The management has planned to show its patrons only the big productions.

S. M. Buckman Managing the Peabody.

Baltimore, Md.—The Peabody theater 11 East North avenue, is now under the management of S. M. Buckman. It was stated at the Peabody on Wednesday, May 24th, that Mr. Buckman has been managing this theater since May 1st.

Baltimore, Md.—The Gordon airdome, located at Baltimore and Catherine streets, is now open to the public. A high class program has been arranged for its patrons by the management.

Altoona's Strand Opens

Handsome New Quarter-of-a-Million Dollar Theater Was Formally Opened Monday, May 29—Owned by the Silverman Brothers—Seats 1,500 Persons—A Fine Organ and Details of Its Construction.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

ALTOONA, PA.—The handsome new Strand theater, Altoona's $250,000 motion picture palace, was formally opened on Monday, May 29, in a brilliant and very auspicious manner. The Strand is a model of architectural beauty. This house had been in the course of construction for the past ten months and embodies the results of much study and the extended experience of the owners, Silverman Bros., pioneer exhibitors of Altoona. Nither time nor expense was spared in carrying out the project.

All the latest and best ideas in theater building for the most effective presentation of photoplays have been incorporated in the new Strand. It is a brick and steel fireproof structure of imposing exterior. One of its many beautiful decorative features is the lobby, which is finished in the rare marine brocadilla marble. The interior is equally striking and luxurious in its furnishing and equipment. The seating capacity of the house is 1,500, which number it accommodates comfortably. A Hope-Jones organ was installed at a cost of $10,000, and this is augmented by an orchestra of able musicians. The projection equipment consists of two Simplex machines, supplied by the Feature Film & Calcium Light Co. of Pittsburgh. Triangle and Paramount pictures are shown, with a change of program three times a week.

The Pitt Begins Summer Films.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Pitt theater, Penn avenue and Seventh street, inaugurated its summer season of high-class photoplays on May 29, with the showing of the Clune film spectacle, "Ramona," beginning a two weeks' run. Manager Patch has presented the picture as a mammoth film opera, using three massive stage sets, 50 singers, dancers and instrumentalists. The symphony orchestra of 30 has been augmented by a Mexican Miramba band. The price of admission has again been raised to 25 cents and 50 cents matinees and 25 cents to $1 evenings. The Pitt is being brightened up with lavish floral displays and other decorations, while the auditorium, cooled by a new iced air system, is one of the most comfortable to be found anywhere.

OPENING OF THE ORPHEUM.

Mark Browarsky's Splendid New Theater in Pittsburgh.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The new Orpheum theater, at Forbes street and Murray avenue, in the Squirrel Hill district, was thrown open to the public on Saturday, May 27. Mark Browarsky is the owner of the Orpheum, which is a very handsome addition to that section's fine array of modern photoplay theaters. The seating capacity of the house is 400, while the equipment and decoration would do credit to any theater of much greater proportions. The music is supplied by a Seeburg Style R organ. The pictures shown are in keeping with the high standard set in the construction, arrangement and equipment of the theater, Metro, Paramount, Fox, Big Four and World subjects constituting the program, which is changed daily. Ten cents admission is charged.

W. A. Kay Joins Unicorn.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—W. A. Kay, a well known road man formerly with the Independent Film exchange in Pittsburgh, has joined the forces of the Unicorn Film, 125 Fourth avenue, as special representative. Mr. Kay has established a large circle of friends among the exhibitors during his two years in this territory. He will look after the Unicorn's short subjects particularly, of which class of films this service releases 21 reels weekly, chiefly one and two reels in length.

Travelogues at the R. & C. Theaters.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—All of the Rowland & Clark theaters, including the Regent, the Strand, the Oakland, the Belmar, the Bellevue and the Arsenal, Pittsburgh, are showing with much success the new weekly travelogue features just inaugurated by the Metro. Unusual interest is displayed by the patrons of the Rowland & Clark houses in these pictures, which are considered a new and striking departure in their treatment of animal and bird life, aside from their portrayal of scenic splendor.

May Bar All Young Children.

Erie, Pa.—A movement has been undertaken by the city officials of Erie, Pa., to have children under 12 years of age barred from motion picture theaters. An ordinance to this effect is being considered, it is said.

Quality Film's New Branch.

Charlestown, W. Va.—The Quality Film Co. has recently established a branch office at Charlestown, W. Va., in the Boiarsky building. Mark N. Horwitz is in charge.

Al. W. Cross on Booking Trip.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Al. W. Cross, head of the Hunson Feature Film Company, Pittsburgh, Pa., is on a ten-days' booking trip to Harrisburg, Williamsport and other cities in eastern and central Pennsylvania.

Favors Sunday Shows

Cleveland Congregational Minister Comes Out in Favor of Sabbath Picture Shows—Says They Might Be Doing a Work That Changed Social Conditions Prevent the Average Church Doing.

By Hubert Persons, Special Correspondent, Standard Theater Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, O.—The movement planned by the Federated Churches to force Cleveland moving picture theaters to close on Sunday in observance of a state law, seems to have been utterly forgotten. Instead, now comes Rev. Dwight J. Bradley, Congregational minister, declaring he is not only opposed to any movement to close picture theaters on Sunday, but will dismiss his own Sunday night congregations and urge other pastors to do the same, if the picture theaters will run what he calls "inspirational" films. His suggestion was made in a letter to Charles J. Goeppinger of the Melba and Homestead theaters, asking him to suggest a means of improving picture programs.

In reply Rev. Bradley declared churches should help and not criticise the picture theaters. "On Sunday nights,' Rev. Bradley's letter said, "the moving picture houses could run an especially inspirational film, for example, "The Christian," which I see is coming to the Melba soon. If it were possible to make some such selection for every Sunday night, you would be doing the work which a changed social condition has made almost impossible for the average church to do any longer.

"Personally I should be glad to put my influence behind the support of such a move and in some definite way. All churches could get together, call on the theater manager and say to him:

"'We'll close our churches on Sunday nights and urge our combined congregations to atend your program, provided you will agree always to have a distinctly inspirational film, not necessarily definitely religious, but one that will breed high ideals, and let one of us ministers take ten or fifteen minutes of the time in outlining the main ideals of the film before it is shown, to help the people get the big punch in it.'"

Rev. Bradley's suggestion is likely to be worked out on the West Side in the near future.

BIDDING FOR FEATURES.

Proposal to Have League Members Bond Themselves Against It.

Cleveland, O.—S. F. Deutsch of the Sun theater gave members of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League some food for thought at a recent meeting, when he suggested that members should be required to put up a substantial cash bond, binding themselves not to outbid each other for photoplay attractions. No action was taken on the suggestion, but it created a mild sensation in the meeting.

BRABANT FILM GROWS.

Company Asks to Increase Capital Stock to $500,000.

Cleveland, O.—The Brabant Film Corporation, 3608 Euclid avenue, has just filed an application with the secretary of state to increase its capital stock from $35,000 to $500,000. Captain H. H. B. Holland, who is president and general manager of the company, has closed contracts with T. Hayes Hunter of New York, to be director general of the company and has also purchased Hunter's rights in a patented method of production which experts believe will greatly reduce the cost of producing pictures by eliminating costly and elaborate stage settings.

He has also signed contracts with Arthur Morrison and William H. Cavanaugh to play male leads in Brabant productions.

Work on a ten-reel feature on the scale of "The Birth of a Nation," is, it is said, to be commenced at once by the Brabant company. The picture will be produced at Norfolk, Va. This site was selected because the scenario is based on the dramatic Civil War battle between the Monitor and the Merrimac, which occurred near Norfolk.

The company will produce other features in Cleveland in a studio soon to be built on one of several pieces of land on which options are held. George G. Kimberley, wealthy real estate and insurance man, is to be treasurer of the company. He will also be a director with Captain Holland, Mr. Hunter and Morrison and Cavanaugh.

A film made by the Hunter method was recently privately screened before newspaper men at the Metropolitan theater and was favorably commented on by the photoplay editors of both the Leader and Plain Dealer. It is declared to be a real asset to the new company which appears to be getting under way in good shape.

Luck Favors Genius.

Cleveland, O.—Louis Becht, proprietor of the Mall theater, Superior avenue, is a thirty-third degree baseball fan, and one of the founders of the Cleveland Rooters' Club. Because of this fondness for the national sport, he installed a score board above the entrance to his theater.

Then he encountered a problem. To use a step ladder to mark the scores would interfere with the entrance and exit and bring down the wrath of the city building commissioner. To mark the board without a ladder seemed out of the question, until Becht saw George Montgomery of Texas, passing his theater.

Montgomery is seven feet three inches tall in his stockings. The score board is just eight feet above the sidewalk. Montgomery was engaged as official scorer and now he draws crowds to the Mall as he appears daily in a natty linen suit and calmly chalks up the scores as the plays are made.

Picture Playhouse Suit in Cleveland.

Cleveland, O.—One angle of the troubles of the Picture Play House Film Company, which went into the hands of a receiver in the New York courts, May 12, has gotten into the United States District Court here. Francis R. Appleton, Jr., the New York receiver, has just filed a petition asking Federal Judge Clarke to enjoin the Cleveland Municipal court bailiff from executing a sale of the bankrupt company's property at 307 Columbia Bldg. The property consisting of films and office furniture, was levied on in a suit filed by F. M. Sultzbaugh and J. E. Bates. Bates was formerly manager of the Cleveland office of the company.

The Federal Court suit was filed through Attorneys White, Johnson, Cannon and Neff.

Governor Willis Settles Controversy.

Cleveland, O.—Governor Willis has ended the controversy between Maude Murray Miller of the Ohio Censor Board and the Cleveland exhibitors in which Mrs. Miller has accused the Cleveland men of persistent efforts to cause her removal from office.

In a recent letter to Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Governor Willis declared that no such effort had been made by the Cleveland men within his knowledge. The exhibitors had appealed to him in order to put an end to the statements made by Mrs. Miller in addresses and in letters.

The Alhambra Children's Shows.

Cleveland, O.—Jack Greenbaum, manager of the Alhambra theater, is continuing his special Saturday programs for children. He deplores a dearth of good pictures especially for children and predicts a new company which is to produce such films will succeed.

Cincinnati's Open Sunday

Mayor Puchta Believes in Clean Picture Shows on Sabbath in His City and Has No Intention of Forcing Them to Close.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Special Correspondent, 610 First Nat. Bank Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—Local exhibitors breathe a bit easier since the question of whether the ancient statute regarding theatrical performances on Sunday has been placed squarely before Mayor Puchta, and decided in their favor. It will be recalled that the Supreme Court of Ohio decided recently that the statute in question is in full force and effect and that, moreover, it applies to moving picture performances, making them illegal on Sunday. Certain religious organizations in Cincinnati, who favor the Puritan Sabbath, called the mayor's attention to this statute and the decision construing it a few days ago and asked him to take action to close up Cincinnati picture houses on Sunday. He stated definitely, however, that there was nothing objectionable in clean picture shows on Sunday or on any other day, and that he had no intention of forcing them to close. As a matter of fact, the old statute in question is a dead letter in virtually every city of the state, remaining merely as a weapon in the hands of advocates of Sunday closing in the smaller towns and villages; and the attitude of the mayor indicates that as yet Cincinnati will not join these.

Former Censor on Censoring.

Cincinnati, O.—The steadily increasing interest taken in moving pictures by club women, as well as a refreshing view of the censorship problem, were shown in an address by Miss Helen Duey, of New York, before the Julia Ward Howe Club, of Cincinnati, recently. Miss Duey, who is well known as a former censor herself, pointed out that there are at least two sides to the subject, and that the only safe criterion is the opinion of the real public and not of isolated individuals of narrow view. The need for pictures especially suited to children under sixteen was suggested as one of the great needs of the industry. Manager C. E. Holan, of the V-L-S-E exchange, was a speaker at the meeting, outlining briefly the evolution of the moving picture and pointing out the immense improvement which has been seen in a comparatively short time, with the inference that still further improvement may be looked for.

FOX MANAGER PLEADS GUILTY.

Fined $100 and Costs for Disregarding Orders of Censors.

Cincinnati, O.—The trial of A. M. Muller, Cincinnati manager of the Fox Film Corporation, on the charge of failing to see that eliminations from "The Eternal Sapho," ordered by the Ohio Board of Censors, were made before the film was shown in Cincinnati, resulted in a plea of guilty and a fine of $100 and costs for the film man. The case was presented in the Cincinnati Municipal Court, being the first of the kind tried in Cincinnati, or, as far as known, elsewhere in Ohio, and the court stated that the heavy fine imposed was due to his desire to see that the State Board of Censors was duly supported. Manager I. Libson, who was taken from his home at midnight on account of the excessive zeal of the prosecution, which desired to obtain possession of the film through him, was dismissed, as it was apparent that he was in no way to blame for the fact that the picture had not been cut to meet the views of the censors. Mr. Muller's attorney informed the court that the entire trouble arose out of a misunderstanding over the telephone, certain parts of the film being ordered eliminated through the efforts of local people.

Keith's on Summer Schedule.

Cincinnati, O.—B. F. Keith's theater is now on its summer schedule, with prices reduced to ten cents, and three performances a day of a combined program of vaudeville and moving pictures. About an hour of pictures, consisting for the most part of news matter and comedies, precedes each vaudeville performance and seems to please the houses immensely. As the summer schedule makes Keith's virtually a picture house, every theater in the city which is open is now in that category; and all of the downtown houses are open, making it a clean sweep for the film shows.

F. N. Tynes to Build Theater.

Portsmouth, O.—A handsome new picture theater is being planned for Portsmouth, O., by Architect C. C. Taylor, of Cincinnati. F. N. Tynes is the owner. The house will seat 700 people, and will be much the finest in Portsmouth, in many respects. It is to be built during the summer, so as to be ready for the opening of the fall season.

Family Theater Makes Hit.

Cincinnati, O.—The running of the installments of "Gloria's Romance," the new Kleine serial featuring Billie Burke, in conjunction with the Triangle program at the Family theater, has made a pronounced hit with patrons of that popular Vine street house, the result being crowds at every performance. The first installment of the film met with success equal to that of the Triangle release of "Peggy," which also featured Miss Burke, and this has naturally helped the succeeding installments, which are being shown regularly.

DETROIT NEWS ITEMS.

Battle Creek Mich.—The officers of the Rex Theater Company, operating the Rex theater, in Battle Creek, are: Glen A. Cross, president; Mable L. Cross, vice-president, and Harvey E. Lipp, secretary and treasurer. The authorized capital stock of the company is $1,000. Mr. Lipp and Mr. Cross control practically all of the stock.

Owosso, Mich.—Fred Patterson plans to remodel his building at 113 West Main street, converting the structure into a moving picture theater.

Flint, Mich.—The Lyric theater, on Saginaw street, Flint, is being extensively remodelled.

Deckerville, Mich.—Plans have been completed for a moving picture theater to be erected for Mrs. Wesley Bearns at Deckerville. It will be 25 by 66 feet in size, and will seat about 300. It will be started at once and completed in August.

Detroit, Mich.—Contracts will be let early in June for the new Iris theater, Grand Boulevard and Chene street. Mildner & Eisen are the architects. Bids have been in for some time.

Detroit, Mich.—The Parkview theater, Parkview and Kercheval avenues, closed on Sunday, May 21. C. M. Orth, lessee, is devoting his entire time to the promotion of a large new house on the opposite corner which will seat around 1,500 and cost $100,000.

New Detroit Ordinance

Alderman James Vernor Has Introduced Into Common Council an Amendment Calling for Formulation of Codes Covering Structural and Sanitary Conditions in Picture Theaters—Certificates of Inspection and Changes.

By Jacob Smith, Special Correspondent, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—On May 23 Alderman James Vernor introduced an amendment into the common council of Detroit (exhibitors please read). The amendment requires the adoption of a code of rules for the inspection of all kinds of shows including picture theaters in the city of Detroit. It also provides for a code governing the heating and ventilating and general sanitary condition of the shows and for the regular inspection of them. If they perfectly conform a certificate shall be issued to them:

"And after the issuance of such certificate, no change or alteration shall be made in such building, hall, show house or play house without application having been first made to such department and officer and a certificate of approval of such change or alteration be had from each of the departments and officers above mentioned.

"Sec. 2. It shall be the duty of any proprietor, lessee or manager to make application to the Board of Building Inspectors Building Commission, the Board of Fire Commissioners, the Public Lighting Commission, the Fire Marshal and the Board of Health for an inspection of the building, play house, show house, or hall with reference to the condition of strength and safety, heating, ventilation and sanitation thereof for the purpose of which designed and for the speedy egress of persons therein in case of sudden alarm or danger, and to furnish such respective departments and officers with a sketch or diagram showing the floor plan of such . . building, with exits, seating capacity and such other information as may be demanded by such departments or officers.

"Sec. 2. This ordinance shall take immediate effect."

"GLORIA" A BANGING SUCCESS.

Management of Majestic Had Fought Shy of Serials, But Is Learning. New Triangle Local Office.

Detroit, Mich.—That serials can be shown successfully at the highest grade of motion picture theaters is being demonstrated at the Majestic theater, Detroit, where Miss Billie Burke in "Gloria's Romance" is being run. The business at all performances the first week was tremendous—breaking all previous attendance records—even the matinee performances drew capacity houses. That the best people are going to the Majestic to see the serial is proven by the fact that the number of motor cars which line up each time is four and five times greater than ever. "We have always been opposed to serials for the Majestic," said Manager M. W. McGee. "But we made an exception in the case of 'Gloria's Romance,' principally because of Miss Burke being in the case—and because we knew that George Kleine would make it an exceptionally good serial. And we are not disappointed. Our patrons seem to thoroughly enjoy it, and we know that practically all of them will come back for the remaining chapters."

New Triangle Local Office.

Detroit, Mich.—The Triangle Film Corporation—Detroit branch—has moved to its new location, 73 Broadway, where it occupies an entire floor. Manager Abe Shapiro was exceedingly busy when the World representative dropped in there on Thursday, May 25. From what could be seen then, the new Triangle offices will be as fine as exists anywhere in the country. The location is central and convenient to all car lines. L. W. Foster continues with the Triangle as special representative through the entire state.

Detroit Joys in Big Conventions.

Although the much-looked-for warm spell has arrived, it will not materially interfere with the motion picture industry as Detroit is fortunate in having thousands of transients every day, due to its being a summer resort city and known for its many conventions. At the present time the Railway Trainmen—some 5,000 men and women—are in Detroit holding their convention—and they will be here until the middle of June. During the month of June there are some fifty conventions—more or less—booked for Detroit—all of which will bring from 500 to 5,000 people to Detroit. July and August are also extremely busy convention months. The various steamship companies from various parts of the great lakes unload thousands of passengers every day at Detroit—the motor car industry bringing thousands of tourists to Detroit during the summer—so that everything considered, prospects look exceedingly bright for the moving picture theaters even during the hot spell.

Jacob Smith Invites You.

If you are not a regular subscriber to the Moving Picture World, send three dollars at once to our Detroit office, 503 Free Press building, in charge of Jacob Smith. Also send new items about your theater to Mr. Smith. No successful theater owner or manager can afford to do without the trade's great paper, which costs approximately six cents per week..

Delinquent in Payment for Licenses.

According to State Fire Marshal John T. Winship, there are about 100 moving picture theaters in Michigan who have neglected to comply with the law which requires a license fee of $10. Notices have been mailed demanding immediate remittances. Those who fail to pay will be ordered to close their houses, and local fire chiefs will be instructed to cut he wires leading to their theaters.

To Mr. and Mrs. Kent, a Girl.

Detroit, Mich.—Best wishes and tons of congratulations to James O. Kent, manager of the World Film Corporation office in Detroit, who is once again a happy "papa." A bouncing baby girl—Sylvia Marie—was born to Mrs. Kent on May 11.

Kalamazoo, Mich.—F. Addison Pelley, lessee of the Majestic in Kalamazoo, Mich., has installed a handsome new stage setting and new drops; a new lighting system, new interior decorations and in a number of other ways materially improved the appearance of his house.

Detroit Briefs.

The Universal Film Company, the Blue Bird Company and the Michigan Metro Film Corporation are located indefinitely at 183 East Jefferson avenue, just a block east of the former location.

Harry I. Garson, of the Broadway-Strand theater, is devoting a lot of time these days in laying his plans for the forthcoming releases of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation, in which he is heavily interested in the Michigan distributing company Mr. Garson is getting letters and telegrams almost daily from Michigan exhibitors asking for the exhibiting rights in their respective localities.

Need a Box Office Phone

Louisville Exhibitor Points Out How Telephone in the Box Office Will Pay—Pictures Conditions and Shows Why It Is a Real Necessity Even in Houses That Distribute Hand Bills with the Daily Program.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—According to one of the leading exhibitors, and he is a man who has no personal interest in boosting the telephone business, every theater should have a telephone, merely as a business-getting proposition and a matter of service to patrons. He stated that he was unable to see how any theater could be so penny-wise-and-pound foolish as not to have one 'phone installed, or both 'phones if it happens to be in a city where there is more than one telephone company.

The cost in the first place is small—$3 or $4 per month—which represents thirty or forty admissions. In many cases the outskirt houses, which use re-run pictures, are severely handicapped by a feeling among their patrons that they will see pictures they have already seen if they attend the suburban house.

In a measure this condition has been relieved by passing weekly handbills in the neighborhood, but the handbill is often lost or misplaced, and an entire family will go down town rather than walk several blocks to the neighborhood theater. One outskirt house features telephone service, and requests its patrons to call up and get information concerning plays and players. The box office girl handles the calls, gives the number of reels in the photoplay feature, the producing company, and the stars entered. She also tells what comedies or other material may be on the bill. One of the downtown houses has both 'phones, and reports that they pay for themselves every month through the volume of business that comes into the theater following calls to find out what program is on, or what time certain shows will start. One exhibitor figures that if he breaks even on the actual business done over the 'phone he is bound to be ahead in the personal service and the service to patrons.

MANY AIRDOMES OPEN.

Summer Season Sets Park Theaters in Race.

Louisville, Ky.—The final opening of real summer weather has brought a lot of the old airdomes to life, and those which have not opened are making preparation to get into the game as quickly as possible. Business with the parks has started somewhat better also, but, according to the leading exhibitors, the downtown moving picture theaters are not suffering any from the airdomes or parks. The Hilltop Amusement Co., which some time ago took over the Crescent airdome, in Crescent Hill, a few blocks from the theater, has arranged to open the airdome under the management of Herbert Nadell. The Broadway, Westonian and Woodland domes will also be open inside of a few days, and the Baxter and Preston have been open on warm nights for several weeks. There have been some changes in the management of the domes, however, as bad weather last season caused a number of the original owners to lose money.

Alf Oldham Back.

Alf Oldham, former manager of the Woodland airdome, who went to St. Louis, Mo., about a year ago to manage a picture theater there, has returned to Louisville, and will be active in the management of the Woodland garden open air theater this summer. Mr. Oldham made a big success of the venture during its first season.

Stewart Cayce Will Write Publicity.

Louisville, Ky.—Stewart Cayce, of the Walnut Street theater, will hereafter be publicity agent for the theaters operated by the Broadway Amusement Enterprises, including the Rex, Alamo and Walnut, as well as several outskirt houses. Bob Rodgers, of the Louisville Herald, who has been handling the pubilicity campaign, has been forced to resign because of his exacting duties on the morning paper. Mr. Cayce has had a great deal of experience along this line, and at one time was at the head of the photoplay writing classes of the Louisville Y. M. C. A.

Cherokee Amusement Trading Stamps.

Louisville, Ky.—The Cherokee Amusement Co., operators of the Cherokee theater, in the Highlands, is giving away cards with every ten-cent admission, except on Saturday and Sundays. These cards may be redeemed for silverware in much the same way as trading stamps, and are redeemable by the Davis Advertising Co., of New York. That the idea is popular is shown by the fact that everyone is asking for the cards, 50 of which are good for a teaspoon and 300 for table knife. This form of premium is inexpensive, and entirely inside of all lottery laws.

The Alamo's Own Local Weekly.

Louisville, Ky.—The Alamo theater, since purchasing a new camera, has arranged to take pictures each week of local happenings of interest, and has planned to run a regular local weekly film. Some excellent material was obtained on Saturday evening, May 20, when the big plant of the Cooperage Company burned to the ground. This first was one of the most spectacular seen in Louisville for years, and burned most of the following Sunday.

Louisville Notes.

The Rex theater of Louisville is playing the Pavlowa pictures to a fair audience at an admission price of 25 cents. This theater has done a far better business since it was remodeled and its name changed from the Novelty to the Rex.

Manager George Hackett of the Sun theater, recently let a contract for repainting and decorating the building inside and out, and when the work is completed will have a very attractive suburban house.

A number of theaters in this district have contracted for the new serial, "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring," including the Empire, Crystal, Norman, Hilltop, Sun, Gem, Frankfort, Lyric, New Albany and Kerrigan, New Albany.

J. M. Wentzel, owner of the Norman theater, has again contracted for Universal service. Mr. Wentzel is one of the successful, solid, old line picture men of the city.

Simon Switow of the Switow Amusement Co., has had the Crystal theater done over inside and out and has made several improvements in the building.

The Sanders Amusement Company has taken out a building permit for several minor alterations on its airdome at 2434 West Broadway, which will be opened in a few days.

The Macauley Theater Company, the oldest legitimate house in the Louisville district, has filed articles of incorporation, listing a capital stock of $2,120. The incorporators holding the entire issue are Annie A. Macauley, Mary L. Smith, Rachel M. Bigelow and Albert A. Bigelow. The debt limit is placed at $10,000.

The Idlehour Amusement Company, with a capital stock of $1,800, divided into 180 shares, has filed articles of incorporation. The company proposes to conduct moving picture theaters and is authorized to incur an indebtedness not to exceed the capital stock. The incorporators are Floyd Whitehead, Henry T. Kraft and F. L. Wilhoff.

L. J. Dittmar, head of the Majestic Amusement Company, returned from a business trip to New York City recently.

Kentucky News Notes.

Sardis, Ky.—The Sardis opera house has installed a private lighting plant and will no longer be forced to depend upon erratic local central station service.

Irvine, Ky.—J. Ernest Stivers of Lexington, Ky. is arranging to open a new airdome at Irvine with a seating capacity of 800. Irvine is one of the rapidly growing oil towns of the state.

Paintsville, Ky.—Gus Arnett and Harry Conley have taken the management of the Stafford theater. Maynard Brothers effected a satisfactory settlement with their creditors and the bankruptcy petition was withdrawn.

TENNESSEE NEWS LETTER.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Special Correspondent, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

Summer Films at Strand.

Memphis, Tenn.—The Strand theater, Bellevue and Linden avenues, will be operated during the summer months in connection with Lanier's Merry Garden, according to announcement made recently by Arthur Lane, who will be in personal charge of the attractive little theater. Mr. Lane is resident manager of the Orpheum theater, and his connection with the Strand will be for the summer only. Mr. Lane has announced that he will display photoplays de luxe at the Strand, and that there will be musical features along with the daily change of pictures. First run pictures only will be shown and a special matinee will be arranged for children on Saturdays.

Tennessee Notes of Interest.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Crescent Amusement Company has been receiving bids on the new $100,000 Majestic theater, and contracts for erecting the building will probably be let inside of a few days.

The Knickerbocker theater of Nashville has received many favorable comments on the efficiency of its high grade orchestra. This orchestra is under the leadership of B. B. Reisinger.

The Majestic Amusement Company of Memphis, Tenn., raised prices to ten and twenty cents at New Majestic No. 2, during the showing of "Undine."

The Alhambra of Nashville, Tenn., recently exhibited the fifth episode of "The Mysteries of Myra," which is going very well with the playhouse.

ST. LOUIS NEWS LETTER.

A. H. Gieble- Special Correspondent, 236 Vanol Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

Russell Airdome Leased to Skouras.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—Spyros Skouras, manager of the Lafayette theater, Lafayette and Jefferson avenues, has leased the Russel airdome on Russell avenue, just east of Jefferson, four blocks away from the theater, to run the Lafayette's program during the hot months. The cold and rainy season last year almost put the out-door shows out of business, but the Russell is in an excellent location, and when it was not actually pouring down rain, always had a crowded audience. Mr. Skouras has decorated the place, which was already a handsome airdome, with Grecian statues, many brilliant lights, and has planted one hundred and twenty trees, symmetrically arranged, to add to the beauty of the garden. An excellent orchestra furnishes the music for the entertainment, which is of pictures exclusively, usually a new feature every day, with a comedy and travel and news films. The Russell seats about 2,000 persons, and the admission is ten cents.

War Benefit at Pageant.

St. Louis, Mo.—A. E. Morelock, manager of the Pageant theater, 5851 Delmar Bl., gave a showing on May 22 of films of war scenes in France, for the benefit of the American fund for the French wounded. The moving picture exhibition began at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and after an hour and a half of the pictures, a dinner was served at a popular west end restaurant. After the dinner a dance was given, which wound up the three attractions of the benefit entertainment. The proceeds will go to the support of the rural hospitals throughout France.

Business Notes.

Ambrose Abrams, special representative of the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., visited the St. Louis branch under the charge of S. J. Baker, during the week of May 15. Mr. Abrams found trade conditions good in all the districts he visited, and was especially pleased to hear that the St. Louis office had won the prize for the largest proportionate amount of business done during the month of April.

General Exchange Manager Berger of the International Film Company paid a hurried call on E. W. Dustin, local manager of the International, in the Plaza Bldg., 3300 Olive street, on May 20. Mr. Berger found trade prosperous in the Mississippi Valley. The International, although a new organization, has exceeded all expectations in recent bookings in this territory.

Tom Leonard to Travel for Universal.

Tom Leonard has just recently been appointed Universal traveling salesman. Mr. Leonard is an old time exhibitor, having been in the game since its infancy. He is personally acquainted with nearly all the exhibitors in the territory, and should have nice easy sledding in placing Universal contracts.

Illinois Theater Changes.

Moline, Ill.—The Grand theater on Fifteenth street, between Fifth and Sixth avenues, is closed. Lee Woodyatt, manager, blamed lack of business.

Richmond, Ill.—Robert Gibbs has purchased the motion picture theaters here and at Wilmot.

Oregon, Ill.—Paul Black has sold the Star theater here to Mr. and Mrs. Miles Cutting of Rockford.

Rock Falls, Ill.—A. E. Berlin, Jr., manager of the Lyric theater here, will erect a 40x100 motion picture theater, seating 500.

Charleston, Ill.—C. D. Mitchel has abandoned his plan to erect an opera house on Sixth street and announces that he will construct a one-story motion picture theater on the same site.

Harvard, Ill.—Alrich & Scott, who have sold the Photodrome at Richmond, will now devote all their time to the Palace theater here.

Rock Falls, Ill.—Mr. and Mrs. William Boston, who will open a new airdome here within a few weeks, will call it "The Rock airdome."

Ottawa, Ill.—The Gaiety theater will not be used for moving pictures, Frank Thielan of the Ottawa Orpheum having leased it for five years for road shows.

Quincy, Ill.—Edward C. Brosi has purchased the Bijou theater and has remodelled it. He will re-open with a free show.

Oak Park, Ill.—Manager John G. Hodgson of the Oak Park theater has smashed his rule not to run serials and is going to run George Kleine's "Gloria's Romance."

The Real Censor Spirit

Oak Hill, Ill., Censors Tell Just What They Want—Would Be Fine for a Finishing School for Young Ladies, but Do Full Grown, Healthy Minded American Communities Want Anything at All Like It?

By Frank H. Madison, Special Correspondent, 6749 Emerald Ave., Chicago, Ill.

OAK PARK, ILL.—The West Suburban Committee for Better Moving Pictures, after a partial survey of photoplay houses in this city, still feels that its program is not so idealistic, but that it may be approximated in time at least by the wise and happy co-operation of the public and the management of the moving picture houses.

In its report the committee spoke of the attitude of the exhibitors in feeling that helpful pictures were money-losing propositions. "The committee feels that it is due," said the report, "both to the fact that the moving picture management does not understand or properly interpret the real wishes of the public and that the public does not clearly understand the desire of the moving picture management. That is, that the moving picture management thinks that a certain boost in the demand for seats to see a 'risque' film indicates a desire on the part of the community for more of that kind, which he will soon find to be untrue in Oak Park; and, that the average man having attended an entertainment where this kind of film was the exception and not the rule had his ideals shattered; and, as he thinks, the morals of his small children twisted, and so ceases to attend the moving picture theater at all either alone or with his family. The committee also believes that the public and the moving picture manager can be, and should be brought together and be made to understand each other, for the mutual profit of both; and has addressed itself to that task."

Principles Evolved.

As a result of its experience, correspondence, study, discussion and deliberation, the committee is ready to make the following recommendation of principles to govern the choosing and presentation of films in Oak Park:

Pictures to Be Eliminated Entirely.

(A) On the Social Evil Grounds: 1. Those dealing with sex scenes which arouse unwholesome curiosity and stir the imagination. 2. Those depicting triangular and intricate problems of married life. 3. Those in which characters appear in scanty clothing displaying their persons suggestively or unnaturally, either in jest or in earnest. 4. Those in which the characters take undue liberties with one another's person. 5. Those where the actors by wanton acts, leers, winks, glances, signs, etc., suggest improprieties. 6. Those showing scenes of the "underworld," its inhabitants, resorts and life. 7. Those showing the indiscreet "love" making. 8. Those where the sanctity of the marriage relation is belittled.

(B) On the Ground of Unlawful Acts: 1. Those portraying murder, criminal assaults, lynching, etc. 2. Those seriously depicting resistance to and the circumvention of duties of the police and officers of the law. 3. Those showing mobs and individuals taking the law into their own hands.

(C) On the Ground of Amusements: 1. Those depicting promiscuous dancing of extreme types either in cabaret or on stage. 2. Those showing in detail and with undue emphasis scenes and other games of chance.

(D) On the Ground of Personal Habits or Customs: 1. Those showing the common use of the social glass in homes, hotels, saloons, etc. 2. Those where the hero or heroine resorts to the use of the cigarette. 3. Where details of worship and religious rites are depicted.

Cut to a Flash or Show Only as Incidental to Plot.

1. Those depicting death or other gruesome scenes. 2. Those where weapons for defense are used with deadly or apparently fatal results. 3. Those showing love scenes of too demonstrative a nature. 4. Those representing any form of cruelty to human beings, animals, insects, etc. 5. Those where it seems necessary to show insane or feeble-minded persons. 6. Those where "western life" with its saloons, bars, etc., are depicted. 7. Those in which the weakness of class or race are over-emphasized. 8. Those portraying gambling, cheating, etc., and only when moral is very evident.

Pictures to Be Encouraged.

1. Clean, high-class pictures depicting action, adventure, excitement and thrill in unexaggerated ways. 2. Scenes of pure home life and displays of affection among the members of the family circle. 3. Those where the things which imperil the home and the family are shown, as such. 4. Great historical and epoch-making events in the world's history. 5. Travel pictures. 6. Clean comedy and cartoons. 7. Educational films, even those having to do with the bad effects of sex perversion (when shown to adults only).

Ways and Means.

1. Establish a frank understanding between the moving picture home management and those who are to work for these objectives. 2. Begin and continue a campaign of education in the community to attain these objectives.

(A) By talks before all the various clubs, societies and organizations, especially those where parents may be met. 1. Urging closer scrutiny of moving picture programs on basis of foregoing prior to parents giving permission to children to see them. 2. To urge parents to personally accompany children to see films more frequently. 3. Urging parents to speak promptly to the management of moving picture houses when they find objectionable features in films. 4. Urging all patrons to speak encouragingly and commendingly to management of moving picture houses when films are worthy. 5. Urging appointment of a permanent committee by every organization interested and that the chairman of that committee be automatically a member of a general community committee for the accomplishment of the purpose to be attained.

(B) By issuance of literature.

(C) By the use of the press.

Encourage and promote safe and sane legislation to help accomplish these objectives.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

New Incorporations.

Springfield, Ill.—Secretary of State Stevenson has issued charters to the following:

Foreign Features Film Company, 28 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago; $2,500; to exhibit motion pictures and other amusement features. B. R. Silver, E. O. Blackburn and North Storms.

Terminal Theater Company, Chicago; incorporators: Nathan Ascher, Max Ascher, Lewis F. Jacobson.

Bunch of Bitter Enemies

Indianapolis Exchange Managers All Live Hustlers—They Like Each Other and They Have to Respect Each Other; But Contracts Come Hard When Competition Is Awake—Some of the Best of 'Em.

Special to Moving Picture World from the Indiana Trade News Service.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—Efficiency experts and those who love to see the hustler in his native haunts, not to mention moving picture producers who are tickled to death by a real live branch manager—any of them—would find a world of pleasure if he travelled just once around the branch offices and agencies in Indianapolis. If there ever was a bunch of live, hustling, struggling "bitter enemies" gathered together in one town Indianapolis has that reputation among her branch agents.

It can safely be said that each and every fellow knows his business from A to Z. It can further be said that they have to know the business thoroughly or they don't stay here where they make it a point to know it all.

Manager Miller.

For instance, there is Manager Miller over at the Mutual. The Mutual is just now handling the feature stuff in three of the biggest theaters in the city, not to mention any number of the more than eighty smaller houses in this, the biggest motion picture house city in the country, for it is a fact that Indianapolis has more moving picture theaters, considering the population of the city, than any other burg in the country. Miller is a regular booster. His ability to boost is the secret of his success. Miller managed to put the Chaplin stuff in three theaters downtown on the same day when the Mutual opened with the new Chaplin series. It is the first time one picture has ever been shown simultaneously in three theaters in the city. Of course it was Chaplin, but then—well, it must be handed to Miller.

Manager Hurst.

Over at the Pathe there is Hurst, and he comes across with some good stuff relative to claims for work in his department.

"I see where the boys over in St. Louis are boasting that they are releasing seventy times with one copy of the 'Iron Claw.' Here, within a radius of less than 100 miles—our territory—I am releasing that serial at the rate of seventy-five and eighty showings, and with only one copy. St. Louis is good, but, without boasting a bit, we're better."

Manager Jameson.

The Famous Players has its live one in Jameson. He's a regular hustler, with something to hustle with, for the Famous Players' reels are just about the top notchers in favoritism in Indianapolis and the immediate neighborhood. Then there is G. N. Montgomery of the World Film Corporation, a newcomer in Indianapolis, but going some. And so on down the line. They are a good bunch of live men

The moving picture men are charging that politics figured extensively in the case, and this is no doubt true. This year, a campaign year throughout the state, and a year in which both political sides are seeking public favor by hook or crook, may cause the moving picture men some burdens. The moving picture house in Indiana is near and dear to the public, and it is the public that votes. Thus the moving picture men may look out for a dose of some kind of political medicine.

FILM MEN BOTHERED.

Arrested on Sunday Show Charges But Not Prosecuted.

Princeton, Ind.—Princeton is having its Sunday show troubles. Jean Barrett and William Lightner, owners, were arrested and charged with operating their houses on Sunday. After much wrangling the cases were set for trial in a justice court and a police chief instructed to get a jury. After the jury had been obtained the state refused to introduce any evidence and the justice of the peace finally instructed the jury to find for the defendants. This was done, resulting in acquittal of the defendants. It cleared them, but it did not make up for the time, expense and general trouble caused the picture men.

FRED BOWER'S PRETTY HOME.

Recently Opened Theater Pleases Covington's Patrons.

Covington, Ind.—Fred Bower, popular moving picture theater manager, has opened his new house, the Lyric, and has been accorded fine patronage by Covingtonians. Bower is entitled to all he gets, because the Lyric is a beautifully appointed theater. While not a large theater as large theaters are known in larger cities, there is ample seating capacity and no pains have been spared on the decorative effects. The finishing has been done throughout in soft colors and one feels like walking into a beautifully appointed home instead of a theater when one enters. A "homey" theater has always been one of the Bower strong points.

Lincoln Theater Reopens.

Valparaiso, Ind.—Charles Bailey, manager of the Lincoln, has completed repairs and his theater is now ready for the summer run. Bailey installed a new machine and made other changes which have increased the beauty as well as the comfort of his playhouse.

WISCONSIN NEWS LETTER.

By Midwest News Service.

Theater Changes in Wisconsin.

Oshkosh, Wis.—Carl A. Laemmle, head of the Universal Film Company, has sold the Colonial theater to John Foufs of Harvard, Ill.

Fon-du-Lac, Wis.—W. H. Stoddard, formerly manager of the Henry Boyell Amusement here, announces he may open a vaudeville and moving picture theater here some time in September.

Marinette, Wis.—Construction of the new theater on Main street, which has been leased by Ascher Bros. of Chicago, has begun and the house will be opened some time in the fall. It will be 90x120; will seat 700 and will contain a large pipe organ.

Prescott, Wis.—H. F. Leaseman has taken a two years' lease on the Opera house here and will operate a moving picture show.

Brillion, Wis.—Henry Esler has sold his moving picture theater here.

Rhinelander, Wis.—The Cozy theater (formerly the Bijou) was reopened with the Vitagraph feature, "God's Country and the Woman."

Grand Rapids, Wis.—The Daly theater has been leased for a year by John T. Stark, proprietor of the Ideal theater and the Palace Theater Company.

True Censorship Begins at Home

Says an Iowa Preacher, "A Man Trying to Run a Clean Show Has a Hard Time While Some of You Church People Hunt Vile Films."

Special to Movin Picture World from Midwest News Service.

BURLINGTON, IA.—Rev. A. R. Forsythe is an evangelist who has praised the moving picture show in a revival meeting. "A man would be a fool," he said, "to believe that the motion picture is not here to stay, and that they cannot be of great educational value. And when we wanted to hold Passion week service in a downtown church the door was locked to us, while the owner of a picture house showed enough Christianity to let us use his auditorium for the meetings. Now, I want you to get that way down in your gizzard. It's a good thing to know something about the people about you.

"At the same time a man who is trying to run clean, decent pictures has a hard time trying to pay expenses while some of your church people are hunting around for a place where you can find low and vile films."

Show Near College Wanted.

Ames, Ia.—A proposed ordinance to bar moving picture theaters from the 4th ward, in which is located the Iowa State College, has caused a great deal of agitation here. One result is that a petition has been prepared containing the signatures of 2,000 persons, including many members of the college faculty. This petition asked that the ordinance be rescinded. Manager Joe Gerbracht of the Twin Star theater has been making arrangements to open a theater within a block of the college campus.

May Produce Film on Campus.

Ames, Ia.—"The Brown Mouse" film version of Herbert Quick's novel dealing romantically with the problem of rural education, probably will be staged on the campus of the Iowa State College here. Five hundred summer school students will assist in the production. The story will be produced by the Barker-Swan Film Company, of Peoria, Ill.

Laemmle Film Wins Suit.

Davenport, Ia.—The Laemmle Film service came out victoriously in a suit brought against it by the McCullough Realty Company for $250, alleged rent. The court ruled that the real estate company knew that when the Laemmle company signed a lease, an ordinance was being drafted by the city council, which would compel all film exchanges to have offices and supply rooms in one-story buildings. He also said the Realty company was aware of the nature of the Laemmle company's business although it was classed as dealing in theater supplies. Therefore, the film company could not be held to the terms of the lease.

Theater Changes in Iowa.

Mason City, Ia.—Manager M. R. Tournier of the Star theater will remodel his house and increase the seating capacity to 400.

Cresco, Ia.—Clyde Mitchell has reopened the Cozy theater.

Vinton, Ia.—Arthur G. Stolte of Waterloo, succeeded Brightly Dayton as manager of the Palace theater.

Fairbanks, Ia.—W. P. Rechkenimer and Earl Bently have opened a moving picture show here.

Williams, Ia.—Clarence King of Luther has purchased the moving picture theater here from Charles Vaughn.

Kingsly, Ia.—Edward Warner and E. Clark have opened a moving picture theater here.

Tama, Ia.—C. E. Olson of Sioux Rapids has purchased the Star theater here from E. Porter.

Forest City, Ia.—W. O. Howard has opened a moving picture theater here.

PRAIRIE STATE NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

Fire Rules and Shows with Vaudeville.

LINCOLN, NEB.—The City council contemplates the passage of an ordinance distinguishing between dramatic theaters and moving picture houses. Two moving picture houses have been advertising vaudeville and it is said by city officials that these theaters are not equipped with asbestos curtains nor is the stage wiring done in accordance with the best safety requirements. It is at such houses as these that the legislation will be aimed.

Rialto Film Lays Cornerstone.

Omaha, Neb.—A crowd of 2,000 persons witnessed the laying of the cornerstone of the new studio of the Rialto Film Company, at the town site of Ralston, near Omaha. Mayor Bragg of Ralston presided and the principal address was given by President Schaefer of the Rialto companies. The crowd was filmed and pictures also were made of the fancy dancing of Hildegard Lachmann, "The Rialto Girl," and Doris Seccord. Miss Lachmann also broke a bottle of wine over the cornerstone. President Schaefer announced that 500 men would be put at work on the construction of the studio.

Nebraska Theater Notes.

David City, Neb.—The Lyric theater is being remodelled.

Loup City, Neb.—Thomas Dadlow has leased the opera house to A. B. Young for a year. Young will run road shows in addition to moving pictures.

Grand Island, Neb.—The operating equipment and booth of the Empress theater were destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $2,000.

Beatrice, Neb.—The Monogram theater dedicated a new machine with the Paramount pictures.

Omaha, Neb.—Edward Lynch, formerly leading man with Eva Lang at the Boyd theater, has signed a contract to play leads with the Rialto Film Company of this city.

IN THE DAKOTAS.

Praise for Pictures.

Grand Forks, N. D.—Rev. A. H. Thompson, pastor of the First Methodist Church, declared he believed the influence of the photoplay was more for good than for evil. He pointed out they had proved a specially efficient counter attraction to the saloon.

Local Theater Changes.

Lemon, S. D.—Oscar Hussa, of Bangor, Wis., and Lew Fein have formed a company to operate a moving picture theater in the Hussa Building, on Main street.

Fargo, N. D.—Edward Nelson and Mrs. Ida Erickson have purchased the Strand theater from Christ Wilhelmson for $15,000. Abel Erickson, who will be manager for the new owners, announces that nothing but moving pictures will be shown.

Langdon, N. D.—Langdon is without a moving picture theater until the building under construction is completed. The Opera house is not in good condition.

Powers Lake, N. D.—Edward Mortensen has been making plans to engage in the moving picture business.

Dakota Items.

Langdon, N. D.—The Electric theater was destroyed by fire. The building was owned by W. F. Winter. Some equipment was saved, but most of it was badly damaged.

Church's Ferry, N. D.—Editor Delameter of the Knox Advocate has purchased the moving picture theater from Cecil G. Gessher.

Enderlin, N. D.—The Grand theater has installed its own lighting plant.

To Frolic for the Fund

At Minneapolis, Twin City Screen Club Will Help Actors' Fund by a Party—Friday, June 9, Will be the Time and Some Central Theater, at 11 P. M., Will be the Place—Committees Appointed to Have Charge of the Matter.

By Perry S Williams, Special Correspondent, Address Minneapolis Tribune.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—Friday, June 9, 11 p. m., has been set aside by every person in Minneapolis engaged directly or indirectly in the moving picture business as the time for him to "do his bit" to aid the Actors' Fund of America. The date was set by the Twin City Screen Club when it was learned the time for the receipt of donations for the fund had been extended to June 15. At a large meeting in its quarters on the thirteenth floor of the Radisson hotel the club voted unanimously to help out the fund and the midnight entertainment at some theater centrally located was hit on as the best medium through which to work. The following individuals and committees were appointed to carry out the scheme:

Chairman—Fred S. Meyer. Stage manager—William Koenig. Entertainment committee—Prosper Schwie, L. C. Calvert, James Keough, William F. Koch, Harry Billings and Andy Campion. Publicity committee—Carlton W. Miles, Frederick C. Hinds, Leslie Murray and Thomas J. Hamlin. Ticket committee—Gilbert Tyler, S. B. Sampson, Thomas Gleason and D. O. Hoye. Program committee—E. A. Westcott, D. C. McClellan, E. G. Marohn, L. J. Blumberg and T. E. Mortensen.

Benjamin Goldman was made head of a committee which will draw up a new constitution and by-laws.

The membership of the Screen Club already has grown to one hundred and fifteen and a rather lengthy list of applicants is waiting for the word which will make them members. The club is considering the purchase of a piano and pool table. It is planned to have a ladies' night in the near future. The working out of the details for an entertainment was left to a committee headed by Ben Drum.

C. C. Knapp Heads General Film Exchange.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Charles C. Knapp, for the past two and a half years road representative for the local exchange of the General Film, has been made manager of the branch here, succeeding J. T. Van Meter, who, it is thought, will be sent to take over the managership of the Winnipeg exchange.

General Western Manager F. C. Aiken is responsible for the shift in the local management. Mr. Aiken came here from Chicago to announce the change. Mr. Knapp should meet with success in his new capacity since he is well acquainted with moving picture men throughout the territory and has covered practically every foot of ground in the district served by the Minneapolis exchange.

Adolph Eisner, of Chicago, who is in charge of the film department of the Western Vaudeville Managers' Association, has been in Minneapolis for the past few days and his name is being mentioned in connection with a place on the General Film Company's staff.

May Close Sabbath Shows.

Granite Falls, Minn.—This city may be without Sunday moving picture shows. Petitions asking for the Sabbath closing are being circulated.

The New Grand Theater Opens.

Lancaster, Wis.—Taft Brothers report a capacity house at the first program in their new 200-capacity house, the New Grand theater.

Will Build in Dillon.

Dillon, Mont.—This city is to have a new picture house, according to the announcement of W. B. Hartwig, manager of the Pastime theater. The necessary preliminary moves have been made and construction will start shortly.

Idle Hour Sold.

Eureka, S. D.—A. M. Berg, cashier of the Farmers and Merchants State Bank here, has enlarged his business connections by taking over the Idle Hour theater with F. L. Sutherland.

Gives Bond to Keep Out Children.

Minneapolis, Minn.—James Keough, manager of the Strand, of Minneapolis, has just returned from a trip to Chicago, where he succeeded in making a solid two weeks' booking of "Where Are My Children?" the birth control film. The film has been passed for exposition purposes in Minneapolis, provided no one under 18 years of age is permitted at any of the showings. The permit issued to Mr. Keough by the board of censors contains a restrictive clause which binds him to an agreement to keep out the youngsters in return for the privilege of showing the film at the Strand. Mr. Keough is elated over his contract for the film.

The New Aster Open.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Ruben and Finkelstein have opened their new moving picture house, the Aster, Sixth street and Hennepin avenue. Clara Kimball Young in "The Feast of Life" started the Aster on its career.

Ed. Hinz Back in the Cozy.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Ed Hinz again has obtained control of the Cozy theater. Hinz has been a prominent exhibitor here for a number of years.

Theater Changes Hereabouts.

Racine, Wis.—Earl Beinert has resigned as manager of the Strand theater here. No successor has been chosen.

Stevens Point, Wis.—New theaters are under way at Marinette and Stevens Point, Wis. In the former place Ascher Brothers of Chicago are putting up a new structure which they will occupy in September. At Stevens Point W. E. Kingsbury, with other men of that city, whose names are withheld, is interested in a theater being built in the Kingsbury building.

Ipswich, S. D.—John Pesava has bought the Columbia theater here from C. B. Reeves, who is leaving the theatrical business to devote his time to his insurance business. Pesava sold a theater at Brown's Valley, Minn.

Mondovi, Wis., is to be invaded by R. C. Bennett, already a moving picture theater owner at Rhinelander, Wis. Mr. Bennett will retain his Rhinelander property. He was in Minneapolis a few days ago and announced he would use General and Fox services in his Mondovi house.

Washburn, Wis.—The seating capacity of the Gem will be doubled, according to an announcement made by W. F. Smith, manager. He has signed a year's contract for all Chaplin releases.

Sleepy Eye, Minn.—Mr. D. Walton has disposed of the Gem and is looking for a new location. He formerly managed the Harriet theater in Minneapolis.

Erskine, Minn.—Ness and Chandler have taken over the theater.

Ada, Minn.—New theaters are to be built here by Claude Wenssel, and at Faulkton, S. D.

Mandan, N. D.—Rex Sanders has opened the Rex theater.

Organize in New Orleans

Threat of Censorship Aids Formation of Motion Picture Protective Association of Louisiana—Meeting Held at Triangle Theater—Ernst Boehringer Chosen President and Pat Brennon Secretary—Finance Committee Appointed.

By George Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Protection in the broadest sense of the word, protection from the fraudulent and irresponsible "fly-by-night exhibitor," and protection from censorship, which arises as a bugaboo at the State Capitol, Baton Rouge, where the legislators are in session, was sought by exhibitors and exchangemen alike at two important meetings in New Orleans on Monday of this week.

The first meeting was called to order at eleven o'clock in the Triangle Theater Building, with Manager Ernst Boehringer as host to more than a score of Louisiana exhibitors and a sprinkling of New Orleans exchange men.

After some discussion as to ways and means for fighting the censorship menace, there was formed the Motion Picture Protective Association of Louisiana, with Ernst Boehringer, of the Columbia Amusement Company, president, and Pat Brennon, of the Iberville theater, secretary. The finance committee was elected as follows:

William H. Hannon, Nola Film company; Mr. Jacobs, the Prytania theater; Mr. Marks, the Cadiz theater; R. King Evans, manager V-L-S-E exchange; Karl A. Bugbee, manager Metro exchange.

Watchword Is Preparedness.

Rumors that a censorship bill was about to be brought before the legislators in session at Baton Rouge precipitated the meeting in the Triangle theater. Last year there were four separate and distinct censorship measures introduced at the capital. Last year the exhibitors were not organized. Still in all, not one of the four bills were passed. This year the watchword of Louisiana exhibitors is preparedness. They believe they won't be so lucky from now on; that anything accomplished to kill the censorship mania must come from organization and co-operative measures.

A regular assessment will be made on exhibitors and exchanges, the amount to be determined by the seriousness of the situation. It was brought out at the meeting that right now that the moving picture men are fighting a rumor rather than an actual situation. Should the situation become acute, it was declared that the Motion Picture Board of Trade stood back of the newly-formed Louisiana association, and would send men and money if necessary.

New Exchange Association's Charter

Objects and the Agreement of Eight Local Distributors to Protect Their Mutual Interests.

New Orleans, La.—Eight exchange managers of New Orleans, who banded themselves into the Associated Film Exchange Managers of New Orleans in order to discourage unfair, illegitimate and fraudulent practices prevalent among a certain class of exhibitors have had a second meeting. The eight exchanges represented, and who became charter members of the association were: General, Mutual, V-L-S-E, Paramount, Metro, Kleine-Edison, Pathe and Universal.

These managers were selected to serve: R. King, V-L-S-E, president; K. A. Bugbee, Metro, treasurer; H. F. Wilkes, secretary.

The executive board will consist of the officers mentioned and in addition: H. F. Ragland, Kleine-Edison; Raoul Junet, Pathe; Al. G. Shear, Universal-Consolidated; and S. T. Stephens, Mutual.

Dues will be six dollars a month, five of which goes to the association's attorney; and the meetings will be weekly or oftener if necessary. The Association of Film Managers of New Orleans is a revival of the old Film Trades Club, with the exception that the association is patterned for serious matters rather than for social purposes. Extracts from their charter are as follows:

Extracts from the Charter.

WHEREAS, Unfair, illegitimate and fraudulent practices and abuses have been and are being indulged in and perpetrated by certain moving picture exhibitors to the detriment of the undersigned, and others engaged in the business of exhibiting moving pictures; which practices are now seriously restraining the trade, and the business of the undersigned, and all legitimate, honest exhibitors of moving pictures;

WHEREAS, The following violations have been reported:

1. The rules of the film exchange that exhibitors must pay for film service either before the delivery of films or not later than the expiration of the current week has been violated.

2. That fraudulent practices have grown up whereby certain exhibitors in this territory, by false pretenses issue and pass worthless checks upon the exchange.

3. (Refers to sub-leasing without authority of the exchange.)

4. (Refers to destruction of films through faulty projectors, and loss of films by fire, theft or other casualty.)

5. Failure of exhibitors to return the films to the exchange promptly.

6. After booking or leasing film under contract, the exhibitor or lessee sometimes fails, neglects or refuses to accept delivery, in violation of the contract, the exchange or lessor, being in law and in honor bound to hold such films in their respective offices for the exclusive use of the exhibitor of lessee, with whom the exchange or lessor has contracted.

7. (Refers to exhibitors who book film at a stipulated price, and ship them back with a C. O. D. ticket attached.)

Now, therefore, because of these abuses, etc., the undersigned by these presents have agreed and stipulated as follows:

The Agreement.

Article One. Failure of an exhibitor to pay up in full for rental from one exchange bars him from doing business with any other exchange a member of the agreement.

Article Two. Passing of a bad check carries the same penalty, until full restitution has been made. In case of a repetition, the exchanges will not lease any film to him for a period of six months commencing from the date of dishonor, unless the exchanges mutually agree to waive the provision for good causes shown.

Article Three. Sub-leasing without authority. The same penalties are provided as in Article Two.

Article Four. In case of loss or destruction of films either in whole or in part, and while in the possession of the exhibitor, whether such loss is caused by the act of the exhibitor or his agent, and employes, or by the act of a third person, by theft, fire, or other casualty, will refuse to lease films to the offender until full payment for the damaged films has been made.

Article Five. Failure, refusal or neglect to return films to the exchange promptly, if shown to be for unfair and fraudulent purposes, shall call for the same penalties as in Article Three.

Article Six. Where the exhibitor fails, neglects or refuses to accept delivery or carry out his contract with the exchange and ships back the films with a C. O. D. attached, the same penalties shall be invoked.

Article Seven. The association formed by this agreement shall be known as the Associated Film Exchange Managers.

Article Eight. Upon the happening of any of these abuses, due notice shall be given to the secretary of the Association, who shall communicate it to the exchanges a part of the agreement.

Article Nine. A secretary or agent shall be named by the parties hereto whose duties are set forth in Article Eight of this agreement.

LITTLE COLONEL IN BIRMINGHAM, GEORGIA.

Henry Walthall Spends a Few Days in Home Town During Confederate Reunion.

By A. M. Beatty, Special Correspondent, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta.

ATLANTA, Ga.—Henry B. Walthall, who played the role of the "Little Colonel" in "The Birth of a Nation," was in Birmingham, his home town, this week to spend his vacation mingling with the Confederate veterans of the sixties, who were holding their reunion.

The way the young ladies took on over the "Little Colonel" in the lobby of the Tutwiler Hotel was positively painful to the young chaps in their teens who had to stand and look at it.

Every time Mr. Walthall would start to leave the lobby the girls would make a rush for him and surround him, and clasp their hands and give vent to little feminine exclamations of admiration.

"I just want to shake hands with you, Mr. Walthall," they would say. "I saw you in the 'Birth of a Nation,' and you were—oh, so grand!"

Then Mr. Walthall would stop and shake hands all around and make another dive for the revolving doors, but there was nothing doing. It wasn't every day in the year that these southern girls had the opportunity of feasting their eyes upon a real flesh and blood actor who typified in their youthful fancy the bravery and the chivalry of the South, and they didn't propose to let him get away from them.

Nor were the girls the only ones who showered Mr. Walthall with compliments. The veterans, who had seen "The Birth of a Nation" at a local picture theater, slapped him on the back and wrung his hand, and told him with shining eyes how they were taken back to the days of their youth, and to the scenes of the civil war, when they saw him leap over the breastworks and charge the Yankees with the Stars and Bars wrapped around him. And they told him it made their hair stand on end and made them rise up and yell themselves hoarse when they saw the Ku Klux riding down that white road like a whirlwind, because many of these same veterans had been one of these Ku Klux clans, away back yonder.

New Company Asks Charter.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Southern World Film Company, soon to have offices in Atlanta, filed application for a charter in the superior court Saturday morning. The company will manufacture and lease moving picture films.

The new film concern will be capitalized at $100,000, with privilege to decrease to $50,000. J. W. Hanlon, R. O. Holton and D. B. Thornton are the incorporators.

Sara Kelley Gets Picture Job.

Atlanta, Ga.—Miss Sara Kelley, who is employed at the Georgia Chamber of Commerce, left Atlanta Tuesday afternoon for New York, where she will begin work with the Famous Players company. Miss Kelley was offered a position in the moving pictures by Director Frederick Thompson, who was impressed with her beauty. The friends of Miss Kelley in Atlanta expect her to be highly successful as a member of the screen world.

Film Benefit at the Grand.

Atlanta, Ga.—For the benefit work in the slums of Atlanta the Friend Rescue Mission of Decatur street conducted at the Grand theater Sunday an exhibition of moving pictures. A select and appropriate showing of features were donated by the different film exchanges in Atlanta.

There was no admission charge, but a free-will contribution was taken at the door, which will be devoted to this worthy cause.

Fulton county has purchased a motion picture machine for the Battle Hill Tuberculosis Sanitarium, located on the outskirts of Atlanta, and frequent picture shows will be staged in the auditorium to help the officials solve the problem of keeping the patients amused and contented.

Incidentally the Fulton county health department is to use the machine to stage picture shows in the negro sections of the city to teach tuberculosis preventative measures and at the same time to show the negroes what is being done at the sanitarium for the members of their race.

IN KANSAS CITY.

The General's Hospitable Projection Room.

The General Film Company's offices are getting to be a gathering place for exhibitors. Formerly that exchange used its projection room on Tuesdays only. Now, it is in constant operation. P. O. Proctor, manager of that office, is elated over the great showing being made by the Chaplin release, "Police." Not only is it making a great deal of business in the outside territory, but it recently established a record for the consecutive run of a Chaplin comedy, when the Wonderland booked it for seven consecutive days.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., Gathering With Iron Claw.

Thirty-eight houses in Kansas City are now showing "The Iron Claw," a record which C. S. Edwards, Jr., local manager of the Pathe exchange, feels confident, is the best made in this city on any serial ever presented. Not only is an extraordinary showing made in the city proper, but the out-of-town houses showing this picture are extremely enthusiastic regarding it. Three copies of this release are booked up sold for six weeks, which indicates the success of the picture.

J. W. Hicks Promoted.

John W. Hicks, for the past two months office assistant of the Kansas City branch of the General Film Company, is now acting as assistant manager of the Oklahoma City quarters. Recent action of the home office put this branch under the control of the Kansas City office, making P. O. Proctor manager of both places. Mr. Hicks, therefore, is the head of the Oklahoma City branch, being under the direction of Mr. Proctor, who is in Kansas City. This is the second advancement for Mr. Hicks in the past two months. In March, when H. L. Orear resigned to go to Cincinnati, his place as office assistant was filled by the new Oklahoma City executive. A. L. Teagarden, who for some time past has had charge of the general office in that city, resigned to go to Dallas, Texas.

Kansas to Re-route Films

State Has Its Own Projection Room for Viewing by the Censors—At Topeka and Lost in Depths of Roomy Public Building—Exchanges Wondering Whether State Will Prove Efficient at Re-routing Film After Approval.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Local exchanges have just received advice that the new projection room at Topeka, established by the Kansas State Board of Censorship, is now open and there all pictures will be reviewed by the board. This room was really ready some time ago, but after preparing it, it was found that the law of the state as regards exhibiting moving pictures was of a character as to make useless the special room fitted out. The state, in its letter to the exchanges, announced that it would re-route the pictures, after approving the same, as per direction of the exchanges. This would seem to be some consolation to the companies, but it really is not. Heretofore all pictures have been forwarded to Topeka, where, under the direction of some local exhibitor they have been shown to the board. For this work, the exhibitor took care of the films, and shipped them according to the advice of the exchanges, getting a fee of 50 cents per reel. He was held responsible for the same, and in this way satisfactory arrangements regarding the disposition of the film were always in effect. Now, with the state handling the film, and charging no fee for exhibiting, it is a question with the exchanges whether or not they can depend on the state to route their pictures after a review. To this end, and to insure safety, it will practically be necessary to continue the employment of some persons to take care of this matter. Time alone will tell whether or not the room of the censors will be of value to the exchanges.

Much complaint has been made regarding the so-called projection room. Expressing it mildly, one Kansas City man has said that "it will take a guide to get to that room and a couple to get back, with an even chance of starving while attempting the feat." Although this exaggerates the position of the quarters, it is true that it is a rather secluded corner of the State edifice. Whether or not the room will be a success remains to be seen.

SCREEN CLUB COMING.

Organization Will Soon Be Complete. Stag Dinner.

Kansas City, Mo.—The much-needed Screen Club of Kansas City will soon become a reality. Under the direction of F. C. Mills, E. R. Pearson and J. H. Gilday, over six hundred letters were recently sent out, with a view of getting the opinion of interested parties regarding the organization of such a body. It is the plan of the committee to have a stag dinner, at which the organization can be perfected and put on a permanent basis. Present plans contemplate all members of the industry in the body, also representatives of the trade papers. Kansas City has not had anything like this for some time, and it is the belief of those starting the organization that such an association would fill a much-needed want. It is very probable that the middle of June will see the Screen Club of Kansas City on its feet demanding recognition from the country at large.

Fire at the Tenth Street.

Kansas City, Mo.—Fire which originated from electric wires in the orchestra pit, according to firemen, did extensive damage to the pipe organ of the Tenth Street theater, on Tenth, near Baltimore. Much of the interior wall finishing of the theater was ruined, and a piano, an electric player-piano, the stage and incidentals were burned. The damage was reported at $2,000 to the building and $4,000 to the contents. The building was owned by the Standard Amusement Company of this city, which also operates the Willis Wood theater.

F. T. Scott Back Once More.

Kansas City, Mo.—F. T. Scott, manager of the Apollo theater, 3227 Troost avenue, is back at work after an absence of over a month, during which time he was laid up. The first night he returned was the occasion of the first suburban showing of the Chaplin comedy, "Carmen," and so hard did Mr. Scott labor handling the great crowd that he was laid up for an additional period. However, a week's rest-up, spent in the adjoining Clay county, put him back in shape, and he is now on the job each night. The Apollo will soon get into its Open-Air theater, at Thirty-first and Troost avenue. The place, which has a seating capacity of 2,000, is now undergoing a siege of cleaning and repairing, and as soon as the weather permits, it will be thrown open.

A Youthful Exhibitor.

Kansas City, Mo.—The local film industry claims the honor of having in its midst one of the youngest, if not the youngest exchange manager in the United States. This is A. A. Chatkin, local executive of the United Film Service. Although but 22 years old, Mr. Chatkin is a veteran at the game, having worked at it for the past seven years. He started in at Buffalo, N. Y., as shipping clerk gradually working upward past the position as booker, traveler, etc., to that of manager of this office, which place he has been filling since last September. During his tenure here the business has made an increase of two hundred per cent., which is a mighty fair little average for a twenty-two-year-old youth to maintain.

A. A. Chatkin.

George Bowles Feels Proud.

Kansas City, Mo.—George Bowles, publicity man of the Universal Film & Supply Company, is feeling very elated as the result of recent inquiries regarding the local "Universal Weekly," of which he is not only the editor-in-chief, copy-reader, reporter and office boy, but also the originator.

Dale Theater Sold.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Dale theater, 24th and Troost Ave., Kansas City, has been sold by R. W. Cropper to William Richardson. This is one of the smallest houses in Kansas City and has had a rather varied career. In conjunction with the theater, a large airdome is put in use in the warmer weather.

Ted L. Morse Road Man for World Film.

Kansas City.—A new traveler with the World Film out of the Kansas City branch is Ted L. Morse, who for some time past has been with the General. Mr. Morse gets the position left vacant by the advancement of J. S. Stout, now connected with the Salt Lake City office of the World Film. Richard Robertson, local manager, although regretting to part with Mr. Stout, is exceedingly pleased with the newest member of his force, and predicts that some records along the line of selling films be made.

New World Film Deal

S. A. Lynch Enterprises Take Over World Film Corporation in Eleven Southern States—Territory Extends from Richmond, Va., to El Paso, Texas—R. H. Logan, Recently of the Dallas Office of Paramount, Is Manager.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Special Correspondent, 618 Comal St., Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—There was quite a little stir in film circles in Dallas during the week of May 15-20 when it was announced that the S. A. Lynch Enterprises had taken over the World Film Corporation in the eleven Southern states. This will give them the territory from Richmond, Va., to El Paso, Tex., and from the Kansas line to the Gulf, with offices at Atlanta, Ga., New Orleans, La., and Dallas, Tex., which will be known as the Southern World Film Corporation.

R. H. Logan, recently manager of the Dallas Paramount office, was put in charge, succeeding Max Graff. The Paramount office at Dallas is noted for the excellent manner in which it is run, and in which Mr. Logan takes much pride, and he says he expects to have the World office running it a close second within the 30 to 40 days, and will make the World productions just as much in demand in this territory.

R. W. Lynch, of Asheville, N. C., will succeed Mr. Logan as manager of the Paramount offices at Dallas.

Tent Shows Affect Picture Show Business.

Dallas, Texas.—An overflow of tent shows throughout west Texas has very materially affected the picture show business. It seems to have been one thing after another to kill the business for the last six weeks. Recently there have been more revivals, protracted meetings and tent shows than were ever known in that section of the state. But exhibitors say they had rather have 'em in a bunch than have 'em strung out all summer.

San Antonio Has Unique Park.

San Antonio, Texas.—Something new in the way of a summer amusement is being tried out in San Antonio, and it bids fair to go good. Box Bros., owners of the Petticlerc theater at San Antonio, have opened a different kind of amusement attraction. It is a park located down town from which it derives its name—"Donton Park." An admission of 10 cents is charged, which entitles the patron to see two separate shows which are going on all the time. At one you can see first-run features and at the other a mixed program. There are some 200 refreshment tables where soft drinks are served, and from which you can watch and enjoy the pictures. A dancing pavilion is furnished for the dancers and a 20-piece band furnishes the music. There are also several other light amusements.

This park is the first of its kind to be opened in San Antonio, and it is being watched with interest, for if it goes well there will probably be several others opened owing to the fact that the warm season will soon be upon the residents of the city and outdoor amusements have the preference.

Roof Garden at San Antonio.

San Antonio, Texas.—The Soledad Roof Garden was opened at San Antonio May 21 with pictures and dancing by Jack Burke. This garden was operated last year under the management of W. J. Lytle. Mr. Burke, the present manager, has been manager of the Grand Opera House at San Antonio for years.

Blue Bird Theater in Oak Cliff.

Dallas, Texas.—Oak Cliff, a suburb of Dallas, boasts of one of the prettiest houses. It is known as the Blue Bird theater, and is located on Tyler street near Jefferson. The house will seat 600. The front is of log concrete work, which makes a very handsome appearance. An $8,000 Fotoplayer, a Minusa Gold Fibre screen, two 1916 Motiographs and one transverter have been installed. B. D. Malone is the manager of the house.

Golden Oaks, Dallas, Changes Management.

Dallas, Texas.—The Golden Oaks theater, recently built in Dallas, has changed management, B. D. Malone having succeeded E. J. Copley. The front of the theater has been remodeled as well as an $8,000 Fotoplayer being installed.

Now a Monthly Journal.

Dallas, Tex.—The Motion Picture Journal, published in Dallas, and which is of great interest to film men all over the South, has decided in future to issue monthly journals instead of weekly, as it has been doing since November, 1915. Previous to that time it was a weekly. C. A. Walker, its able editor, is one of the strong individuals in the Southwest.

Plues Goes to Little Rock.

Dallas, Texas.—A. W. Plues of Dallas has gone to Little Rock to open an office for the Exclusive Feature Film. He will handle five-reelers and other subjects. Mr. Plues recently handled Kalem's Social Pirates.

Macbeth Resigns.

Dallas, Texas.—W. W. Macbeth, formerly secretary and treasurer of the Western Automatic Music Company, has resigned and is now with the United Music Company, handling Fotoplayers.

Dallas Screen Show.

Dallas, Texas.—The Dallas Screen Club is planning big things. They are to give a monster film and vaudeville show at the Majestic June 4.

Visitors to Dallas.

San Angelo, Texas.—The Commissioners have purchased a motion picture machine and will install same at the State Tuberculosis Sanitarium at Carlsbad to entertain and amuse the inmates.

Fort Worth, Tex.—R. A. Healy of the Healy theater was a recent visitor to Dallas.

Sherman, Tex.—Jim B. Wilson of the Gem and Jewel visited Dallas week of May 15-20.

Derider, La.—Fred Johnson was a visitor to Dallas recently and purchased a 1916 Motiograph from the H. K. Barnett Film & Supply Company.

Denison, Tex.—Frank Mamola of the Queen visited Dallas recently.

Sulphur Springs, Tex.—J. C. Barnes of the New Mission theater was in Dallas week of May 15-20, making some changes in his bookings and looking over several new serial propositions.

Wolfe City, Texas.—A. W. (Jack) Lilly, who recently purchased the Sunset and Busby theaters, was in Dallas May 14 arranging bookings for these houses. Mr. Lilly is one of the oldest exhibitors in the State, owning both the Hippodrome and Queen at Commerce, Texas.

Enid, Okla.—M. A. Blackburn opened up his new show May 1.

Uvalde, Texas.—C. W. Holley, who runs the Electric Palace Airdome, was a recent visitor in Dallas.

San Antonio, Texas.—A. F. Box of Box Bros., owners of the Petticlerc theater, was in Dallas recently, purchasing the necessaries for the new Doutou Park.

Dallas, Texas.—E. F. Walker has recently opened an airdome on Colonial avenue.

Broken Bow, Okla.—A. W. James has recently purchased the Cozy from John F. Facklin.

Dallas, Texas.—L. C. McHenry reports good business with the "Unwritten Law," which he is handling in this territory on a percentage basis.

Austin, Texas.—Chas. McCormick of the Crescent at Austin was in Dallas week of May 15-20.

Mount Pleasant, Texas.—John Martin was in Dallas week of May 15-20, rearranging bookings and looking over features for the Martin theater.

Sherman, Texas.—The Topic theater of Sherman was represented in Dallas week of May 15-20 by W. B. LaNicca.

Farmersville, Texas.—R. E. Carnes of the Dreamland visited Dallas during week of May 15-20.

Bonham, Texas.—Ben Halsel of the Queen was in Dallas recently and booked "Eternal City" for a special showing.

DENVER NEWS LETTER.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Field Carmichael Promoted.

DENVER, COLO.—One of Denver's old-exchange managers in point of service and one of the best liked left this city last week when Field Carmichael of the Fox company went to Los Angeles to take charge of the office of the same film concern there. The transfer is a big advancement for Carmichael and this is the only consolation his many friends among the exhibitors and exchange men here have in his going.

W. S. Rand of Triangle and other of his friends, among them S. L. Baxter, owner of the Isis theater, and their wives accompanied Carmichael and his wife to the train and as the couple boarded the choo choo they were showered with rice much after the fashion of newlyweds. The porters and other train attaches were liberally "tipped" and instructed to take good care of the supposed bride and bridegroom. Although the Carmichaels have been married seven years they were probably more embarrassed than they were on their wedding day and they undoubtedly had much explaining to do on their trip to the West Coast.

Albert W. Eden Succeeds Carmichael.

Albert W. Eden, former road man for the Fox Film, has been named successor to Carmichael in the Denver territory. He arrived here several days before the departure of Carmichael and was made acquainted with local conditions by the retiring manager. Harry Lenhardt, western manager, came to Denver direct from New York to oversee the change. He will remain in the city for a week.

H. B. Fish to Manage United Exchange.

Another change in the management of a Denver film exchange was announced this week. H. Bradley Fish, former exhibitor and more recently a road man for the General, has been made manager of the United Film Service. He succeeds I. D. Purdy, who has become associated with the Universal Film company as a special representative.

Changes at Universal Office.

W. P. Moran, the new manager of the Universal Film exchange in Denver, announced a number of changes in his office force this week. Harry Quinn, formerly with the Universal at Salt Lake, has been made chief booker in the Denver office with Barney Rose, late of the Triangle, as his assistant. Art Waters has been placed in charge of the shipping room.

In addition to these changes L. D. Purdy, former manager of the United, has been engaged to act as special traveling representative in the Denver and Salt Lake territories.

L. Goldstein Opens Unicorn Office.

The new Unicorn exchange has been opened and is now doing business under the management of Louis Goldstein, former manager of the Universal here. Irving Ehrensaft has been made booking clerk and Sam Weitz is in charge of the shipping department.

Pending the time that the Unicorn service is ready to open its San Francisco office Carl Stern will work on the road for Unicorn out of the Denver office. Stern was formerly manager of the Bluebird exchange here. He will be in charge of the Frisco office for Unicorn when it is opened.

Brief Notes.

Denver, Colo.—Frank Frewen has sold the Seventeenth Avenue theater to A. B. Barnard, who will continue to operate it as a moving picture house.

Castle Rock, Colo.—Hackler Brothers of Castle Rock have started work on a new moving picture theater. They expect to open July 1.

Colorado Springs, Colo.—The Pike theater at Colorado Springs will be enlarged this summer to accommodate 1,200 people.

IN CALIFORNIA.

To Open Airdome.

Calistoga, Calif.—H. D. Hubbard, of Hubbard's photo play house, will open a large airdome on June 14th with "Carmen," featuring Geraldine Farrar. Spanish settings will be used, an orchestra will furnish music and the opening will be made a noteworthy event.

Here and There in San Francisco.

A fire broke out one afternoon recently in the operating room of the Elite theater on Market street, but the damage was confined to the film, "The Naked Truth."

Edward H. Kemp has disposed of a Motiograph traveling outfit to be taken to Camp Curry in the Yosemite valley for the summer season.

Porter & Seymour, who are opening a moving picture theater at Twenty-eighth and Church streets, have installed two Simplex machines and a Wagner converter purchased from the Breck Photo Play Supply Company.

T. L. Haynes, of the Atlas Educational Film, is enjoying a vacation in the San Joaquin Valley and is also looking out for business while away.

The Tivoli theater has booked the first release of the Juvenile Film Company, controlled here by the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc.

The Washington Square theater in the North Beach district has gone over to the big feature policy and has advanced its price of admission to 10 cents.

O. V. Traggardh, of the Union Film & Supply Co., is making a business trip to Los Angeles.

G. A. Metcalfe has shipped a Powers Cameragraph No. 6-A to J. V. Houston, who conducts a chain of theaters around Klamath Falls, Ore.

The Palmer theater, at Twenty-fourth and Castro streets, has been purchased by Ford & Myers, who also conduct the Acme.

Northern California Items.

Healdsburg, Calif.—A moving picture house to cost about $50,000 is to be erected here by Charles E. Naylor.

Stockton, Calif.—A Caille electrically operated ticket selling machine has been installed at the Colonial theater.

Porterville, Calif.—A pipe organ costing about $5,000 is to be installed in the new Monache theater.

Huge San Francisco House

Newly Incorporated Market Street Realty Company to Build a Theater with 3,240 Seating Capacity and at an Expense of Almost Two Million Dollars—Company has Bought Other Houses.

By T. A. Church, Special Correspondent, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif.—The Market Street Realty Company, recently incorporated with a capital stock of $3,000,000 by Mark L. Gerstle, Leo J. Clayburgh, J. J. Jacobi, Charles Schlessinger, Herbert Rothschild, J. M. Rothschild and Albert Dernham is having plans completed for a moving picture house at Fourth and Market streets to have a seating capacity of 3,240 and to be the very finest in the entire country. This theater will represent an investment of $1,750,000, and construction work will be commenced as soon as materials can be assembled. This company has just purchased the Portola theater and the Market Street theater, a little further up Market street, more popularly known as "The House of Movies," a house conducted for years under the management of Hallahan & Getz. The purchase price of these two houses is approximately $225,000, making the deal one of the largest in amusement circles in years.

These important transactions, coupled with the erection of the huge new house, places the Market Street Realty Company in a commanding position in the downtown section and all of its affairs will be under the direct management of Eugene H. Roth, who has made such a success of the Portola theater. The first noticeable improvement in the Market Street theater has been the installation of a fine orchestra of eleven pieces and other changes will be made from time to time. The program is being selected from the V-L-S-E, Triangle and Mutual releases, and all new Chaplin pictures will be shown. When the new theater is in operation Mr. Roth will have control of three houses, with a combined seating capacity of about 5,600, and will thus be in a position to secure a pick of programs enjoyed by but few in the business.

ACTORS' FUND SCREEN BALL.

Exhibitors' Entertainment a Delightful Event—Film Stars Present.

San Francisco, Calif.—The entertainment and ball for the raising of funds for the Actors' Home was held on the evening of May 13th in the Exposition Auditorium and was a delightful event, although the attendance was disappointing. Mark M. Leichter, who has devoted much of his time of late to arrangements for this event, and who has virtually had charge of the financial end of the affair, is still uncertain in regard to the total receipts as exhibitors having tickets for sale have not rendered a full accounting. While several thousand were in attendance the crowd was lighter than was expected. The date set was rather late, as the vacation season is now setting in, and in addition exhibitors were spending so much of their time in the censorship fight that they did not give the benefit as much attention as they would have under ordinary circumstances.

Mayor James Rolph, Jr., chairman of the executive committee, was unable to be on hand, but sent a personal representative in Supervisor Charles A. Nelson, who led the grand march with Miss Anita King, "The Paramount Girl." Hobart Bosworth was present from Los Angeles and Sessue Hayakawa was also in attendance. Preceding the dancing there was a concert by the Municipal Band, songs by Miss Bertha D'Aubigny, the "Poppy Ballet," by Abbie Tilsley, songs by Monte Austin and Miss Mabel Brookover, a drill by the California Grays and the introduction of moving picture stars by Sid Grauman. Many prizes were distributed, including annual passes from the Pacific Coast Baseball League, the Imperial theater, the Empress theater and the Tivoli theater.

In addition to Mayor James Rolph, Jr., those who served on the executive committee were Morris Meyerfeld, Sid Grauman, Alex A. Beyfuss, J. A. Partington, Claude Langley, Eugene Roth, Sam Harris, Joseph Levin, Ralph Pincus, M. J. Getz, Geo. Davis, Homer Curran, J. J. Cluxton, Sam Levin, Sam Gordon, Thos. O'Day, N. K. Nerzog, Mark A. Lasky, S. Oppenheimer, William J. Citron, Ralph Clark, Louis Reichert, R. Quive, H. H. Hicks, X. K. Stout, M. L. Markowitz, H. W. Oviatt, R. S. Simpson, H. W. Stubbins and Sam Loverich. The finance committee consisted of Herman Wobber, chairman; Mark M. Leichter, Irving Ackerman and Louis R. Levy.

Lincoln Theater Changes Hands.

San Francisco, Calif.—Sam Gordon has disposed of the Lincoln theater, 335 Sixth avenue, to Atkisson & Godfrey, who have taken possession of the house. Mr. Atkisson formerly conducted the Majestic at Concord, Calif., while Mr. Godfrey has the Grand at Vacaville, Calif. Both are very well and favorably known in the moving picture field, having been in the business for several years.

Exchange Manager on Eastern Trip.

San Francisco, Calif.—Herman Wobber, who has charge of the Progressive company's interests, with headquarters here, left for New York just before the Actors' Fund ball, to be absent for five or six weeks.

Sol Lesser Home Again.

San Francisco, Calif.—Sol L. Lesser, head of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., and the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., has returned from a stay of several months in New York. He recently purchased the rights in this state to "Where Are My Children?" and is preparing an active campaign on this feature, with some of the finest lobby displays ever seen here.

Metro District Manager Covering Territory.

San Francisco, Calif.—J. J. Unger, manager of the far Western exchanges of the Metro, with headquarters here, left recently for the Northwest and will visit all of the branch exchanges in this territory before returning. The releases of this concern have proved a great success in the magnificent new Rialto theater here and much new business is coming in as a result.

California-Made Carbons Shipped East.

San Francisco, Calif.—The fact that California-made carbons are commencing to become a factor in the supply business is indicated by the fact that G. A. Metcalfe has made several large shipments to points in the Middle West from the plant at Richmond, a suburb of San Francisco. The local plant is not a large one, but is being operated night and day.

Mike Rosenberg Returns to Coast.

San Francisco, Calif.—Mike Rosenberg, who has been conducting a film business at Washington, D. C., during the past year, has turned over his eastern office to Leon Netter, formerly with the All Star Feature Distributors of this city, and was a recent visitor here on his way to Seattle, his former home.

Censor Meets Exhibitor

Chairman of Censor Board Attends Meeting of Exhibitors—Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association Luncheon Scene of Lively Debate — Question of Standards and Instructions to Viewers Discussed.

By Abraham Telson, 601 Journal Building, Portland, Ore., Special Correspondent.

PORTLAND, Oregon.—F. T. Richards, recently appointed chairman of the censor board, was the guest of the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association at its luncheon May 18. Mr. Richards' purpose in attending the exhibitors' meeting was to explain what he considered the co-operative attitude of the censor board towards the exhibitors and to state the manner in which he intended to conduct censorship of motion pictures during his term as chairman. His revelations of his views on censorship and what he considered co-operation greatly surprised the exhibitors present, but the meeting was nevertheless pleasantly concluded.

Before the questioning commenced Mr. Richards stated his plan of censorship was to co-operate with the exhibitors to get cleaner pictures. He stated it would be his policy to take from the viewers any so-called legislative powers which they now have by adopting a basis from which to work. He stated he thought his plan would do away with the complaint that some scenes were being shown in one theater that were barred in another. The exhibitors gathered from his remarks that this would be accomplished by means of instructions to the viewers.

This was the surprisingly inconsistent part of Mr. Richards' revelations. The exhibitors complained that all recent unpleasantness with the board was due to the fact that certain viewers stated they were acting under instructions in cutting gambling and fight scenes. Mr. Richards denied such instructions had ever been given and the film men settled back in their seats with a more serene feeling. But when cross-questioned he admitted that he had on his desk a list of censorship standards and instructions to viewers which included the two complained of by exhibitors and many more and that these instructions were soon to be put to the board for adoption and that thereafter they should govern the viewers' actions. Then the serene feeling left the exhibitors. Asked how, in the face of the fact that the two alleged instructions relating to gambling and fight scenes had already caused so much complaint, he could expect his list of added instructions and standards would make the situation more pleasant, Mr. Richards failed to give a coherent reply. He admitted when questioned that a person possessing the qualifications of a juror would not necessarily make a good moving picture censor. He stated that he thought if a federal censorship bill were passed it would do away with local censorship and made the assertion that the majority of the people in Portland favored censorship.

After the meeting closed Mr. Richards journeyed to the City Hall still feeling that his plan of giving written instructions to viewers would clear the local censorship sky notwithstanding the forecast at the meeting that such a plan would have the opposite effect.

Out of town visitors at the luncheon were: H. M. Wilson, road man for General, Roy Madden, road man for Mutual, and George Bligh, of Salem, Oregon.

Best Month's Business This Year.

Portland, Oregon.—This statement was made by Edwin James of the Majestic and crowded houses have evidenced the fact. The straight 15-cent picture houses in Portland have been holding their own notwithstanding the fact that two combination vaudeville and picture houses showing at 10 and 15 cents have entered the picture theater district within the past few months. The Sunset closed recently, the reason, it is said on Film Row, was that the high rent made the venture unprofitable, although the house could attract business.

New House for Butte.

Seattle, Wash.—Jensen and Von Herberg, of the Greater Theaters Company, operating the Coliseum and other theaters here and the Columbia in Portland, have purchased one of the prominent corner lots in Butte, Montana, and will immediately begin the construction of a $200,000 theater. The building will be modeled after the Liberty and will have a seating capacity of 1,600, making it a third larger than any theater now in Butte. It is expected to have the house completed in October.

Exchanges Support Organization.

Portland, Oregon.—The Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association is receiving hearty support from exchanges and manufacturers. Recent letters received by the officers of the association indicate that exchanges in Seattle as well as Portland are with the local men and that eastern and California manufacturers have voiced a desire to co-operate with them.

From Southern Oregon.

Portland, Oregon.—Road men returning from the southern part of the state report the moving picture business there at a standstill. In Roseburg, where a price war has been waged for some time, all the houses have gone to 10 cents, the former price, the attempt to raise to 15 cents having been unsuccessful.

At Eugene the Rex and Savoy have entered into an agreement with the Eugene theater whereby neither of the first named houses will show vaudeville, if the Eugene will not show pictures. Except for this and one or two other instances the exhibitors in the towns south of Portland have no working agreement among themselves and the keen competition has resulted in a standstill of business.

Heard on Portland's Film Row.

F. M. Simonton, Standard Feature Film Company, will handle E. & R. Jungle films in this territory. Francis J. Hawkins came from California to close the contract.

W. A. Van Scoy, cameraman for Pathe, recently returned from Boise, Idaho, where he photographed the Arrow Rock dam as it was being filled. Mr. Van Scoy reports a new airdome being constructed at Boise.

R. C. Bacon has sold the Columbia theater at Clatskanine, Oregon, to C. L. Conyers, who runs the People's at the same place.

C. H. Code returned to Portland recently after a successful trip through Oregon, Washington and Idaho booking "Mary Page."

E. M. Loy, formerly booker for Metro, will handle publicity for the Portland Amusement Company.

A. A. Colby, formerly operator at the American, Dayton, Wash., has opened the Star at Condon, Oregon.

The Pastime at The Dalles, Oregon, has closed. An automobile contest was the last straw, reports say.

A. Mosier has acquired the Mutual theater, Portland, from C. E. Boone, who will open the theater at Gearhart-by-the-Sea.

Tom Conlon, former manager of the Empress, Portland, has gone to Spokane as manager of the Ackerman & Harris house there.

SPOKANE'S MIDNIGHT SHOW.

Manager Ralph Ruffner Again Comes to the Front with Original Stunt.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPOKANE, WASH.—"Stay up late and be a devil in your own home town," was the language used by Manager Ralph Ruffner of the Liberty theater in inviting the Spokane moving picture public to attend the first of his midnight matinees. It opened at 11 p. m. Thursday, May 18, with an attendance of more than 1,100 fans in their seats and scores were turned away. The matinee closed in time for all persons to catch the "owl cars" (the last cars which leave the city at 12:30 a. m.) for home. Ushers wore nightshirts and nightcaps. He will run the matinees Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights of each week. The production for the initial of these night picture shows was "The Whirl of Life" and all patrons were provided with confetti, noise making articles, rattles and serpentine.

Al Onkin Promoted.

Spokane, Wash.—Al Onkin, who recently opened the Strand theater, Spokane, as the Spokane home of the Pacific photoville circuit and the home of the Bluebird films here has been promoted to manager of the Seattle house of the company. Additional to that he will be booking manager for the circuit which runs pictures as well as vaudeville acts.

Geo. Blakeslee Succeeds Al Onkin.

George Blakeslee, who was for ten years manager of the former Empress theater and later of the Hippodrome theater, has been appointed to succeed Mr. Onkin as manager of the Strand. The appointment is effective at once. Mr. Onkin reports that Hobart Bosworth in "The Yaqui" was a good drawing card for the theater.

Larger Pathe Quarters.

P. L. Carroll, manager of the Pathe exchange in Spokane, has arranged for larger quarters at S. 12 Washington street, Spokane, and will move his offices there where a vault will be built in which to keep films. He reports the change was necessitated by increased business.

Nelson-Foster Marriage.

Spokane, Wash.—J. S. Nelson, assistant manager of the Universal Film and Supply Company exchange in Spokane, was married recently to Mrs. Estelle Foster of the Sillman hotel and congratulations continue to flood his desk as well as various appropriate cards.

SALT LAKE NEWS LETTER.

By H. W. Pickering, Special Correspondent, Address Deseret News, Salt Lake City.

H. E. Ellison Becomes Secretary of Swanson Circuit.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—Following close on the announcement of the change in management of the Swanson theaters in Salt Lake—the American, Rex and Liberty—came the further announcement from W. H. Swanson that Homer E. Ellison would become secretary of the Swanson circuit of theaters with general supervision over the western enterprises of that concern.

Mr. Ellison came to Salt Lake from Denver to manage the Paramount-Empress theater when that house was opened last February. He had been manager of the Princess theater in Denver for some time. His new post is quite the largest and most important ever held by him. He entered upon his work last Wednesday.

VANCOUVER NEWS LETTER.

By E. C. Thomas, Special Correspondent, 821 Rogers Building, Vancouver, B. C.

Prominent People Praise Picture.

WINNIPEG, MAN.—No other film ever shown in Winnipeg has been the means of bringing forward so distinguished a body of sponsors, both local and otherwise, as the ten-reel production, "Britain Prepared," made under the supervision of the British Government, and shown for an entire week at the Walker theater, at prices ranging from 25 cents to $1.

On the opening night Sir Douglas Cameron, Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba, and Hon. T. C. Norris, Premier of the province, delivered addresses at the theater in connection with the showing of the film, praising the pictures and sounding a call for recruits, to a house filled to capacity. On Tuesday evening Mayor Waugh took the platform, while the speaker on the following night was Chief Justice Mathers.

Manitoba's Censor Representative.

Winnipeg, Man.—The name of the man chosen to represent Manitoba on the new inter-provincial censor board has finally been announced. J. W. Horn, at present a member of the Winnipeg city board, will continue to perform the censorial duties on the new board, which takes over the administration of these matters on June 1.

New Policy at Orpheum.

Vancouver, B. C.—Manager James Pilling of the Orpheum theater, who has been running two five-reel features per week, will hereafter use only one picture of this length per week, taking a Mutual Masterpicture for the first three days. For the latter half he will use programs of shorter Mutual subjects. The Mutual exchange, which has heretofore brought in only one long feature per week, will after June 26 have two each week. Heavy bookings are reported on Chaplin's "The Floorwalker."

To Enlarge Winnipeg's Lyceum.

Winnipeg, Man.—Although the Lyceum already ranks as the largest moving picture theater in Winnipeg, it has been decided to make alterations which will give this house approximately double the seating capacity of any other. J. D. Atchison, architect, is now preparing plans for a large addition. The house will be carried through to Smith street, and the exits will all be on that side, while the Portage avenue side will be used for the entrance only. Work will be started almost immediately, and rushed to completion.

S. B. Taube Thinking of Old Friends.

Vancouver, B. C.—The World man recently received a letter from S. B. Taube, formerly in charge of the Universal office here, and now co-manager of the Montreal headquarters of the big U. Mr. Taube wished to be remembered to all British Columbia friends, and says the boy is growing fast.

Local Briefs.

Victoria, B. C.—Many improvements have been made in the Royal Victoria theater since it was taken over on May 1 by the Dominion Theater Company, and the interior of this magnificent house now presents a much finer appearance than formerly.

Calgary, Alberta.—A patriotic entertainment was given recently at the Princess theater here, in aid of the band of the 82nd Battalion and the Veterans' Club.

Change in Ontario Law

Exhibitors' Protective Association Petitions for Relief from Rule Governing Apprentice Term of Service for Operators — Want War Tax on Children's Tickets Eliminated—Sale of Tax Tickets.

By W. M. Gladish, Special Correspondent, 1263 Gerrard St., E. Toronto, Can.

TORONTO, Ontario.—Because of many enlistments of moving picture operators in Ontario, exhibitors are finding it difficult to maintain a complete staff of theater employes. So a deputation representing the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario waited on R. C. Newman of the moving picture branch of the provincial treasurer's department, Toronto, on Monday, May 22d, to ask for a modification of the regulations governing the registration of operators.

Ask Change in Operators' License Rule.

The exhibitors asked for a change in the rule which requires an operator to serve as an apprentice for one year before he is licensed by the department. The statement was made that the number of qualified operators and graduating apprentices at the present time is not sufficient for the needs of all theaters and that if more men are not secured in the near future some theaters may have to close. Officers of the exhibitors' association said that a number of returned soldiers had been trained to work as operators, but that they were unable to start their duties because they had not been apprentices for a year.

Mr. Newman promised to lay the matter before Provincial Treasurer McGarry for immediate consideration.

Ask No Tax on Children's Tickets.

The same deputation also waited upon Mr. White, solicitor of the Ontario treasury department, to suggest that the amusement tax on children's tickets to moving picture theaters be eliminated. The exhibitors felt that the war tax on children's tickets was undoubtedly keeping many youngsters from the shows and that the difference in revenue to the picture men was out of all proportion to the war tax which would accrue from the sale of children's admission tickets. This matter will also be considered by the government, the delegation was told.

Want Tax Tickets Sold Through Exchanges.

The exhibitors also recommended that the war tax tickets be sold to the various houses through exchanges or through authorized moving picture men of each center, rather than by division court clerks and other officials as proposed. Nearly all exchanges are already selling war tax coupons in wholesale quantities, but the manner of distribution in outside cities has not yet been definitely settled. This is another subject with which the government can deal and the authorities will probably do so, it was announced by Mr. White.

LEON BRICK WILL RUN REGENT.

Company's Officers Announced—Interesting Notes About Construction.

Toronto, Ontario.—Further details in connection with the opening of the new Regent theater, Toronto, have been made public. The president of the company which will operate the house, starting August 5, is E. L. Ruddy, the wealthy head of a local bill-posting firm, and the vice president is J. P. Bickell, of Toronto, a broker. Included on the board of directors are W. J. Sheppard, a director of the Royal Bank of Canada; James Tudhope and N. L. Nathanson.

Leon Brick, formerly manager of the Garden theater, Toronto, and now a resident of Buffalo, has been mentioned as the probable manager of the new picture house, which is rapidly nearing completion.

The work of designing the interior of the theater was entrusted to Thomas W. Lamb. Among the features of construction will be a mezzanine floor, on which will be found lounge rooms for both men and women, and there will be only one balcony, which will have a long, easy gradient. It is the aim to give the entire house a clublike appearance. An unusual feature for a Toronto theater will be found in a large pipe organ for use in addition to a carefully chosen symphony orchestra. The Regent will seat 1,600 people.

W. F. Barrett Is Mutual Road Man.

Toronto, Ontario. — Announcement is made here that W. F. Barrett, formerly Winnipeg manager for the Universal, has been appointed special traveling representative in Canada for the Mutual Film. He will cover the whole of the Dominion.

P. E. Doyle Joins V-L-S-E.

Patrick E. Doyle, formerly with the Fox branch at Toronto, has joined the staff of the V-L-S-E in Montreal, the office of which has been moved from No 204 to 198 St. Catherine street west. Larger premises have been obtained at the latter address.

W. H. Davidson Back from Capital.

W. H. Davidson, special representative of the Canadian Universal, recently returned to Toronto from Ottawa. He reports that three Ottawa theaters, the National, Casino and Regent, are returning to the program style of film entertainment and that the Universal brand would be seen at each house. The moving picture business in Canada's capital is in fine shape, he found.

Redesigning Regent Theater.

Toronto, Ontario.—Announcement is made that Thomas W. Lamb of New York has been engaged to design the front and interior of the new Regent theater, Toronto, formerly the Majestic, home of melodrama. Mr. Lamb was the designer of the Rialto, New York, and the Orpheum and Fenway theaters, Boston. A feature of the new fittings will be the club-like quarters on the mezzanine floor for both men and women. The theater will have a large pipe organ—something new for Toronto. The house, when reconstructed with only one balcony instead of the old two, will seat 1,600 people. It is planned to open the theater on August 5 next.

Some Interesting Notes.

Toronto, Ontario. — Roadmen working out from Toronto have had several unique experiences lately. Mr. J. Ruck, of the Universal traveling staff, dropped off at Rodney and West Lorne, Ontario, the other day to find that the small local theater in each place had not been visited by a film representative for five years. Both places are villages located near Lindsay, Ontario.

A representative of the Universal company has also ascertained that the Home theater, Sandwich, Ontario, has been taken over by Mr. J. White, sheriff of the town. The house has a seating accommodation for two hundred people. With the sheriff as the manager of the theater, it is expected that the Home will become a popular house.

The Ball Brothers, who have been conducting the Royal theater at Perth, Ontario, for a long time, have opened a new house in Lanark, Ontario, which they have called the "Lanark Royal."

LUBIN.

OTTO THE REPORTER (June 5).—The cast: Otto (Davy Don); City Editor (Patsy De Forest); General Manager (Florence Williams); Manager's husband (George Egan); Maid (Bernard Siegel). Adapted and directed by Edwin McKim.

Let us imagine the advance of woman suffrage and let the pendulum point to the year of 1950. Otto, a reporter on the Morning Argus, and single, is assigned to settlement work where he sees many disagreeable sights. The women are masters and handle the men harshly.

It happens that Dorothy, the city editor, and the general manager, a married woman, of the Argus, whose husband stays at home to mind the baby, are both in love with Otto, a shy and bashful man and between the two he has his troubles.

Dorothy finally wins Otto and the men who are trying hard to again get control of politics, look to him for their leader. Otto is missed from home by his wife, Dorothy. She goes in pursuit of him and finds him addressing a meeting of men. Dorothy enters, denounces them and takes her husband home. She puts the baby in his arms and tells him home is where he belongs.

THE SCAPEGRACE (Three Parts—June 8).—The cast: Jimmy Pierce (George Routh); Mr. John Hammond (Bird Hopkins); Mrs. John Hammond (Adelaide Bronti); Isabel Hammond (Adda Gleason); Vernon Hammond (Alan Forrest); Mollie (Evelyn Page). Written by Josephine McLaughlin. Directed by Jack Byrne.

On the crest of the hill live the Hammonds, John Hammond, president of the only bank, his wife, his son, Vernon, and his daughter, Isabel. At the foot of the hill lives Jimmy Pierce and on the outskirts of the village, brought up by her old grandfather, lives Mollie, who, because of her parentage, has been shunned by the villagers. Jimmy loves Isabel and she cannot make up her mind whether or not she loves him being carried away by the rather fast set into which her brother Vernon has carried her. Vernon and Jimmy both work in the bank and outside business hours the banker's son hits the various "high spots" in the nearby country club and city.

Vernon meets Mollie and the child becomes devoted to him. The boy realizes the girl's beauty beneath her rags and tries to kiss her. Frightened, she struggles and is rescued by Jimmy who incurs Vernon's hatred. Vernon's escapades reach his father's ears who cuts his son's allowance. Vernon then to keep up the pace begins to steal from the bank. He gets an inside tip on Amal. Zinc and speculates with the usual result. He has been altering the books to throw the blame on Jimmy and the night he receives word that he must cover his margin he goes to the bank. Mollie startles him by peering in the window, and he spills ink on a page. Frightened, he removes the page and goes hurriedly out. In his haste to outdistance Mollie and to get home he drops the paper which is treasured by the girl.

The shortage is discovered. Jimmy is accused and makes no denial. Isabel brought to a realization of her love for Jimmy states her belief in his innocence. She suspects her brother and Jimmy tells Isabel he would rather take the blame than let her father and mother and herself be disgraced. A run on the bank follows and Jimmy is arrested. Mr. Hammond half knows that his son must be guilty, but cannot bring himself to openly voice his suspicions. Isabel finds Mollie with the paper and the child innocently tells her of seeing Vernon at the bank. Isabel takes the paper and goes home. Faced by the proof of her brother's guilt and her sweetheart's innocence, Isabel does not know what to do.

Hearing someone enter she hastily thrusts the paper in the table drawer and when Vernon comes in, she accuses him and begs him to do the right thing, telling him of her love for Jimmy. Vernon asks her what proof she has and she says: "Look in the drawer." She goes out and Vernon opening the drawer, finds the missing ledger sheet and a revolver which Isabel did not see. The boy remembers her last words and interprets them wrongly. Manhood comes to the front and he resolves to take the only way out. He takes the revolver and exits. In the woods he meets the ever faithful Mollie and writing a note to his father, he tells her he is going away and sends the note by her. Mr. Hammond has found the ledger sheet and he is determined that no son of his shall let an innocent man suffer when Mollie brings the note and they know Vernon has paid the penalty for his misdeeds.

TWO SMITHS AND A HAFF (June 10).—The cast: John Smith (Known as Jack) (Francis Joyner); John Smith (Known as John) (George R. Raymond); John Smith, Sr. (George Clarke); Mrs. Smith (Jessie Terry); Haffen Haff, Sr. (Herbert Fortier); Haffen, Jr. (Kempton Greene); Mrs. Haff (Florence Williams); Betta Haff (June Daye); Eva True (Leonre Peacock); Mrs. True (Margaret Moore). Written and produced by Clay M. Greene.

Betta Haff, daughter of a wealthy couple, Mr. and Mrs. Haffen Haff, has permitted her parents to select a husband for her. This is John Smith, son of prominent but rather poor people, and Betta has consented to an engagement on account of his social position. The wedding cards are sent out, and Haffan Haff, Jr., comes from the West to attend the wedding, bringing with him Jack Smith, his business partner and chum, and as soon as Betta meets him she begins to regret her engagement to John. Nevertheless, she resolves to carry out the agreement she has made, and preparations for the wedding are completed.

Three or four evenings before the event Betta receives a call from Eva True, a young woman of good family, and learns from her that John has been engaged to her, but jilted her because of the opportunity to form an alliance with the wealthy Haff family. Enraged, Betta tries to break off her engagement, but is dissuaded from her purposes by the elders of both families, because of the scandal.

The night before the wedding, however, a farewell bachelor dinner is given to John by his companions, where the proceedings are so hilarious that the police are called in, arrests are made, and the newspapers publish glaring accounts of the affair. Now Betta determines that the wedding shall not take place. Haff Junior, with charactertistic humor, suggests that everything aimed at by Betta's marriage could be attained if Jack were to take the place of the other bridegroom at the ceremony. Betta enthusiastically endorses the proposition and is locked in her room there to remain until the hour fixed for the ceremony.

In the meantime brother Haff has communicated with Eva True. He goes with her to John and tells him that he will make him superintendent of one of his mines if he will not appear at the wedding, and if he will marry Eva later. When the time arrives for the wedding John does not put in an appearance much to the consternation of the parents of both families. Brother Haff insists upon the cermony proceeding nevertheless. Jack appears as bridegroom, is married to Betta, and explanations are made to the satisfaction of everybody.

SAUCE FOR THE GANDER (No. 8 of "The Social Pirate"—Two Parts—May 15).—The cast: Mona (Marian Sais); Mary (Ollie Kirkby); Laidlaw (Frank Jonasson); his son (B. Furey). Directed by James W. Horne.

Mona and Mary accidentally learn of the fate of one of the victims of the Laidlaws, who are loan sharks. As justice can be secured in no other way, they determine to lay a trap for the two. Mona, by a clever ruse, makes the acquaintance of the son, and as the days go by the worthless young man finds himself in love.

Then Mary enters the game by going to the elder Laidlaw, with a tale that her sister, Mary, is a mercenary adventuress, only playing with the son's affections. The father visits Mona, who has been warned of his coming, and is prepared to act the adventuress role. She spurns his attempt to buy her off.' Meanwhile, Laidlaw, Senior, has succumbed to the guileless charm of Mary, and the son is worried that his money will go to her.

Mona advises him to purchase her affections. Though the girls find the maintenance of dual personalities a trying task they work events to the point where father and son each come across with cash to buy the other's mate off. There is a sad awakening when the girls disappear after relieving the distress of the loan shark's victim.

THE IRISH REBEL (May 16).—"The O'Neill," a famous Irish rebel, returns from exile in time to find the countryside covered with proclamations offering a large reward for his capture. When he tears one of the proclamations down he is seen by troops who pursue him and force him to go into hiding in the hut of a peasant. The distress of his fellows causes him to turn Robin Hood, the proceeds from his brave feats of the highway relieving the poor folk. On one occasion when he holds up a coaching party he is struck by the beauty of Eileen and forces her to dance a few steps of the minuet with him.

Later in a spirit of bravado he risks capture to attend a masque ball at which she is present. Her scream when she notices her ring on his finger causes "The O'Neill" to make a daring leap through the window to escape capture. Eileen arranges a clandestine meeting in the garden with him, but it proves to be a trap and he is made captive. But Eileen's heart has been melted by "The O'Neill's" bravery and devotion and while the officers are making merry in the castle she aids him to escape. They flee together and, after throwing the pursuers off their track when danger seemed near, make their way to the coast to a vessel bound for France—and safety.

THE ARTFUL DODGER (May 17).—The cast: Dolly Stepper (Ethel Teare); Dick (Jack MacDermott); Tommy, his friend (Victor Rottman); Uncle Mugglesworth (Gus Leonard); Flossie (Eileen Godsey). Author, Samuel J. Taylor. Director, Harry Millarde.

Tomkins Tomato Soup presents Dolly with a check for $200 for the permission to use her photograph on their label. But Dolly wishes she hadn't granted it when she meets and falls in love with Dick, whose wealthy uncle is strongly opposed to actresses. After their marriage it seems that everywhere they go that bothersome tomato can turns up and Dolly is hard put to keep Dick from learning her stage past. Then Uncle arrives for a visit and matters go from bad to worse.

Finally, in desperation, Dolly evolves a scheme. After she has explained the plan to Flossie, her former dressing roommate, a theater party is arranged and care is taken to see that Uncle Mugglesworth sits in the front seat of the box when Flossie's act is on. Flossie and Uncle engage in a flirtation which causes the crafty old hypocrite to make a hurried excuse to get away from the party that he might meet Flossie in a nearby cabaret. When Dolly, Dick and Tommy descend upon them later explanations are in order and Uncle Mugglesworth decides that he "has the greatest respect for actresses."

AN INNOCENT VAMPIRE (May 18).—The cast: Sis Hopkins (Rose Melville); Widow Jones (Olive West); Jack, her son (Arthur Albertson); Widower Smith (Richard Purdon); Nell, his daughter (Mary Kennedy); the butler (Frank Minzey); Steve, the loan shark (Henry Murdock). Author, Frank Howard Clark. Director, Robert Ellis.

On the way to take the post of maid at the Widow Jones' home, Sis finds Nell's vanity case which contains a picture of Jack. At the Jones house, Sis manages to blunder into all sorts of mix-ups until she seems to be stealing the love of everybody in the house. First Jack, then the butler, then Widower Smith and, finally, Steve, the loan shark, who calls to collect a debt owed by the butler and who really falls in love with Sis.

Finally Sis is discharged, the Widow Smith declaring she wanted a maid—not a vampire. Steve has formed a plan to kidnap Sis in his automobile but, after a perilous ride, conditions reverse and Sis kidnaps Steve, the auto in its zig-zag course finally landing plump on the Jones' porch. This gives Sis an opportunity to make explanations which heal the breach between Nell and Jack and with all serene Sis accepts the love of the butler.

ONE CHANCE IN A HUNDRED (No. 80 of "The Hazards of Helen" Series—May 20).—The cast: Helen, the operator (Helen Gibson); Billy Warren (P. S. Pembroke); Brent (Harry Schum); Easton (Roy Watson); The construction boss (G. A. Williams). Author, E. W. Matlack. Producer, James Davis.

Billy Warren, timekeeper on the construction job, arouses the enmity of Brent and Easton when he resents their bullying of the other men. Pay day finds the men celebrating in riotous fashion, and Brent in a crazed moment breaks into the station and attacks Helen. Her cries bring Warren, who trounces the bully. Brent and Easton then lay in waiting for Warren and, after a vicious blow has made him unconscious, throw him on a flat car which is started down grade, gaining momentum every second.

Helen learns of the action and, on wiring ahead, finds that a passenger train is speeding towards the flat car so that only desperate measures will save the day. She climps quickly to the seat of her motorcycle and sets out over the tracks after the flat car. Just as she is overtaking it an express depot looms up ahead and seems certain to halt her progress along the side of the track. But without hesitating a second to count the risk, Helen drives straight ahead, up the runway of the baggage platform and, as she reaches the top and comes abreast with the flat car, swerves quickly towards the tracks, dropping to the flat car as she passes through the air above it.

While she is struggling with the brakes a track walker sees her peril in time to send the flat car on a siding just as the passenger speeds by. Before Helen can bring the car to a stop, however, it smashes through the two-story signal tower at the end of the siding, Helen leaping to the ground with the injured Warren just a second before the crash.

THE MISSING MILLIONAIRE (No. 9 of "The Social Pirates"—Two Parts—May 22).—The cast: Mona (Marin Sais); Mary (Ollie Kirkby); Maxwell (Frank Jonasson); Dr. Ludlow (Thomas Lingham); Wentworth (Paul C. Hurst); his partner (Edward Clisbee). Directed by James W. Horne.

Learning that Maxwell, the millionaire munitions manufacturer, has the apartment adjoining theirs in the hotel, Mona and Mary seek his aid in furthering their plans for social reforms. He agrees, but postpones action until the arrival of his secretary. That afternoon the girls overhear two brokers quarrelling with Maxwell outside his door and threatening revenge. Mary follows the brokers, who go to the writing room. When they leave after writing a note, Mary stealthily secures the blotter they use, and back in the room, the girls find by putting it before a mirror that they have half of an address.

The next day they learn that Maxwell has disappeared, and that his stock is tumbling. The girls put their wits to the task and finally learn that the complete address on the blotter was that of Dr. Walter Ludlow, at a sanitarium near the city. Mona goes to the sanitarium and makes arrangements for them to receive Mary, who, she declares, has become mentally unbalanced. While there she succeeds in confirming her suspicions that Maxwell is held a prisoner. By a clever ruse the girls then succeed in maneouvering his escape and also in bringing Wentworth and his partner and Dr. Ludlow to justice.

HAM'S BUSY DAY (May 23).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); the nurse (Norma Nicholls); Old Doc Sawbones (A. Edmondson).

Poor Bud lands in the hospital—but he finds life not at all dreary, for the pretty Norma is his nurse. Ham, strolling by, secures a glance from the flirtatious Norma as she appears at a window. They meet in the garden, but Ham's love-making is interrupted by Old Doc Sawbones, and when the medico is through Ham is a candidate for the hospital. His entry causes jealous thought in Bud's mind, and a jealous plotting starts between the two that ends with the hospital a wreck, Ham and Bud waving flags of truce from the wreckage.

THE BOGUS GHOST (May 24).—The cast: Jennie (Ethel Teare); Ted (Victor Rottman); Madame Ghroan (Myrta Sterling); Claude (Freddie Fralick). Author, S. A. Van Petten. Director, Harry Millarde.

Jennie and Ted journey to the beach in high spirits, but they meet Claude and his attentions cause Ted to start a jealous quarrel. Jennie cries, "Your jealousy is sending me to a watery grave," and a second later falls from the end of the pier. As she does not reappear Ted dismally wends his way home, certain that she has drowned. He does not know that Jennie had reached shore further down the beach.

In a fit of pique over the still fresh quarrel she keeps away from Ted. The ad. of Madame Ghroan for a young lady to assist in her seances catches her eye and she applies successfully for the job. Meanwhile, Ted has been in a fit of despair and finally he decides to test Madame Ghroan's claim to put him in "communication with the departed." As Jennie is the "professional ghost," Madame Ghroan makes good in this case, but Jennie's appearance brings on laughable incidents that have a whirlwind finish.

A BABY GRAND (May 26).—The cast: Sis Hopkins (Rose Melville); Bill, the butler (Frank Minzey); Nell (Mary Kennedy); Jack (Arthur Albertson); Scrooge (Richard Purdon); his wife (Mary Taylor-Ross); Jitney Jim (Henry Murdock); Mammy Johnson (Olive West). Author, Frank Howard Clark. Director, Robert Ellis.

Scrooge has never forgiven the elopement of his daughter Nell with Jack, even though the couple have been happily and prosperously married for a year. But even Scrooge's heart relents when he hears from Sis that there is "a grand new baby," at the young folks' house. Sis should have said "a new baby grand," for that is what her lover, Bill the butler at Jack's home, told her. When the older folks arrive at Jack's house, laden with toys, and there is no baby in sight, Sis attempts to get a substitute infant, and that makes matters worse, especially since the substitute is Mammy Johnson's pickanniny.

THE CAPTURE OF RED STANLEY (No. 81 of "The Hazards of Helen"—May 27). The cast: The operator (Helen Gibson); Detective Pearson (P. S. Pembroke); his aide (Harry Schum); "Red" Stanley (Roy Watson); Stanley's confederates (Ed Gibson and O. Phillipi); chief dispatcher (G. A. Williams).

Red Stanley's band has successfully robbed the express car and the members are making good their escape when they come upon Helen and her girl chum riding in the woods. The girls are set upon but they suceed by desperate riding in making their escape temporarily and, when danger seems near again, are saved by the approaching railroad detectives searching for the Stanley band. A running fight results in the capture of one of the band, but Stanley and his chief aide escape.

Under cover of darkness, as Helen is working alone in the desolate station, the two enter and bind and gag her. They are driven off, however, by the approach of the night train. As she is riding the following day Helen is captured once more by Stanley, and handcuffed, while the horse's reins are tied to a tree. Helen sees the two crooks board a freight train preparing to start from the station. After a tense struggle she succeeds in getting her foot up so as to slip the horse's bridle off and, using her feet and voice to guide him, sets out at great speed towards the train. She drives the horse straight up the baggage platform and aboard a box car just as the train sets in motion.

As the train speeds along she manages to loosen the gag and her cries bring the trainmen to the top of the box car. Guided by her directions they find Stanley and his aide and make them prisoners.

BIOGRAPH.

THE GIRL ACROSS THE WAY (Reissue—June 5).—The cast: The girl (Mae Marsh); The boy (Robert Harron); The girl's father (W. Chrystie Miller); The boy's mother (Lillian Langdon); His cousin (Mildred Manning).

It was a lonesome old burg the boy found, back on his vacation. Interesting possibilities appeared in the girl across the street. He started in to show her life. It lifted the veil of his intention. Then came his repentance. She forgave as the "Book of books" directed. The mother of ambition and wealth stepped in, but the boy took off his coat and got to work. As for the rest, a mother's a mother.

THE YAQUI CUR (Two Parts—June 6) (Reissue).—The cast: The prospector (Lionel Barrymore); The Yaqui cur (Robert Harron); His mother (Kate Bruce); His friend (Walter Miller).

The prospector had taught the Indian boy the doctrine of peace. When his tribe resisted the attack of another tribe the boy did not take part. The din of the battle, as the horsemen circled them again and again, the moans of men caught under falling horses, struck terror in the boy's heart. The incensed warriors cast him from the tribe with the brand of a coward. It was then that his opportunity came to follow the white man's wonderful doctrine, "Big love man lay down life for friend."

A TEMPERANCE TOWN (Three Parts—June 5).—The cast: Mink Jones (Otis Harlan); Ruth Jones (Grace Darmond); Jack Worth (John Charles); Kneeland Pray (James Bradbury); Doc Sawyer (Leslie J. King). Scenario by Gilson Willets. Directed by T. N. Heffron.

Mink Jones of Jonesville, is the lord high executioner and everything else. When Booze and Souse send Jack Worth, salesman for demon rum to Jonesville, he is met at the depot by Mink Jones and his daughter.

Mink also in his capacity as expressman, receives a consignment of hymn books for the parson, and liquor for the hotel bar. Kneeland Pray and Doc Sawyer, the village prescription writer resolve to institute a vice committee to make Jonesville a temperance town, and incidentally make the village drug store an oasis in a desert of dryness. By mistake the case of liquor goes to the parson, and the box of hymn books goes to the village bar keeper. The committee call on the parson just as he is opening the box, and they are shocked to find the parson had received whiskey. They tell him they will say nothing of his private bar if he will join them in the temperance crusade.

Doc Sawyer and Kneeland Pray do a thriving business. Mink Jones buys the village tavern because of the "dry" wave, and brings on some city girls to act as waitresses. These damsels fall in love with Doc Sawyer and the druggist, Kneeland Pray. While gamboling on the beach, Mink Jones takes a moving picture of the doctor and the druggist with the maidens.

Angered, because the lid has been tilted in some unknown way, the druggist and the doctor enlist the aid of the parson and raid Mink Jones' hotel in search of a "blind pig." The "blind pig" is discovered, and Mink Jones is arrested and heavily fined. However, he throws upon a screen moving pictures of the vice committee and the girls, and his fine is immediately remitted.

GOING WEST TO MAKE GOOD (June 10).—The cast: Tom Gilmore (Tom Mix); Vicky Denton (Victoria Forde); Jim Whitmore (Joe Ryan). Written and produced by Tom Mix.

Tom decides to follow Vicky westward, and try the life of a cowboy. However, he reaches the west before Vicky, and soon learns the ways of the cowpunchers.

Vicky is soon to arrive, but in the meantime, three outlaws plan to hold up the stage. The bandits kill the driver and the stage team runs off with Vicky inside. Tom sees the driverless stage going at break-neck speed. He overtakes it in a desperate ride, rescues Vicky, who finds that the easterner has become a westerner.

VIM.

VILLIANS AND VIOLINS (May 26). Pokes and Jabbs, two stranded ministreis, see in a local newspaper an ad stating that high prices will be paid for all musical instruments. They concoct a scheme whereby they can secure enough funds to carry them back home. After Pokes has pawned his violin for a ridiculously small amount, Jabbs enters the store supposedly, in search of a violin. Of all the violins in the store none suits his fancy but the one pawned by Jabbs, for which he offers a large price. The pawnbroker, frantic at his inability to sell the pledged article, begs Jabbs to return after he has had an opportunity to see the owner of the instrument. When Pokes returns to redeem the violin, the pawnbroker offers him a large sum to sell him the instrument and Pokes apparently unwilling to part with his beloved violin, finally consents to the sale.

The pawnbroker in vain awaits the return of Jabbs, and later seeks the advice of his friend Cohen. Cohen's daughter, Ethel, is greatly admired by Robin, an insurance agent who has been seeking to sell a policy to the old pawnbroker. After being continually chased away from the house by Cohen, Robin takes the matter in his own hands by eloping with Ethel and by surreptitiously making out a fire insurance policy on the store in his own favor. When the first pawnbroker arrives at Cohen's store he is surprised to find Pokes inside again pawning the violin. The instant Pokes leaves, the pawnbroker running inside tells Cohen of the scheme, and they decide to spring a trap on Jabbs when he enters. Cohen demands that Jabbs show the money with which he desires to purchase the violin, and the moment he displays the roll of "long green" both pawnbrokers try to capture him. Pokes comes to the assistance of his partner and in the melee the stove is overturned and the store destroyed by the flames.

After Pokes and Jabbs are led away to jail, Cohen is wringing his hands and bemoaning his hard lot, when Ethel and Robin appear and tell him of their marriage. When the old man sees the policy his tears are turned to smiles, and he quickly forgives the elopers and decides that after all, fire insurance is not a bad idea.

THE SCHEMERS (June 1).—Plump was a young man. His thoughts were of love, also of his spring, for it that was to bring him a fortune. Runt, his rival, thought otherwise. Elsie the object of their affections, was undecided, and so the story opens.

First she bestowed her favors on Plump, then on Runt. The spring on Plump's farm is known to possess valuable mineral qualities and a larger offer is made to Plump to sell. He leaves for the city to escort the financier over his property and during his absence, Runt persuades the fickle Elsie to marry him.

Accompanied by his pretty stenographer, the promoter arrives at the farm, where poor Plump learns of his rival's wedding. However, the blow is softened by the little stenographer's sympathy. Not satisfied with winning Elsie, Runt plans to ruin the spring and runs oil into it. Arrived at the spring, Plump is on the point of accepting the cash, when the stenographer discovers that it is an oil well and whispers to Plump to double his price. This he does and once more virtue triumphs over villainy.

THE LAND LUBBERS (June 2).—Plaid Jabbs, a retired sea captain, being accustomed to the motion of his ship to lull him to sleep, finds it impossible to rest ashore. He therefore devises a specially constructed room which he has built into his house and which operated by levers gives the same effect as the motion of a ship at sea. While he is peacefully enjoying his sleep in the rocking room with the lever at the point which operates the effect of a calm sea, Pokes, the new butler in the family household, while making love to Ethel, the Captain's daughter, accidentally releases the lever which controls the effect of the hurricane motion. The violent pitching and tossing of the room causes Captain Jabbs to be hurled out of his bunk and in a rage he discharges Pokes.

Later, Pokes is induced to join a correspondence school for burglars and is subjected to the various tests for courage and endurance which are called for by the curriculum of the school. Having successfuly passed these tests, two of the band lead Pokes out for some practical instruction in the art of entering and robbing houses. Pokes is routed from the first house which he attempts to burglarize, and the conspirators then lead him to the home of Capt. Jabbs for a second attempt. When Pokes learns that the house which he is to rob is the home of his sweetheart, he tries to induce the conspirators to select some other house and failing in this, he flatly refuses to follow their orders. However, terrified by their threats of dire punishment if he should refuse to follow their instructions, Pokes musters sufficient courage to climb in through the window of the house leading into the rocking room. The other two conspirators not trusting Pokes, decide to follow him and enter the room after him.

In the room in which the levers are located, Capt. Jabbs is entertaining some friends and for their benefit decides to demonstrate the wonderful possibilities of the rocking room. Pokes and the burglars are dismayed at the violent motion of the room when the Captain operates the levers from without, but the climax is reaches when the professor's boy to whom the Captain is demonstrating the levers accidentally breaks the lever which causes the machinery controlling the room to run amuck and Pokes and his fellow villains are left to their fate whirling round and round in the now rapidly revolving room.

NESTOR.

NEVER AGAIN, EDDIE (June 5).—The cast: The Wife (Billie Rhodes); Hubby (Eddie Lyons); Wife's Brother (Lee Moran).

Billie is waiting up for her husband, who has gone to the lodge. She is growing very impatient. Meanwhile hubby is having a great time. He has met some of the Gaiety Theater bunch and invites one to have a little supper with him. Just as things are going nicely, the wife's brother discovers them.

The next morning, Billie finds a woman's glove, and, as Eddie can make no satisfactory explanation, she decides to leave him and go back to mother. When he returns home that night he finds her gone, and he is very blue, but decides that he will not mope around home, so goes to a cafe.

Lee had concocted a plan, and at his suggestion, Billie dresses as a man while he makes up as a woman, and together they visit the same cafe at which Eddie is. Before long Eddie is flirting with Lee and Lee goes to his table. Then Billie starts shooting up the place and a general chase follows. Eddie manages to elude the crowd and returns home only a short time later to have Lee appear upon the scene telling him that she cannot get along without him.

About this time Billie comes in dressed in her own clothes and Eddie has a terrible time trying to keep her from the bedroom in which he has Lee hidden. Eddie goes into the bedroom trying to persuade Lee to leave, but she only starts making love to him and laughs at him. Meanwhile, Billie dresses again as a man, and as Eddie brings Lee from the bedroom, she confronts him. They finally take off their makeup and Eddie says, "Never Again."

TWIXT LOVE AND THE ICEMAN (June 9).—The cast: The Widow (Stella Adams); Her Daughter (Billie Rhodes); Hogan (Neal Burns); Jimmie (Gus Alexander); The Butcher (Harry Rattenberry). Story by W. H. Ratterman. Produced by Horace Davey.

The Widow Spriggs and her only daughter are well known in the village. The widow is noted for her culinary ability, and has several suitors. Chief among the suitors are Hogan, the iceman, and Harry the butcher. Hogan's partner on the ice wagon, Jimmie is very much attached to the widow's daughter, Billie, and while Hogan is courting in the house, Jimmie and Billie use the time to good advantage. Harry and Hogan, meeting at the house several times, become jealous of each other. Hogan, thinking to have a better chance, arranges to leave earlier in the morning, and when Harry learns of this, he also makes his visit earlier. Hogan determines to put his rival out of the running by "hook or crook."

One day the widow orders a select roast for the next day, as she is having company. Harry delivers the package of meat to the delivery boy, who starts off for the widow's home. Hogan has learned of the order being in, and, stopping at a butcher shop, buys a bunch of old scrap meat, which he tells the butcher is intended for a dog. As he and Jimmie go down the street on the ice wagon, they see the butcher's delivery wagon, and Hogan manages to substitute the package of old meat for the one sent to the widow. He and Jimmie get away without the deception being found out, and when the widow opens her "select roast," she almost faints. She angrily takes the meat to Harry and "bawls" him out. Harry denies sending her such a package, and in his argument appeals to the delivery boy and the clerk. The widow leaves the shop vowing she will never patronize his store again.

The next morning, Hogan is received royally by the widow, and finds he has things his own way. The widow agrees to accept his proposal and Hogan places the engagement ring on her finger. As he and the widow come out of the house, they discover Jimmie and Billie lovemaking in the wagon. Hogan bawls Jimmie out, and the widow sends Billie into the house. Jimmie becomes angry and threatens to tell on Hogan. They try to stop him and chase him over the greater part of the city. Jimmie is finally caught. Harry joins the crowd and the news of the deception is told. The next day Hogan loses out, the butcher is taken into the widow's good graces, and poor Hogan's ring is left in the ice box for him to find at his next call.

POWERS.

IT CAN'T BE TRUE (June 1).—The cast: The Tenant (Ernie Shields); The Landlord (Harry Todd); Landlady (Margaret Joslin); Daughter (Marcia Moore); Rival (E. Clark.) Written and produced by Craig Hutchinson.

Ernie hadn't paid his rent for five years, and he also owed for a five-year laundry bill, but this didn't deter him from cooking ham and eggs over the gas jet and also making eyes at the landlord's daughter. He might have gotten away with this clandestine cuisine, but the landlord had the nose of a Siberian meat hound, and one unlucky morning he smelled Ernie's breakfast right through the partition.

On top of this he caught Ernie talking to his daughter. This was the last straw and he decided that Ernie must be put out. Instead of putting him out, however, they put all his furniture out and left him without even a chair to sit on.

How stony-hearted landlords are often fooled, how landladies make unfortunate mistakes, and how it never pays to change your attitude toward people simply because you think they have money was never better illustrated than in this case. The daughter got Ernie, Ernie got some unexpected "mazuma," and landlord got a terrible shock. The only one who got anything at all was an unpleasant looking rival, and this last received a painful black eye.

BIG U.

THE SEA LILY (June 8).—The cast: Light House Keeper (Thomas Jefferson); Little Mary (Zoe Bech); Dan (Burton C. Law); Little Edgar (Buster Emmons); Edgar Reynolds (Frank Newburg); Mary Willis (Marjorie Ellison). Scenario by Calder Johnstone. Produced by George Cochrane.

On a lonely island, several miles from shore, lived a lighthouse keeper and his assistant, Dan. The loneliness of his life prematurely aged the keeper. One evening during the monotonous routine of caring for the lights, he observed a storm breaking, and throughout the night the keeper and his assistant kept a watchful vigil. With the dawn, the storm broke. Through his marine glasses the keeper scanned the shore in search of wreckage. Close to the island he discovered a few spars thrown roughly together drifting inward with the tide.

Hastening to the beach he discovered a tiny form lashed to the raft. Wading out, he found a little girl half unconscious. Dan, his assistant, hurried to him, and as the keeper carried the child ashore, the younger man noticed a bottle drop from the raft. Picking this up, he discovered that it contained papers, and after breaking the bottle he found this to consist of some letters and a will identifying the child. The little girl was taken to the light house and Dan was sent ashore to purchase clothing for her. She and the old keeper soon became boon companions, and as the years went on, he was no longer lonely.

During the day time, she played upon the sands and rocks, making toys of the sea weed and the many vari-colored shells. Near the island there lived a family of fisher-folk, and with them a boy a few years older than the little girl. This lad, Edgar Reynolds, had been a pet of the old light house keeper since his babyhood, and he and little Mary soon became close playmates. Later he went away to school, and finally to college.

During all of this time, Dan laid his plans to woo and win Mary, and thus gain control of her inheritance. When Edgar returns from school and renews his boyhood love affair with Mary, Dan decides to put him out of the way. Later, when rowing Edgar to the mainland, Dan suddenly attacks him. Dan is thrown into the sea and Edgar returns to the island. During the scrimmage some of the papers which Dan had continuously carried with him, dropped from his pocket and thus Edgar discovered that his sweetheart was an heiress.

Soon after they married and went away to make their home in a distant city. The old keeper was urged to go with them, but he preferred to remain at his post. The story closes as the old man makes his way up the lighthouse stairs, lights the lights, as he has done throughout the years, and returns to the living room to sit in loneliness before the empty hearth.

L-KO.

BILLY'S WATERLOO (June 7).—The cast: Billy (Billy Ritchie); Father (Gene Rogers); Mother (Eva Nelson).

Sweet sixteen was in love with Billy, but her father objects to him as he had other intentions for his little girl. She was obdurate and insisted on her choice. Bill made his usual call and father met him at the door and unceremoniously kicked Bill out, giving his little daughter to understand that Bill was no more to be allowed the hospitality of his roof. Father forgot to cover his tracks thoroughly enough, and also to note the thickness of a wall separating his affinity from Bill's apartment.

Bill was an athlete, and in his practicing he slipped from a trapeze and slid gracefully through a wall into the adjoining apartment where papa was just in the act of embracing his affinity. Bill had the goods on father then, as father, in his hasty exit, left his hat behind. So Bill, in possession of the hat, marched in to father and threatened to tell his wife and daughter on him unless he was allowed to marry his daughter. Father had to agree, but hardly did he secure possession of his silk tile before he changed his mind and again told sweet sixteen that Bill was not to be allowed entrance to his house. Sweet sixteen makes her report to Bill on the sly and Bill calls father to account for his changeableness and urges father to come to his apartment where after a little argument with the fist father agrees.

Everything was moving nicely until the minister accidentally stepped on Bill's foot and demanded the removal of a beautiful silk hat which Bill was very proud of. Bill resented the minister's interference and demanded satisfaction, and so took him to his gymnasium, and was going to trim him, but the minister, in his youth, had been thoroughly trained in the manly art of self defence and turned the tables on Bill. He thrashed Bill all over the apartment house, out in the street, and so strenuously did they fight that they caved in floors and landed in the basement which was full of water.

PHONY TEETH AND FALSE FRIENDS (June 11).—The cast: Father (Gene Rogers); The Dentist (Reggie Morris); The Apprentice (Bill Bevan).

It was all on acount of the dentist's apprentice. Reg started him on an errand, but he was like the proverbial messenger boy. He loitered on his way and started to flirt with a girl. Gene had a day off and was spending it in the park with a lady friend. It was not Gene's fault that he sat on a bench, found a box of candy and started to eat a little of it. But the box was a precious one to Bill for Reg had started him on his way to his sweetheart with the candy and Bill had not sufficient funds to buy another box so he forthwith put Gene in shape for the dentist by knocking a few of his molars out.

In the meantime Reg had telephoned to his girl and found that the messenger had not arrived, so he started out to look for him. Gene hurries home to his little daughter for consolation, and she immediately sends him to her dentist sweetheart for repairs. Now Reg was away when father arrived, and he again fell into the hands of the apprentice, who set to work on father in a very unprofessional way, so that when father got out he was ripe for the hospital. When he arived home, and was told by his fond daughter that the sweetheart had called up and would be over soon, father was sure he would be able to get sufficient revenge.

When the real dentist arrived, father worked on him, but to his sorrow he found that he had almost killed the wrong man. Together they all hasten to the dentist's parlor, only to find that the apprentice had been working on some poor man and left him with the gas bag on his nose while he carried on a flirtation with a pretty maid who had visited the office. The patient's life was saved, but the apprentice will bother no one anymore, for he went to his doom in a seventy-foot lake.

GOLD SEAL.

THE ROSE COLORED SCARF (Two Parts—June 6).—The cast: Roger Darrell (Herbert Rawlinson); Sylvia Carrington (Agnes Vernon); Frank Carrington (William Canfield). Scenario by Ben Cohn. Produced by William Worthington.

Roger Darrell, a chauffeur for the wealthy Frank Carrington, is a perfect servant. Courteous at all times, he only spoke when spoken to, and Sylvia Carrington, the daughter of the rich man, frequently found cause for resentment because of this fact. Sylvia had taken quite an interest in Darrell in an impersonal way. One day as Sylvia is being taken for a drive by Darrell she reprimands him for not knowing she is hungry. Darrell then suggests that he will take her to a nearby inn. Sylvia tells him that she has never entered a restaurant alone and asks him to take dinner with her. Darrell consents, and the moment Darrell removes his cap and gloves he is transformed from the perfect employee to a perfect gentleman. During the dinner Sylvia's interest has grown, and as the two start to leave the inn Darrell helps her on with her coat. She thanks him for being so good to her and her nearness makes Darrell forget himself and he stoops and kisses her. The drive home is a silent one, and as Sylvia leaves the car Darrell shows his repentance and he tells her that he shall leave her service.

That evening Sylvia astounds her father with the news that she is going to be married to Roger Darrell. Carrington tells her that he will talk the matter over with Darrell. Sylvia then tells of Darrell having kissed her and when the father says he will send for Darrell, Sylvia states that the young man does not know of the marriage arrangements, as he has not spoken to her about it, but intends leaving their service. Carrington sends for Darrell. Sylvia pleads with her father to remain in the room and to hear their conversation and finally persuades him to allow her to hide in the adjoining alcove. She is wearing a rose-colored scarf and as she draws behind the curtains the scarf slips from her shoulders and falls to the floor.

Darrell comes into the room and after a short conversation Carrington is surprised at his gentlemanly bearing. Carrington then asks the young man whether his attitude will be one of business or sentiment, and Darrell tells him that they can leave the business question out of the discussion. The father then states that he will not stand in the way of the young people if he can support her in the manner to which she has been accustomed. Sylvia, in her hiding place, is elated over the way Darrell is conducting himself.

Darrell studies deeply what Carrington has said, and then frankly informs him that he cannot support the girl in the way she has been raised. Sylvia springs up and with blazing eyes confronts Darrell. Then she darts out of the room. As soon as she leaves Darrell's face shows the effect of his confession and he tells her father that what he said was a lie; that he really loves the girl and states why he made the statement, knowing that she would hear it. Darrell leaves, and as he starts out of the door finds a fragment of the rose-colored scarf, which has become torn off. He puts this in his pocket as he goes.

Carrington is a man of common sense. He tells Sylvia of Darrell's confession, and Sylvia, happy, begs her father to recall him. Carrington tells her that it is too late, that pride will stand between them, and Darrell leaves their service that night. Two months later Darrell calls at a lawyer's office in response to a startling request. There he is informed that from the estate of a former relative he is given the sum of $50,000. Before leaving the lawyer asks him if he will now set out in quest of that which he most desires, and Darrell tells him that there is nothing he desires. The lawyer shows he is disappointed at the answer. With the passing of time Darrell reaches the station which heritage had always meant for him, and still he carries the fragment of the rose-colored scarf to remind him of what might have been.

A certain table at the well-known inn has become dear to Sylvia as a memory during this time. Although Darrell has made it a point to dine at this same inn frequently, Fate has kept the two apart. As Darrell is leaving one day he comes face to face with Sylvia and the repetition of their last meeting comes to his mind. Darrell tells her that he must talk to her and when she tries to pass he forcibly detains her. He tells her that he has waited for two years to say one thing to her and Sylvia laughs at this explanation and unthinkingly tells him that he told the lawyer he had nothing at heart for which he wished. She catches herself, but too late. Darrell realizes where his unexpected inheritance has come from. She confesses that her father told her the truth about his statements and that she had divided her fortune with him in the hope that he would seek her out, being able to give her the things she had been used to. Their misunderstandings are past and regardless of the public place in which they are Darrell takes her happily in his arms.

THE CAGE MAN (Two parts—June 10).—The cast: 341 (G. Raymond Nye); The Girl (Roberta Wilson); The Doctor (Hayward Mack). Scenario and production by Jacques Jaccard.

Pacing up and down his narrow cell, 341 was interrupted by the arrival of one of the guards. The warden had received papers from the governor permitting 341 to go out on probation. He notified the guard of this, and requested that 341 be brought to his office before leaving. In the long hours of his confienment 341 had often brooded over the circumstances which had sent him to prison, and planned over and over again how he would revenge himself upon those who he believed had sent him up.

With the change from the prison uniform to civilian clothes 341, too, becomes changed. He goes into the warden's office, and is given what possessions he had when he was placed behind the walls. Arriving in the city, 341 secures a room and immediately plans the execution of his long hoped for vengeance. His mind reverts to the days of the past in which he and his chum, a young doctor, both sought to win the same girl.

341 was the lucky suitor, and his cave man ways won the girl. Possession dulled the desire, however, and 341 became a heavy drinker, leaving his wife alone the greater part of the time. The young doctor took his defeat nobly and for a long time did not even see the girl. 341 goes from bad to worse, and spends all of his time drinking and gambling. The doctor sees the wife neglected and is unable to resist bestowing upon her his sympathy. 341 finds the two together one day and angrily warns the doctor away.

A child is born to the couple. The father, half drunk in a gambling house, refuses to go home. The doctor learns of the wife's condition, and goes to the house himself. Through his efforts the wife is pulled through the ordeal, while 341 refuses to go home at all. With the break of day, the party breaks up and 341 arrives home to find his wife and the doctor alone. In his drunken condition he mistakes the relation between the two, and, pulling a gun, threatens to send them to a place where they can carry on their love making unhindered. The butler, hearing the discussion, calls the police, who arrive on the scene just as 341 starts to shoot the doctor. In the struggle one of the policemen is shot and falls to the floor. It is for this crime that 341 was sent to the pen.

Brooding upon and magnifying his imaginary wrongs, 341 secures a loaded revolver and determines to be revenged. He spends many days in his search, and is invariably followed and hunted by officers who know he is a paroled convict. He begins to feel the effect of the constant tension, but finally locates his wife and the doctor. He watches them through a lighted window and sees the little child go in to bid her parents good night and hears the little one ask its mother where her daddy is. The mother tells the child that her real daddy is in heaven and the little one goes to bed. A reaction sets in, and 341 realizes that the woman is now happier than he could ever have hoped to make her. Thoughts of vengeance are forgotten, and he desires to get back to prison.

He sneaks in the window and kisses the child without awakening her. As he comes from the grounds, he is suddenly halted by a bunch of cops, and the resentment against the police which he has felt since they hounded him, comes to the surface. He attacks them with fury, and before being overpowered, succeeds in putting several of them on the hospital list. A few days later the warden is called to receive another "guest" and discovers his old friend 341, who says he has come back home to stay.

RED FEATHER.

THE MADCAP (Five Parts—June 5).—The cast: Hermia Challoner (Flora Parker DeHaven); Olga Tcherny (Vera Doria); John Markham (Richard Sterling). Scenario by Leonora Ainsworth. Produced by William Dowlan.

Hermia Challoner, nicknamed the Madcap, has become so satisfied with luxury that she seeks happiness in danger and excitement. Her friend, Countess Olga Tcherny, introduces her to John Markham, a portrait painter. Although he interests Hermia, she is piqued at his treatment of her. Markham later goes to an isolated island to paint. Hermia, who has a country estate on the mainland, goes aeroplaning and purposely lands on the island. She disables the machine in landing, and Markham, who meets her, tells her that no boat will stop at the island for three days. Olga and others arrive. Meanwhile the aeroplane has been fixed and Hermia flies home. Markham afterwards spends a week-end at Hermia's home. Hidden from sight in a high-backed chair, Hermia overhears Markham tell Olga he starts for Normandy on the morrow. Later Olga tells Hermia she thinks she will take a trip to Normandy, and Olga, who has become rather jealous of Hermia, is surprised and displeased when Hermia tells her that she will accompany her.

John Markham goes to Normandy, attired in vagabond clothes, and travels as an itinerant "lightning artist." Hermia is speeding to Trouville, where Olga is staying, and meets with an accident to her auto. She meets Markham and learns what he is doing. She longs with her whole heart to leave her world of sham and become a vagabond also. He finally consents to allow her to accompany him.

She purchases a costume and determines to earn her living. She is known as Yvonne Deschamps. Markham passes as Philadin, a lightning portrait artist. Markham, now in love with Hermia, proposes to her in the rose garden at Vallecy, but she laughs and conceals her love for him. In the meantime Olga has made inquiries and is suspicious that possibly Hermia and Markham may have met and are together, so she starts an investigation. Markham and Hermia join a small band of performers and go to the Alencon Fete. While Markham is sketching the villagers at the show and Hermia is playing her instruments outside the tent she sees Olga in the distance, tells Markham and disappears. She knows her reputation will be destroyed if Olga sees her. Olga sees Markham and insists on investigating everything. Although Olga causes much suspense, she doesn't discover Hermia, but is still suspicious and gets her chauffeur to act as a spy.

Hermia and Markham, fearful of discovery, leave that night and discover the chauffeur following them. Markham sends him about his business. Then they struggle on through the forest until, exhausted, they discover a hunting lodge. No one seems to be around, so they take possession. The next morning Olga is seen by Hermia and Markham coming toward the lodge. Markham tells Hermia to climb the ladder to the attic and escape through the window. Olga enters and, finding Markham, looks around, but can find no trace of Hermia until she notices the mud on the ladder and feels sure that Hermia is in the attic. She then starts to talk to Markham, inventing tales of the days they have spent together and his vows of constancy. He is too astonished to reply at first and as he is about to do so she fires her gun out of the window. Fearing something awful has happened, Hermia raises the trap door and comes down. Olga is now triumphant. Hermia tells her she has brought down the game and to whistle for the dogs. She tells Olga that she loves Markham and that Markham loves her. When Olga has left Markham takes Hermia in his arms. She is furious at him, and tells him she lied to Olga, that she detests him, and that, now their vagabondia is spoiled, they must part.

Their next meeting is in New York at the home of Mrs. Hammond, a social leader, who is giving a party. Private theatricals are to be the feature of the evening. As Hermia enters Olga tells her she hopes she will like the play, as she wrote it herself. Later Hermia is horrified to find the play is a story based on her summer's adventures. Olga spreads the gossip and Hermia, seeing herself the object of scandal, is ashamed and broken hearted. Markham is indignant. Mrs. Hammond, hearing the scandal, questions Markham. He tells her the whole truth and how innocent of wrong Hermia is. Mrs. Hammond is furious at Olga's taking advantage of her hospitality and assures Markham that she will see that the story is denied and that Olga is ostracized from her circle of friends. Markham finds Hermia has left her home and spends weeks trying to find her, all to no avail. Finally, one day he receives a package containing nothing but a tiny bell. He recognizes the bell as being like the ones Hermia wore on her vagabond costume. The postmark is Vallecy and he knows it is a silent message from her, and that she is waiting for him in the rose garden. He hurries with all speed to Vallecy and there finds Hermia in the rose garden where he first told her of his love.

OBJECT—MATRIMONY (Two Parts—June 7).—The cast: George White (Harry Myers); Molly (Rosemary Theby); Aunt Julia (Jennie Nelson); Hitchem (Jerold Havener). Written by Paul West. Produced by Harry Myers.

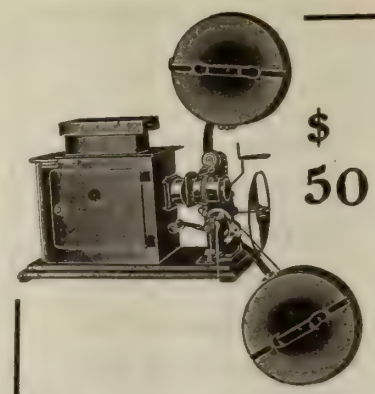
George White, a young clerk, is discharged for continually being late. Molly, his sweetheart, rings him up to remind him not to forget to buy the engagement ring. George groans as he receives this message, and registers that he cannot buy the ring unless he gets a job. We next see him at a newsstand looking over advertisements in the "Help Wanted" column. At last he sees the following advertisement: "Wanted, young man, handsome attractive to the ladies, for position of great trust. Salary $150.00 weekly. Apply I. Hitchem, Broker, Suite No. 3345-3346, Bolivar Building."

Outside of the office there is a line of applicants of various types. After a while, George's turn comes, and he is allowed to enter the office. Hitchem asks him to be seated, and as George sees a lot of women's photographs piled up on Hitchem's desk, he says: "I thought this was a broker's office?" Hitchem answers: "So it is. I'm a marriage broker." George starts to leave, but Hitchem detains him and tells him that all he had to do is to meet a lot of women and pose as a handsome husband.

He has to propose to each applicant for a husband and place an engagement ring on the finger of each. Among those to whom George becomes engaged are Julia Cutey, a middle aged spinster, and Mrs. Kiddley, who has five children. In each case the wedding day is set for some future date.

Now we see Moly place a photograph of George on her parlor table. Shortly afterwards her aunt, Julia Cutey, pays her a call, and announces that she has come to the city to be married, having secured a husband through an advertisement in a matrimonial paper. Julia, happening to see George's picture on the parlor table, says: "That's his picture!" Molly laughs, and maintains that this is impossible, as it is the picture of her fiance. After the departure of her Aunt Julia, the maid announces her Aunt Susan from Rahway. Whereupon Mrs. Kiddley and her brood of children enter the parlor. Mrs. Kiddley tells Molly that she has come to town to be married. One of the kids sees George's picture and exclaims: "Look, mamma, here's a picture of our new popper!" Molly again declares this to be impossible, as it is the picture of her fiance. Just as Mrs. Kiddley leaves George arrives. He is given a warm welcome. Everything seems to be going on satisfactorily until George pulls out one of the Hitchem's stock engagement rings and puts it on her finger. Molly is struck by the resemblance of the ring to those worn by her two aunts. She is about to denounce him, but makes up her mind to remain silent for the present.

After George has left, she picks up a copy of the matrimonial paper left there by her Aunt Julia. In this she sees the advertisement inserted by Hitchem to furnish any lady with a handsome husband. Thereupon, she goes to Hitchem's office, and is ushered into the reception room. George scarcely looks at Molly



Bing's Home Entertainer

Here's a little machine, simple in its construction, and easy of operation, for which there is a place in every home.

It projects motion picture film as perfectly in the home as is possible in the average theatre.

Light is provided by a baby arc, supplied with current from the ordinary electric light socket, controlled through a special rheostat.

The baby arc develops 800 candle power, with about six amperes of current. The rheostat supplied is suitable for 110, 150 or 220 volts.

Pictures projected are about 6 x 8 feet in size and splendid results are possible with a throw up to twenty-five feet.

Standard size film is used, making every film exchange in the country a constant source of supply for subjects. Reel boxes are of 1,000 feet capacity.

Set up and ready for use, the machine measures 31 inches long, 31 inches high, and 10 inches broad. The lamphouse is 10 by 6. Weight of machine, complete with arc and rheostat is 24 pounds. Packed for shipment, the weight is 55 pounds.

There is absolutely no fire risk — "Safety First" has been the watchword in construction.

as he draws her towards him in order to kiss her, but she pulls away from him and raises her veil. He recognizes her and falls back dumfounded.

After mutual explanations, all is forgiven and George embraces Molly, but their troubles are not over yet. Mrs. Kiddley, with her children, and Julia Cutey arrive at Hitchem's private office. In order to avoid meeting them, George locks the door of the reception room and he and Molly escape by another door. However, they encounter a lot of other women candidates who make a rush for George, and it is with great difficulty that they finally make their escape from the building. Out of revenge, all the women rush into Hitchem's office and nearly murder him. After their escape, George and Molly hunt up a clergyman and have the matrimonial knot securely tied.

THE SCORPION'S STING (Three Parts—June 9).—Moren Masters serves his prison term and is released. He meets an old sea-faring acquaintance just returned from a voyage with a pocket full of money, and is taken by him to a low opium den run by a disreputable Chinaman. Here his evil genius appears to him and suggests that he should possess himself of his companion's earnings.

Masters declares that he would sell his soul for wealth, and the evil spirit shows him an easy way. To accomplish his purpose he does not stop short of murder, and with the connivance of the Chinaman he disposes of the body and subsequently adds to his ill-gotten gains by gambling with the frequenters of the place, against whom he has the luck of the Devil. With this beginning he starts a systematic career of fraud and deception, and some time later we find him managing director of a swindling company, a member of an exclusive club, and to all appearances a respectable member of society.

Here we see him despoiling the widow and the orphan, on terms of friendship with the ultra-respectable, and secretly living a life of licentious depravity. His fancy is attracted by the charms of Peggy Lofting, daughter of the Bishop of Lowden, and he is soon received by them as a welcome guest, though he is regarded with unveiled suspicion by Peg's fiance, Gerald Carstairs, a young curate, who, through the influence of the Bishop, is appointed to a fashionable West End church. Masters determines to rid himself of one whom he regards as a dangerous rival. The young curate himself does much to prejudice his hopes of advancement for he carries out the duties of his curacy with more zeal than discretion and berates his fashionable audience with such vigor that he is requested to transfer his services elsewhere. He finds more congenial work in the East End.

To discredit him in the eyes of the Bishop and his daughter, Masters employs the services of a woman to whom he has promised marriage. Arranging that he should be discovered in a position which, to anyone credulous, might be construed as compromising, he succeeds in breaking off the engagement. An announcement in the papers of the forthcoming engagement of Masters to the daughter of the Bishop of Lowden convinces the cast-off mistress that he has no intention of carrying out his compact. She goes to his home with murder in her heart, but Masters meets her in the grounds. There is a violent struggle, and for a second time his hands are stained with blood. He rejoins his guests, but the woman's injuries are not immediately fatal. When the reception is at its height she staggers in and denounces her murderer before she falls to the ground in a dying condition. The guests attempt to seize Masters, but, breaking away from them, he escapes in a motor car. As he flies through the country his evil spirit appears at his side and Masters realizes that the time has come for him to pay the price of his worldly success. He loses control of the machine, which crashes over a steep bank and he is crushed beneath its ruins.

LAEMMLE.

THE WIRE PULLERS (June 4).—The cast: Hamilton Craig (Herbert Rawlinson); Mr. Page (Jack Holt); Mrs. Page (Yona Landowska); Joan (Agnes Vernon). Scenario by Ben Cohn. Produced by William Worthington.

Hamilton Craig, a well-known attorney and bachelor, is invited by his business partner, Page, to visit their new suburban home to attend a dinner. He arrives at the house in the midst of the straightening up and Mrs. Page immediately puts him to work, after casting disparaging remarks about her husband's usefulness in doing things about the house. Craig reneges when he is sent up a flimsy ladder to fix pictures on the wall, but the running fire of comments on his awkwardness and clumsiness made by Page determines him to show that he really is better than Page in straightening out a disordered room.

While Craig is engaged in his house-arranging duties, a desire to own a home of his own comes to him. The Pages notice his abstraction and start to cajole him for not getting married. He tells them that he has never found the right girl. Sometime later Craig is invited to a party given by the Pages. One of the attractions of the event is a fortune teller. Craig being the only bachelor present, is the first to have his fortune told, and he is told in four days hence at the hour of four there will be a woman in distress at a place where many people are eating. She admonishes him to go to the aid of this woman. Craig is skeptical and makes light of the event to those present.

Four days pass. In spite of his determination to think nothing of the fortune telling, it continually recurs to Craig's mind. As the hour of four approaches he gets more and more restless and Page watches his growing uneasiness with a lurking smile. At last Craig can stand it no longer and, looking around to see that no one observes him, he sneaks out. He wanders into the tea room described and at one of the front tables he finds a woman having trouble with one of the waiters. Her helplessness appeals to him and he goes to her assistance. The waiter recognizes Craig and the matter is straightened out. He tells the girl to pretend that she knows him in order to avoid any difficulties and the two sit down to a little dinner. She tells him that she is a stranger in town and intended to visit some friends. Her purse, containing the address of her friends, has been stolen and she has no idea where they live. The only clue she has is that they moved to a new suburban home. She tells him their name is Page, and he immediately tells her that Page is his business partner. They set out for the Page home, and on their way Craig, who has become deeply smitten with the girl, proposes to her. She tells him to wait awhile yet.

They arrive at the Page home and are greeted by Mrs. Page. The girl, seeing how well Craig is thought of, determines that it would not be such a bad idea and agrees to Craig's proposal. When Mrs. Page returns to the room she sees the two extricating themselves from an embrace, and smiles happily. Joan and Mrs. Page retire from the room and Joan shows Mrs. Page a note which she received stating that she must not fail to go to a certain restaurant on Thursday and get into an altercation with the waiter at exactly four o'clock. Joan demands an explanation of the note. Page has arrived meanwhile and Craig tells him of his romantic finding of the girl of his choice. Joan begins to see light and she and Mrs. Page decide that it will never do for Craig to find out the deception. Some time later Mrs. Page writes a note to a friend as follows: "The fortune telling scheme worked fine. They will make an ideal couple. Dosia Page."

ALIAS JANE JONES (Two Parts—June 8).—The cast: Alias Jane Jones (Cleo Madison); Frank Lyman (William Mong); Eddie Sloan (Ray Hanford); Mrs. Lyman (Margaret Whistler); Bessie, their child (Georgia French); Sunshine, an invalid (Helen Bailey); David, her brother (Edward Hern). Written by William Mong. Produced by Cleo Madison.

Frank Lyman in private life is known as a loving husband and devoted father; in reality he is a notorious crook, and is known as "Gentleman George" by his associates. Gentleman George for a long time did all his work alone, but when he made the acquaintance of a girl known as Jane Jones, the two did several jobs together. Gentleman George pretended to the girl that he was a single man, and had often given her reason to believe he was in love with her. One day Jane sees Frank and a woman and a child come out of a swell mansion. She learns that the woman is his wife and the little one their child.

Jane returns to her room in a rage and makes preparations to leave. She writes Gentleman George a note upbraiding him for his faithlessness to his wife and accuse him of double dealing in trying to win her affections. She packs up her belongings and, making a pile of the implements of her trade, leaves them on the table, with her note. George comes before she leaves and resorts to force in an effort to make the girl continue as his partner.

Eddie Sloan, who is an accomplice of the two, and an ardent admirer of Jane's, comes in at the moment. In the struggle Jane has cut George's face with a knife and he is choking her when Eddie's arrival puts a stop to his purpose. Eddie is anxious to beat up George for his treatment of the girl, and while he and the girl are arguing George draws a pistol and tries to shoot the girl. Through Eddie's interference the bullet goes wild.

Gentleman George's wife has called at the same apartment to see a dressmaker and as she and her friend start out they hear the shot. When the door is opened Mrs. Lyman thinks she sees her husband, but her companion persuades her that she was mistaken. A short time later she decides to return and see if it was possible for her husband to have been in the room. The crooks hear her and Jane, recognizing her as Gentleman George's wife, hides George in a closet before admitting the woman. Unable to find her husband, Mrs. Lyman leaves. Jane and Eddie leave George after telling him they hope never to see him again.

Jane and Eddie come to California, and Jane makes the acquaintance of Miss Hoke, who is known as "Sunshine," and her brother David. Sunshine is an invalid and takes a great liking to Jane. David has fallen in love with Jane. Eddie is still with Jane, and the whole city is disturbed by a number of successful burglaries, which the police are unable to trace. David declares his love for Jane, but she tells him that their paths lie wide apart.

Gentleman George is stopping at the hotel and is recognized by Eddie one day in spite of his changed appearance. Eddie tells Jane of his arrival, and through a ruse she gets into his room. She starts to search the place, but before finishing, is interrupted by the return of George. He realizes some one has been in his room and makes a search. Jane hides in a trunk, and thinking George will not search again, she tries to force the drawers of a dresser. George hears the noise and returns in time to catch her. He draws a gun on Jane and threatens her with arrest. She dares him to turn her over to the officers and displays a miscellaneous assortment of burglary tools which she had concealed upon her person. George laughs at her collection and in contrast shows her a set of the latest things in the burglary line. Jane tells him that she is preparing to rob a hotel and finally persuades him to help her. At the opportune moment, she gives Eddie a signal and rushing in he overpowers George.

The morning papers are full of the capture of a notorious burglar, Gentleman George, and are lavish in their praise of the well-known detective, Alias Jane Jones, who had been trying to capture the criminal for a long while. David and his sister read the news and she orders him to find the girl and bring her to receive congratulations. David is successful in locating Jane and brings her to the invalid sister. Before allowing Sunshine to congratulate Jane, David suggests that he have a few minutes' secluded talk with the girl, which the invalid smilingly agrees to. When they return their happiness is evident, for the girl detective is soon to become the wife of David.

THE FALSE GEMS (June 11).—The cast: Angus Leroux (Rupert Julian); Mrs. Leroux (Elsie Jane Wilson); Her Father (Mark Fenton); Fred Von Twiller (Douglas Gerard). Written by E. J. Clawson. Produced by Rupert Julian.

Angus Leroux and his wife have a happy little home. Leroux is one of the bookkeepers in a commercial house, and frequently, unable to finish his work at the office, brings his books home to work upon them there. Mrs. Leroux has one inordinate fondness for jewelry. In their household lives also Michael Henning, her father, a cynical old man. The Lerouxs have a friend in the person of Fred Von Twiller. Exhausted by the day's work, Leroux would frequently insist on Von Twiller taking his wife out at night in order to give her a little pleasure.

Sometimes Leroux feels inclined to blame his wife for her fondness for jewels, but when she tells him how fond she is of the false gems, and that it is her only weakness, he is inclined to let her feed her vanity. One evening as Von Twiller and Mrs. Leroux are out enjoying the opera, Leroux decides to get rid of the false jewelry and to cure her of her weakness. He accordingly takes the jewels to a pawnbroker and remarks that he doesn't think they are worth much. The jeweler makes a close examination, and tells him that fifty thousand dollars would be a very low price for the gems. Leroux returns home, and at once suspicion begins its insidious work. The more he thinks of the matter the more the suspicion grows, and he has fully made up his mind that Von Twiller, who is very wealthy, has given his wife the jewels. Securing a revolver, he goes to his wife's bedroom and awaits her return.

Mrs. Leroux and Von Twiller return after a happy evening, and Leroux, placing the revolver in his coat pocket, comes into the room. He begins to accuse his wife. Von Twiller is thunderstruck. Old Michael looks on the scene with his cynical smile. Mrs. Leroux goes to the jewel box and finds the necklace is missing. Leroux is working himself up to commit a deed for which he would always repent, when old Michael pushes the trio aside and grabs up the box. He tells Leroux that the jewels were genuine; that he had saved up and bought them for his daughter to play with. He told them the jewels were paste, knowing that if the real value were known that more than likely they would be sold and the money spent. Leroux begins to sob. Von Twiller slips out of the house. Mrs. Leroux goes to her husband and takes his head in her arms. She forgives him for his outburst and the worst pang of remorse is his unjust suspicion against their faithful friend. He assures her that in the future she can indulge her love of jewels to the utmost and never again will he attempt to discourage her craving for jewels.

You Are Proud of Your Theatre

—This goes without saying, whether your house has a capacity of three hundred or three thousand. You like to have people compliment you upon the pictures you show and, incidentally, when they compliment you it shows a healthy business condition which means money in your pocket.

—There is no other individual piece of photoplay theatre equipment which has as much to do with projection results—the results which every picture play patron notices and talks about—as the screen. It follows, then, that if you are alive to the benefits to be derived from real lip advertising you will realize the advantage of installing a

JIM SLOCUM NO. 4638 (Two Parts June 21).—The cast: Jim Slocum (King Baggot); Kittie, Jim's wife (Edna Hunter); Dr. Turner (Chas. Ogle); Mrs. Turner (Norma Winslow); Mrs. Cassidy (Nellie Slattery). Written by Robert F. Hill. Produced by Robert Cummings.

Jim Slocum is a taxicab chauffeur. His baby is taken ill, and on his returning from his day's work, Jim makes his wife, Kittie, go to bed, while he watches through the long silent hours of the night to save the worn-out mother. The next day, while off duty, Jim drives home to see how the baby is getting along, and another chauffeur removes a tire from his car. Jim returns to the taxicab stand, and owing to his prolonged vigil the night before, he falls asleep on his cab.

The starter discharges him, accusing him wrongfully of drunkenness, and when he goes to get his wages, the cashier tells him that there is nothing coming to him, as the missing tire put him back $25. On his return home, the doctor tells Jim that the baby's case is serious, and urges that a specialist, Dr. Turner, be called into consultation. Jim calls on Dr. Turner, who is about to take the case, without enacting his customary fee, when a rich man is ushered in and persuades him to attend one of his children without delay. Jim is dumbfounded, and tries to prevent the doctor from leaving him in the lurch. The doctor loses his temper, and pushes him aside.

It turns out that there is nothing the matter with the rich man's child, except that it has eaten too much. Later in the day, Jim, on his return home, finds that his baby has died, and that the heart-broken mother has had repeated fainting spells from grief. Leaving his wife in the care of Mrs. Cassidy, he goes out resolved to seek revenge. Meanwhile, Mrs. Turner, as the doctor is detained on an important case, drives off alone in her limousine to attend a fashionable reception, instructing Carter, the colored chauffeur, to return with the car about midnight.

Shortly before midnight, Jim, with his face partly masked by a handkerchief, enters the house of Dr. Turner. He comes into the nursery through a window, and while he is examining some trinkets on a dresser, the doctor's little boy crawls out of bed and tries to hold him up with a toy gun. Jim laughs and humors the boy. Then he put him back to bed, and waves him goodby after assuring him that he won't take anything from his home. On leaving the reception, Mrs. Turner slips as she is about to enter her car, and the colored chauffeur, Carter, catches her as she falls backwards into his arms. Carter, who has been drinking, flatters himself that he has made a conquest and, when Mrs. Turner alights at her home, he follows her upstairs.

Jim, who is on his way to make his escape, hears them coming, dodges into the library, and hides behind a screen. Mrs. Turner enters the library, turns on the light, and tells Carter he can go. Carter, however, advances towards her, and catches her in his arms, and tries to kiss her. Jim throws the screen aside, knocks the negro down, and beats him to a finish. Mrs. Turner has fallen in a faint on the floor, and a maid who has been awakened by the rumpus, rushes in to look after her. Jim takes Carter by the colar, drags him downstairs, throws him into the street, and makes his escape just as Dr. Turner arrives.

The doctor enters the library and hears from his wife of Carter's disgraceful behavior. The next morning Jim's chauffeur button is picked up in the Turner household. Mrs. Turner suggests that the button may lead to the discovery of the gallant burglar, who came to her rescue.

The doctor investigates, and ascertains Jim's name and address. Then he induces Jim to call at his house. But when he shows him the button, Jim thinks he is caught, and looks about for a way to escape. But the doctor allays his fear. Jim breaks down and confesses that he is on the verge of starvation and that his wife, even now may be dying from lack of nourishment. The doctor gets Jim to act as his chauffeur, and they drive to the tenement. After examining Kittie, the doctor tells Jim that a good rest will restore her to health. She is taken to the hospital under the doctor's charge. A month later, Kittie is convalescent. Jim has a job as the doctor's chauffeur, and takes Kittie out for a drive. He points out a cottage near the doctor's house, and tells her that it is to be their home, provided for them by Dr. Turner. Shortly afterward they move into their new home.

HIS LITTLE STORY (June 6).—The cast: The Tramp (Matt Moore); The Wife (Jane Gail); The Reporter (Bert Busby); The Bartender (Frank Norcross); The Friend (Sidney Dalbrook). Written by John C. Brownell. Produced by Matt Moore.

On a rainy Sunday afternoon, the tramp enters a saloon by the side entrance. The bartender is about to put him out when he produces a coin, and calls for a drink. Presently a reporter enters and sits down at the same table with the tramp. The reporter, realizing that the tramp may provide him with interesting copy, shoves the bottle toward him. The tramp, as he drains his glass remarks: "Because she was untrue to me, I killed the woman I loved." The tramp tells the following:

The tramp, stylishly dresed, is seen in a handsomely furnished room, bidding his wife good-bye. He turns to his friend, as he does this, and says to him: "Take good care of her, Tom, while I am away." Later we see the tramp returning unexpectedly, and is astonished to see Tom and his wife clasped in each other's arms. Enraged he kills both. He then takes his grip and leaves the house. He enters a pretentious corner saloon, where he is greeted by his friends who drag him to a table, and as they drink to his health, he says. "I am on my way home. Just got in."

The newsboy enters with evening papers. One of the men buys a paper from the newsboy, and shows the tramp an article headed: "Tom Blake and Mrs. Howard, wife of Henry Howard, found dead by maid. Mr. Howard has been out of town for several days." The tramp reads the article with simulated horror, and then sinks back in his chair, as if utterly overcome by an unexpected tragedy.

The scene now dissolves, and we again see the tramp telling his story to the reporter and bartender. As he finishes the account of his domestic tragedy, he remarks: "It was a perfect alibi. I trust I have entertained you gentlemen." Then he staggers out into the rain. The tramp goes to meet his associates in a cheap tenement house. He tells them of his recent experience, and from the substantial evidence of his return to affluence, his associates gather that his improvised domestic tragedy has given him the opportunity to exercise his professional skill, as he is now the owner of a gold watch, and displays money that he could never earn by honest toil.

AS IN A DREAM (Three parts—June 4).—The cast: Donald Robbins (Sydney Ayres); Elaine Cameron (Doris Pawn); Bruce Cameron (W. F. Canfield); Bronson Powers (Richard Sterling); Evelyn Wilson (Olive Golden); Mrs. Robbins (Nanine Wright).

Donald Robbins is a settlement worker in the slums. Among others whom he helps and cares for is Evelyn Wilson, a sweatshop worker, who has been ruined by Bronson Howard, a son of the idle rich. Bronson Powers is the fiance of Elaine Cameron, daughter of the multi-millionaire factory and sweatshop owner, Bruce Cameron, a narrow-minded miserly man whose sole use for his immense wealth is endowing memorial libraries to perpetuate his own fame.

One day while Elaine, the money master's daughter, is out riding, she has a fall from her horse, which affects her memory. She wanders into the slum district and after coming into contact with many dangers, is saved and cared for by Donald Robbins, who takes her into his home as he has done the unfortunate Evelyn. In time, her mind being still a blank, Elaine goes to work in one of her own father's factories and helps with the support of the little family.

Meanwhile Cameron makes every effort to find his daughter. Robbins sees in the paper the item referring to the mysterious disappearance of Elaine Cameron and confirms his suspicions that she is the daughter of the oppressor of the laboring classes. He is immediately moved to return her to her father, but then realizes that God may have sent her into the slums for a purpose. He and a committee wait upon Cameron in an endeavor to persuade him to withdraw the order for closing down his shops for two weeks and to grant a fair wage to his workers. Cameron refuses, but offers to subscribe to a memorial library. Angered, Robbins plans to play his trump card and, under threat, forces Cameron to accompany him to the slums, where he shows the terrible conditions which are the result of his industrial cruelty and power.

Meanwhile, Bronson Powers has been attracted by the charms of Elaine, and, not recognizing her in her new guise, coaxes her away with him. Robbins plans to show Cameron his own daughter and her condition as a climax to his object lesson, but learns from Evelyn what has occurred. He and Cameron break in upon Powers just as he is about to wrong his own fiance, whom he does not recognize, being crazed with drink. Cameron learns the truth and tries to get his daughter to return to him, after denouncing his intended son-in-law. The girl has learned to love Robbins and refuses to leave him. She and Robbins are finally married and the great Cameron fortune goes to making easier the burdens of the down-trodden laboring class.

THE CODE OF HIS ANCESTORS (June 9).—The cast: Stephen Carter (Ben Wilson); John Belmore (Jack Newton); Dorothy, his daughter (Dorothy Phillips); Preston Moore (Charles Ogle). Written by Catherine Carr and Harry Dittmar. Produced by Raymond L. Schrock.

Dorothy Belmore, a Southern beauty, is loved by two men, Stephen Carter and Preston Moore. Dorothy is urged by her father, who is in financial straits, to marry Stephen, who is heir to a large estate. Moore, though practically without money, is an experienced business man of middle age. He goes to New York, promising to return for Dorothy as soon as he has made enough money to marry her. After his departure, Dorothy yields to her father's wishes.

Dorothy accepts the devotion of her husband as a matter of course, but secretly idealizes the memory of Moore. Stephen's father dies and it is then discovered that he has been speculating in the Cotton Exchange and has lost nearly everything except the family homestead. Stephen takes possession of the family estate, where for lack of funds, he and Dorothy live alone, with an old Southern mammy.

Five years elapse, and Stephen finds it a hard struggle to keep up the home. Dorothy is not particularly happy, but devotes herself, like a good mother, to her five-year-old boy, called "Sunshine." Moore, meanwhile, has prospered in New York, and upon his first visit to his Southern home, he meets Stephen, who, unconscious of Moore's love affair with Dorothy, invites him to pay him a visit. Moore accompanies him home, cherishing a secret intention of revenge on the man who has married the girl he loves.

In the evening, Moore is seated alongside of Dorothy, who is playing for him on the piano, while Stephen, who has his back turned to them, is talking to his boy. While glancing in the mirror, Stephen sees Moore squeezing Dorothy's hand. Thereupon, he leaves the room, but looking back through the curtain, he sees Stephen kiss his wife, and overhears him tell her that Stephen is a coward to let her live in poverty. Moore urges Dorothy to elope with him. Dorothy consents to do so as soon as her husband is out of the way. Stephen, utterly overcome, stands before his father's portrait and says, "Help me, father, to acquit myself in this ordeal, according to our code."

At breakfast the next morning, when the silver cover is removed from a breakfast platter, before the amazed gaze of Dorothy and Moore, two duelling pistols are disclosed, together with a check made out for $25,000 to which no signature has been attached.

Stephen explained that one of the pistols is loaded and that he and Moore will draw for it, thus taking an equal chance, or that Moore, if he is too cowardly to fight, will sign the check, making it payable to him (Stephen). Moore, terrified at the thought of possible death, at the height of his success, proves himself a coward, as Stephen thought he would, and signs the check instead of taking a chance with the loaded pistol. Stephen then endorses the check and hands it over to Dorothy, telling her that in securing the money from Moore he has safeguarded her future happiness as a man of Moore's type would desert her and leave her penniless.

Dorothy realizes now that Moore is nothing more nor less than a cad. Left alone with her, he approaches Dorothy to claim her and offers to take her to New York. Dorothy repulses him, tears the check to bits, and Moore slinks out of her presence. Then she seeks her husband's forgiveness, but Stephen tells her that the code of his ancestors compels them to part. Dorothy rushes to her room and breaks down crying, as she embraces her child. Stephen, under the impression that Dorothy has left the house, tells the Southern mammy to bring his boy to him. When the servant doesn't return with the boy, Stephen goes to the bedroom, where he is at first tempted to strike Dorothy for not having taken her immediate departure, but is overcome with emotion when Sunshine draws him to his mother, and a reconciliation is thus brought about.

THE SHERIFF OF PINE MOUNTAIN (Two Parts—June 11).—The cast: Ben Haskell (Ben Wilson); Beth Bassett (Dorothy Phillips); Mrs. Haskell (Lettie Ford); Steve Bassett (William Courtleigh, Jr.); Annie (Jeanette Rutland); Lige Harlow (Jos. W. Girard); Dog Sled Driver (Charlie Ogle). Scenario by M. B. Havey. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Ben Haskell is the newly elected sheriff in a small town up near the Canadian border. He is the only son of his widowed mother. Ben is in love with Beth, whose brother, Steve, has fallen into bad company. He is seen often with Lige Harlow, the head of a band of opium smugglers. Steve helps Lige bring the opium across the snow in the dog sleds, although Ben has warned him of the danger of any acquaintance with Lige. Ben takes his oath of office on his mother's Bible. Soon afterward, Steve, acting upon Ben's advice, tells Lige he is going to break with him for good and all. Besides, there is a pretty little girl, Beth's friend, Annie, for whom Steve is coming to care.

But Lige persuades the boy to take one last trip down the river with him. That day some revenue officers, in search of opium smugglers, jump off the train. They track the dog sled through the snow, and finally come upon the men at the river bank. The revenue men attempt to make an arrest, but Lige, grabs Steve's gun from his belt and shoots. In the melee, Lige and Steve makes their escape. The gun with Steve's initials is found and brought to the Sheriff. He, of course, knows that it belongs to the brother of the girl he loves. He starts off after Steve, who has rushed home.

Steve tell all to Beth, who hides him in the attic. When Ben enters she tells him defiantly that Steve is not in the house, but Ben sees the fresh mud on the rungs of the attic ladder. Ben tells her that his oath of office means much to him and he cannot break the trust it placed in him. At this juncture Steve comes downstairs, and in a broken voice, tells all to Steve. Steve then realizes the truth—that Lige was the murderer and not the boy. He listens intently as the boy tells of the opium smuggling, and then sets off after Lige. He breaks into the opium den and during the fight which ensues is shot in the arm.

He and Lige have a struggle. Clenched in each other's fierce embrace, they fight back and forth across the den, destroying everything in it. He manages to round up Lige and the others and lead them to justice. And Beth, cognizant of the wrong she was about to do the man who truly loves her, finds his ring and slips it on her finger again and waits for his return.

PEG O' THE RING (Episode 6—June 5).—The cast: Peg (Grace Cunard); Dr. Lund, Jr. (Francis Ford); Flip (Pete Gerald); Mrs. Lund (Jean Hathaway); The Hindoo, Marcus (Irving Lippner); Dr. Lund, Sr. (Marc Fenton).

At the end of the Fifth Episode, Peg is seen slowly sinking through the secret panel in the floor, and to her consternation she finds that the gang of counterfeiters has flooded the room into which the panel opens and in which she is sinking deeper and deeper as the floor under her descends.

In the endeavor to rescue Peg, whom he has seen through the door-way, young Dr. Lund has been knocked out by a blow on the head from Marcus and the counterfeiters, who rushed to his rescue when Marcus entered the den to give the stolen letter to Mrs. Dr. Lund. The young doctor is thrown into a damp cellar in a half conscious condition, realizing only that Marcus has Flip's precious letter, and that it is in danger of coming into the hands of those who would destroy it, and thus endanger the inheritance of Peg. All his attempts to escape from the cellar are fruitless.

Having Lund safe, Marcus then turns his attention to Peg, and stops the panel from sliding any further into the water. Peg is reassured again at finding the water growing no deeper, but all of her fear returns when she discovers the evil face of Marcus looking at her through the semi-darkness. Marcus pulls her to safety, and as Peg demands of him what he intends to do with her, he sneeringly turns away as though he would leave her to her fate. She takes the opportunity, however, to slip away from him, and fortune marvelously favors her, to make an escape from the cellar.

In the meantime, Mrs. Lund, utterly unconscious of the fact that Marcus had been so near her, returns to her home, and is informed that Marcus had been there, and was then on his way to the counterfeiters. She expressed impatience, but can think of no way to interecept him. She does not dare return, for her husband, having learned of the burning of his circus tent, and the failure of his agents to procure Flip's letter, has returned to the circus himself to protect his property and arrange for its continuance on the road. She fears to show her hand in the counterfeiting game through running into her husband.

Dr. Lund's appearance at the circus encourages the discouraged performers, to whom the loss of the tent is the loss of an entire season's work. His willingness to continue makes everyone happy except Flip, who is well nigh distracted over the disappearance of Peg. In the midst of the general rejoicing, however, Peg rushes into the tent, and informs them of Dr. Lund, Jr.'s, desperate situation in the counterfeiters' den. A number of the performers join her in going back to his assistance. They arrive at the headquarters of the gang, and are stealthily approaching it, when the fateful hour of twelve arrives, and Peg's strange inheritance lays its irresistible hand upon her. Her frail body is torn by the most piercing shrieks, and all of their strategy to surprise the gang goes for nothing. The rescuers are overpowered before they can reach Dr. Lund, and are put to flight. Peg is captured and dragged shrieking back into the cellar, as the episode ends.

THE LION NEMESIS (Two Parts—June 10).—The cast: Margaret Grey (Margaret Gibson); Capt. Carlyle (William Clifford); Major Grey (Frederick Montague); Karma (Al. Garcia).

In punishment for a mortal sin committed, the soul of an Egyptian Prince has been reincarnated in the body of Monte, an African lion, and as the cycle of time passes the fallen one ever seeks release to the soul of man. Sin has not been eliminated from the world, and extreme evil resides in the heart of Krama, an Indian Rajah. There is but one influence which this wicked Prince fears and that is the influence of the lion Monte which is now a member of his menagerie.

Major Grey, an English army officer, is stationed at the military post in the district over which the Rajah rules. The major's daughter, Margaret, has just been betrothed to Capt. Carlyle, a young officer in the major's command. The Rajah conceives a wild infatuation for Margaret and being possessed of a weird hypnotic power, he proceeds to exercise it on the young girl to further his evil designs. The young captain is mystified at Margaret's growing indifference towards him and her apparent interest in the Rajah, not being aware that his sweetheart's will and mind are now under the control of the Prince.

At an embassy fete the Rajah, by silent command, compels the girl to meet him in the gardens. The captain jealously follows them, witnesses Margaret about to yield to the Prince's advances and promptly challenges him to combat. The guests interfere and a tragedy is averted. Margaret's father believes the captain to be a victim of unreasonable jealousy, and thus the breach between the young couple is widened.

Irritated by the apparent animosity of the lion Monte towards him, the Rajah orders the beast killed, but the animal's keeper, who has become greatly attached to the lion, cannot induce himself to carry out his orders and to avoid his master's displeasure sets the lion free in the desert. The Rajah utilizes his power over Margaret and forces her to a clandestine meeting, whereupon he proceds to forcibly carry her off. A guard, who has witnessed the event, reports the occurrence to Capt. Carlyle.

The young captain, with a small detachment of his company, proceeds to the Rajah's palace to demand the return of Margaret, because from the reported events he now suspects the Prince's undue influence over his sweetheart. A servitor of the Rajah, whose ill-will he has gained, informs the captain of the secret retreat to which the Rajah takes his favorites and from whence they never return. Meanwhile, the Prince, who is carrying the unconscious girl across the desert, encounters Monte, the lion, which attacks him. The Prince is killed, and, having destroyed a thing of evil, the soul of the old Egyptian Prince is released from the body of the beast. The captain, in rapid pursuit of the abductor of his sweetheart, comes upon Margaret just as she regains consciousness, and now relieved of the Rajah's influence and once again her old self, a happy reconciliation takes place between the young lovers.

JERRY'S BIG LARK (June 9).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); first cowboy (George George); father (Louis FitzRoy); mother (Janet Sully); daughter (Clair Alexander); second cowboy (Harry Jackson); third cowboy (Abe Lincoln); butler (Tommy Hayes) Directed by Milton Fahrney.

Jerry and the daughter of a well-to-do family are very much in love with each other, but the father objects to Jerry's attentions. Jerry's persistence causes the old man to take his family for an automobile tour, but before doing so he has an encounter with Jerry. The family starts away; the girl is in tears. Jerry, who is not to be outwitted, leaps on the rear of the automobile. Some distance out in the country they are halted by a motion picture company which is working, the director having asked the motorists to stop so as not to interfere with the scene.

A number of genuine cowboys have been engaged to pose in the picture which is being produced. Jerry peers out from his place of concealment to see what is going on, and when several policemen appear he immediately becomes frightened, fearing that his old enemies are after him. They are only motion picture cops, but Jerry does not know that. He runs off and hides. He witnesses a scene wherein a cowboy is choking a girl in a melodramatic way, the girl screaming for help. Not realizing that that is only for the camera, Jerry goes hurriedly to the girl's assistance. Jerry is handled roughly by the cowboys and the father, seeing Jerry's plight, is elated and rewards the cowboys for their good work.

After the family starts away, leaving Jerry behind, a bright idea occurs to him. His sweetheart's family are to give a reception in the near future, and Jerry hastily writes a note to which he signs the father's name. The note is an invitation to the cowboys to attend the reception in the costumes they are wearing that day, as the father wishes to surprise his guests. The night of the reception arrives, the guests are all assembled, when the cowboys, following instructions, ride into the house and proceed to shoot things up, the guests fleeing in alarm in all directions.

The cowboys proceed to make merry with the liquid refreshments. The contents of the punchbowl being too weak for their taste, they permit their horses to drink the punch. Father and mother seek refuge under a bed, and are kept prisoners by one of the horses who proceeds to feed upon the mattress. Jerry's sweetheart is as much frightened as the other guests, but Jerry finds and reassures her. Appropriating one of the cowboy's horses, he mounts it and, with the girl behind him, rides off, too late for the irate father, who has been rescued by the police, to prevent the elopement.

OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY (Thanhouser—Five Parts—June 1).—The cast: The Girl (Gladys Hulette); Her Sweetheart (Fraulie Fraunholtz); Her Father (J. H. Gilmour); The Cook (Yale Benner); His Wife (Kathryn Adams).

The story opens with the broker, who, as the head of the company, was promising quick returns on investments, suddenly disappears. Another "get-rich-quick" bubble had exploded. The case was ordinary, it was averred by the officials, for the man had imposed on a gullible public and made off with their money to live in ease in some distant country.

But there was a different story. The man had been the victim of a scheming couple. He was the tool of two wizards of high finance who used him to cover their tracks and take the blame for their misdeeds. The escape of the broker had been accomplished in a clever manner. While his daughter detained the detectives by talking to them, he left the table of a dinner party given at his home and from that time no trace of him was found.

To help the needy ones who had suffered by the apparent mismanagement of her father, the girl turned over all her property to the creditors and withdrew to earn her livelihood by working in a dressmaking establishment. Among those who attended the creditor's meeting were the actual criminals and they selected as their next victim a young man who had lost a few thousand in the crash but who could easily afford to lose more. He was very sympathetic with the unfortunates and seemed "easy."

To enlist his immediate sympathy, the woman simulated an attempted suicide. After the young fellow had rescued her, she told him that her husband's meagre earnings had been wiped out by the crash and that they had nothing left. The young man escorted her home and said he would help them to a new start in life.

While the woman and the "sucker" were out in the latter's automobile chance intervened to upset the plans of the conspirators. The girl, who had retired after the flight of her father, was struck by the machine. Despite the fact that the woman made sure to inform the young fellow who the upstart was, he evinced a great interest in her. To destroy this interest, the scheming woman tried a novel plan. She had the employer of the girl send the young woman out motoring in expensive gowns, arranged for the young man to see her, and insinuate that the worst possible conclusion was the only way to explain the sudden acquisition of wealth. This trick proved useless for the lover investigated and found that she was merely acting as a model. Various attempts to injure the girl and put her out of the way were tried but all to no avail. Feeling convinced that she was being persecuted for an unknown motive the young fellow decided to do a little investigating.

As a last resort the swindlers had their bookkeeper, who had only been a short time in their employ but had earned their confidence, write a letter to the girl purporting to come from her father asking her to meet him. The girl kept her appointment and found the man and woman waiting for her instead. They threatened her with bodily injury unless she withdrew and they reminded her of how they had disposed of her father. Then they became boisterous, feeling sure of their victim and recalled the details of the plot that had eliminated the father.

Their talk suddenly ceased when they saw their bookkeeper followed by the young man and a policeman enter the room. While the crooks raged at the bookkeeper who has betrayed them, the old man smiled, removed his wig and glasses and introduced himself as the fugitive broker. He had determined to disclose the real criminals and, with the aid of the police, had installed a dictagraph, listened to what was said and arranged for their arrest. In the face of this testimony the swindlers were speechless and were silently escorted to prison to await trial.

BEAUTY

IMA KNUTT GETS A BITE (June 4).—The cast: Ima Knutt (Orral Humphrey); Liza Knutt (Dixie Stuart); Mrs. Banks (Gladys Kingsbury); Reverend Jabez Meddlesome (John Gough).

Mother-in-law and Liza decide to join the Sunday School picnic for a day at the sea side. Ima, much against his will, is forced to join them. He, however, prepares for accidents by taking along with him a large flask of his favorite brand. Ima thinks he is going to have rather a slow time but when he arrives at the fete he discovers so many fascinations that it is only with difficulty that Liza and mother-in-law can drag him away from the fascinating damsels who want to teach him to swim. Ima is placed on the pier with a rented rod and line to occupy himself with the harmless pursuit of fishing.

Ima finds things rather slow as he is surrounded by nothing but old fogies who seem to catch all the fish while he none. He finds a congenial spirit who, for a share of the contents of his bottle, first explains to him that it is necessary to have bait on his hook to catch fish and then spins such a wonderful yarn of deep sea fishing that Ima is persuaded to hire a boat and put out to sea, accompanied by his friend.

They arrive at a spot in the ocean where his friend informs him they are bound to have success. They fortify themselves for a battle with the denizens of the deep. Much to Ima's astonishment he really gets a bite, and a big one. The fight between the fish and Ima is one sided, the fish winning and pulling him overboard, upsetting the boat. Ima sinks to the bottom of the ocean and like all drowning men his past sins in all their horror come to him as his breath leaves his body. He reaches the bottom and obtains a new lease of life when he finds himself pursued by the horrible monsters of the deep.

He is rescued eventually by a mermaid, who lends him her coach and horses. Ima arrives at the surface in the sea shell coach drawn by sea horses and is dragged from the water by mother-in-law and Liza who, with the aid of the guard have seen the accident and have come to his rescue.

AMERICAN.

THE TRAIL OF THE THIEF (Three Parts—June 1).—The cast: Dorothy Baird (Winnifred Greenwood); Martin Gale (Edward Coxen); James Vallon (George Field); Sport McGuire (Jack Farrell); Sport's Side Partner (George Armstrong); Elaine Mills (Meta Drinkwitz); Elaine's Sister (Anna Morrison).

Martin Gale, manager of a detective agency, secretly loves Dorothy Baird, a clever woman operative, in his employ, and presents her with a small revolver engraved with her name. He is a man's man, a terror to criminals, but rather shy of women. Dorothy is assigned to a party given for a society debutante, where she meets James Vallon, a popular and wealthy young fellow and they are attracted to each other. A valuable necklace disappears while Dorothy is talking to Vallon. She is chagrined, but the hostess decides not to follow it up, as it would put suspicion on her guests.

Dorothy meets Vallon later and they become much interested in each other, although she is warned by Gale that Vallon closely resembles a crook for whom he is looking. Dorothy is assigned to watch a suspicious individual who has been hanging around a jewelry store belonging to a client. The man senses her business and arranges with his confederates to get her out of the way. He comes out of a saloon and enters a taxi. She enters another one standing near, and is seized and bound and carried to the crook's rendezvous, where they intend holding her until after the contemplated robbery.

Imprisoned in a windowless room, she is confronted by Vallon to their mutual surprise. She is revealed a detective, he a thief. She spurns him, and he, in a maudlin condition, presents her with the necklace he stole and attempts to force her to his desire. Gale is worried at Dorothy's failure to return and waits at the office while the crooks are pulling the job. An electric signal tells him of tampering with the vault, and, with his men, he hurries to the store. The thieves are captured. Dorothy's revolver found, a confession forced, and Gale goes to her rescue in time to save her from Vallon and earn her love.

FALSTAFF.

PETERSON'S PITIFUL PLIGHT (June 3).—The cast: Peterson (Bert Delaney); His Wife (Gladys Leslie); Peterson's Former Sweetheart (Elise Jordan).

High-life and the sweet charms of femininity are expensive as Peterson ultimately learns. His path through life is fairly paved with creditors—including a woman. After having promised the latter to marry her, to get rid of her importunity, he falls in love with his new bookkeeper, Rosemary. He insists on taking her out to lunch and on these journeys has much ado to avoid encountering his creditors. To get rid of them temporarily he convinces them that Rosemary is a millionairess and that after marrying her, he will repay them with compound interest. He then makes haste to propose to her and she accepts him.

A fortnight after the wedding, Peterson and Rosemary are in the seventh heaven of bliss. Then things begin to happen. His creditors begin invading his home, at first singly, then in twos, then in battalions. He manages to introduce them as uncles and granduncles and has the "pleasure" of beholding his wife accord them a grand reception and embrace and kiss her "relations." When they leave, Rosemary requests them to come again and soon.

His creditors monopolize his office and his time, his discarded sweetheart serves him with a summons, while a sheriff stands guard at his home with a warrant in his pocket. He is placed under arrest, but the sheriff consents to go with him to give him a chance to take leave of his wife. He introduces the sheriff as a business friend of his with whom he must start out on a business trip without delay. They have hardly left the house when they are encountered by numerous other sheriffs, each one flashing a warrant for Peterson's arrest. Each claims him as his own and he is pulled hither and thither between them. Finally they decide to fight it out among themselves.

The noise of the scuffle attracts Rosemary's attention who immediately hastens to her husband's assistance. At her sight Peterson decides to make his escape with her—irrespective of consequence. Pulling Rosemary after him he makes a dash for liberty. He discovers that running a blockade is not the easiest thing in the world. Whichever way he turns he encounters sheriffs and creditors. At last when he is in imminent danger of being captured, he spies an auto and by means of it breaks through the cordon of his pursuers. They escape and begin life anew. Peterson is given a severe lecture to which he listens penitently, vowing never to accumulate another past.

ADVERTISEMENTERS (June 5).—The cast: Oscar (Claude Cooper); Conrad (Frank E. McNish); The Maiden (Louise Emerald Bates).

There were two restaurants on the block, and the proprietors thought they were rivals. The facts of the matter were that neither did any business, and in all probability the sheriff would have had them by now had it not happened that Oscar and Conrad came around. As soon as the two pals noted conditions they became advertising experts. A toss of the coin sent them to the Billikin restaurant, and arrangements were quickly made.

Conrad became a sandwich man, while Oscar posed as a "passerby," who went into raptures over the bill of fare and the statement that the place sold food "like father used to eat." When a crowd collected Oscar found it easy to lead a procession into the restaurant, and business began to boom. The rival food artist was more unhappy than ever, and his desire for revenge induced him to listen to the plea of a beauteous maiden who had a scheme to win away the trade.

The maiden was installed at a stove in the show window, and made flapjacks in public. She won away the fickle crowd, and the boss of the pals informed them he would dispense with their services unless they counteracted the drawing power of the girl across the street. They tried several schemes without result, and then Conrad met and fell in love with his business rival. She confided to him that HIS boss had offered her $150 if she would quit, which led Conrad to say that HER boss had tried to bribe him (Conrad), and he proposed that they accept the offers and get married on the money. The girl gladly agreed, for she was getting tired of making flapjacks.

The day she retired the Girl gave a farewell flapjack demonstration, and Conrad, from his sandwich post across the way, was horrified when Oscar told him he had put "gunpowder in her baking powder." Conrad fought with his old pal. (Did you ever see two sandwich men, burdened with their boards, fight? It is funny.) He then ran into the restaurant, but was unable to prevent the catastrophe. The flapjacks blew up, and there was much excitement. The patrons were somewhat "battered," but not badly hurt. Conrad and the Girl left triumphantly for a ministers, while the wicked Oscar repented of his crime, because he had endangered the life of the woman his friend had loved.

WHERE WIVES WIN (June 10).—The cast: Mother (Carey L. Hastings); Father (Joe Phillips); Daughter (Reenie Farrington); Her Sweetheart (John Beck); Cowboy (Gene Moore, Jr.).

If one does manual work all day, it is rather hard on the feet to be compelled to dance at night. This was what the young mechanic thought when he called upon his "best girl," and she immediately began making the records do their duty, while she instructed her fiance in some fancy steps. The young man sighed, for his corns were prtoesting, and he envied his prospective father-in-law when that sprightly individual sneaked out, presumably headed for a nearby saloon where he could sit down and rest. His wife telephoned to the refreshment establishment, but the barkeeper told her the man she wanted was not there. (Diplomat, that barkeeper.) Then the wife went around in person, but was headed off. She returned home in tears, declaring she had been shamefully treated, and adding: "They wouldn't treat me that way out West, where women have the vote."

All this time the suitor had been dancing and dancing, but he had reached his limit. He collapsed upon the sofa, and his lady felt sorry for him. She said she would go in the kitchen and help her mother, and while she was away the young man fell asleep. In his dreams he was transported out West, and there he found that the wife's words were true. He saw the family and followed his sweetheart to a dance hall, where she was the queen of the evening. His father-in-law-to-be was also there, but his wife took him out at the point of a revolver, led him home, tied him to a tree, and explained that she intended to have some target practice. The young man interfered, was chased up a tree, shot, and fell down again. Then he awoke.

His tumble from the sofa brought the women in from the kitchen, and just as they helped him to his feet his father-in-law-elect strolled in. Husband and wife had an argument, and wife flounced off to the kitchen. The man was "peeved," and told his story to the younger chap, who replied: "Cheer up! Think what might have happened had she been a cowgirl." And when he told his dream the husband admitted that matters might have been worse.

THANHOUSER

JOHN BREWSTER'S WIFE (Two Parts—June 6).—The cast: John Brewster (Ernest Howard); his wife (Ethyle Cooke); baby (Ethelmary Oakland); maid (Carey L. Hastings).

"This place is stifling me! It's killing me!" Elizabeth's long pent-up feelings burst forth in a torrent of angry rebellion. And her husband, John Brewster, looked with scorn at the excited little woman. But Elizabeth, who came from the city and who had given up her stage ambitions to marry Brewster, rebelled under the narrow conventions of her husband's home town. So, when she received a card from the manager of her old company, saying that they were playing in the big city nearby, the old longing for the freedom and kind-heartedness of her old friends surged within her. She rebelled against her husband's harsh criticism of "her people" and left.

However, a baby's lisped request can often soften the fiercest pride, and John Brewster finally went to the city to bring his little daughter's mother back to her. But there he found Fred, who had always been infatuated with Elizabeth. Elizabeth had just scorned him and told him that although she was going to go in for a career, she was going "straight." But John Brewster's strict upbringing made him suspicious, and when he found Fred in his wife's room he denounced them both without giving her a chance to explain. Elizabeth decided to live up to his opinion of her. But Fate prevented. Fred was arrested for forgery a few moments after John left, and Elizabeth, trembling with the thought of how near she had been to the "edge" came back to her little hall bedroom, and there she found a note from her husband. John Brewster had heard of a railroad wreck which his wife might have been killed in had she been visiting relatives, as he had told the neighbors she was. He wished that this had happened. For he preferred that his daughter should have no mother at all than one such as she was. And he told Elizabeth that he was going to take advantage of the wreck and report her dead, unidentified, for he believed that his daughter would be happier loving the memory of a good mother than possessing an evil one.

Baby's birthday arrived, and she insisted on having her mother's picture at the party table. When a stir of wind blew in at the window and whisked out one of the candles, the baby exclaimed that perhaps her "Angel Mother" had done it. And just outside the window was the baby's mother. She came back with Fred, who had escaped from prison. Fred had come to her for money to enable him to get away to South America. She consented to try to get money for him from her husband.

When the baby went to sleep Elizabeth entered the home she left a year ago. But her one hope was blasted as John faced her, as stern and unrelenting as ever, and told her that the "dead could not come back." When she pleaded with him, he allowed her to go and just look at the baby, and she could not summon enough courage to ask him for the money. She told Fred bitterly that it was no use. And then as they went along by her husband's bank, Fred pointed to it and said that there was plenty of money in it. And the woman stopped short, for she remembered the old combination of the main vault. The baby, as if she had felt her mother's presence in her dreams, called her father and asked for her "Mamma." The father walked over to the window to hide his emotion and saw the two figures working at the door of the bank across the way.

When John Brewster appeared before his wife and Fred as they were working at the combination of the safe, she laughed at the revolver he pointed at them, and told him that it was a useless weapon, because if he shot the townspeople would know that his wife, whom he said was dead, was a thief, in partnership with a thief—and how about his child's name then? John Brewster knew he could do nothing. But when he left Elizabeth turned and pointed her revolver at Fred and would not allow him to rob the bank for fear the blame would be placed on Brewster, and she did not want her baby's father to be called a thief.

The next day she lingered in town to get one last look at her baby, and she held the little girl in her arms and gave her a letter for her father and then went away. When John Brewster read the letter, in which Elizabeth told him that his accusations had been false, and that she had never done anything which made her unfit to be the child's mother, he turned to the eager baby and told her that they would go and find her mother. So the two started out together, hand in hand, to find the mother.

GAUMONT

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 38 (May 31).—This release takes the spectator to one of the most renowned spots on the continent. Travelers from all over the world have made it a stopping point. Transcontinental tours always include this popular Colorado stop in their itinerary. The mighty mountain is 14,142 feet high, and is undoubtedly the best advertised spot and the best known peak in the United States. Those who have actually seen the mountain will have their pleasant trip recalled to them, while to the million of others to whom Pike's Peak is only the subject of encyclopedias and writers, the views from the mountain will bring the reality of personal visit. The famous hostelry is pictured, and the ride up the mountain side on the cog railway that has made the trip a pleasure jaunt instead of hard work, is shown puffing its way skyward. The vistas that unfold themselves to the eye from the top of the peak beggar description.

"The Gnat Gets Estelle's Goat," another of Harry Palmer's funny cartoon comics, occupies several hundred feet of this popular release.

FLAMES OF VENGEANCE (Three Parts—June 8).—The cast: Linton (Sydney Mason); Millicent (Iva Shepard); her mother (Matilde Baring); her father (Charles W. Travis); Deyne (John Reinhard); Ethel, daughter of Millicent and Deyne (Gertrude Robinson); McClure, a factory employee (John Macklu); Dora, his daughter (Birsha Shepard); Bobbie, her sweetheart (Albert Macklin); Blagg, secretary to Linton (James Levering). Written by Paul M. Bryan. Directed by Edwin Middleton.

Millicent, the daughter of a wealthy father and mother, breaks her engagement with Deyne through foolish jealousy. In pique, she becomes the fiancee of young Linton, a serious minded fellow who sincerely loves her. Preparations for the marriage culminate in a prenuptial reception. Deyne is present, having been invited to be an usher at the wedding.

The sight of her former sweetheart reawakens Millicent's love for him, and Linton, coming upon them unawares, discovers her in Deyne's arms. He leaves the house, incensed, after telling Millicent's parents of her unworthiness. Her father turns her from her home in his anger.

Twenty years elapse. Millicent's husband has died and she is left in straitened circumstances with her daughter Ethel, a girl of nineteen. Linton has been highly successful and is the owner of a big mill. He is a confirmed woman-hater. Trouble arises at the factory over improvements, and Linton takes a firm stand against his employees. Ethel answers an advertisement from the office of the factory for a new stenographer and is accepted. Linton, not knowing who she is, becomes strongly attracted to her, and in time, proposes marriage.

Affairs at the mill come to a climax when Dora, the daughter of McClure, suffers a breakdown, following an accident. She finally dies. Her father, feeling that Linton is responsible for the girl's death, vows vengeance. With other conspirators, he abducts Linton. Ethel learns of the plot and is carried to the secluded place chosen for his imprisonment, riding on top the limousine. Discovered by the conspirators, she is locked in an old barn with Linton, and the place is set on fire. The pair make a spectacular escape from the building. The final reconciliation of Linton, Ethel and Millicent is the climax to the story.

VOGUE.

NAILING ON THE LID (June 4).—The cast: Father (Jack Gaines); his daughter (Rena Rodgers); her sweetheart (Arthur Moon); Orlando, the Sociologist (Ben Turpin); Bungling Bill (Paddy McQuire).

Rooney, a politician, reads in the papers that Bloggie spends his noon hour telling the other employees that Rooney is a crook. Rooney later meets the father of the girl. When they reach the father's home they find the girl in the arms of her sweetheart. Rooney orders father to get rid of Moon.

In the mix-up which follows, Rooney gets the worst of it. Rooney falls with an awful thud. Rooney has Bloggie arrested for murder. But father comes to, and Rooney promises him some money if he will pretend he is dead until Bloggie is found guilty and executed. Father, sore at his treatment, exposes Rooney, and is locked up for perjury.

DORIAN'S DIVORCE (Five Parts—Rolfe Photoplay, Inc.—May 1).—The cast: Dorian Keene (Lionel Barrymore); Florence Keene (Grace Valentine); Theo. Sanders (Edgar L. Davenport); B. G. Holding (Lindsay Hall); Henry Morgan (William Davidson); Captain Ross (L. R. Wolheim); Puck (Buckley Starkey). Directed by O. A. C. Lund.

Dorian Keene, a broker, who has lost most of his money in Wall street, and his wife, Florence, dissatisfied with her lot, wants a divorce. Out of his great love for her, Dorian agrees to allow her to have it. While the papers are being prepared Sanders, Florence's god-father, confesses to Dorian that he has misappropriated funds belonging to Florence. He fears an exposure, since she is getting a divorce, and may demand an accounting. Doria promises to do what he can to protect Sanders.

They go to Dorian's hunting lodge, where Florence agrees to meet Dorian with her lawyer. There Sanders weakens and tells Florence of the missing funds. She turns upon him in a violent temper. A maid hears them quarreling and soon afterward hears a shot. Hurrying into the room she finds Sanders dead with a bullet wound in his temple. She tells Dorian that Florence has killed Sanders. In his devotion to his wife, Dorian takes the blame for the crime. Then he escapes in an automobile.

Down the road Dorian encounters a highwayman who holds him up, takes his clothing and the machine, and leaves his outfit with the bewildered broker. Further along the road the automobile goes over a steep embankment and the car is burned. The body of the highwayman is charred beyond recognition, and every one thinks it is Dorian.

Dorian, penniless, wanders to the water front in New York, inteding to take a ship for Europe. There he learns that Henry Morgan, a fellow broker, who was instrumental in making Florence dissatisfied with her lot, has bought his old yacht, the Sea Gull, and is arranging for a smuggling expedition. Morgan has lost nearly all his money, and, in desperation, has taken a contract to smuggle Chinese into this country for a thousand dollars a head. Dorian succeeds in getting a job aboard the yacht as a stoker.

The yacht puts to sea, and when some distance from land, meets another vessel, from which the Chinese are taken aboard. As the yacht nears New York, Dorian, after many thrilling incidents, gains control of the wireless

Since Its Inception

in 1907

FORT MYERS, FLORIDA
May 11th, 1916.

Dear Old Moving Picture World:-

Just a line to say to you that I am still among the living, and while you may have heard nothing from me in several years, I have EVERY COPY of the World since its inception on my files.

I have noted through its columns all the different men and things that have come into prominence since we of the "Old School" first launched our "Store Shows" back in 1906, but I might add that I have continuously been in the business ever since, and am now working under the title of "THE SOUTH'S OLDEST EXHIBITOR."

The World has been of more value to me than any other agency in keeping fully posted as to the different developments of the industry.

I am beginning the construction of a modern theatre, 40x100 feet, seating approximately 500, and for pictures alone; will have same open about Sept. 1st.

If you have a map of the United States handy, just look way down in the lower part of Florida, and see the location where one exhibitor has done business continuously since Sept. 1st, 1906, and is likely to be doing the same thing as long as he is doing anything.

With best wishes to you, and the World,
I am your friend,
Jno. T. Hendry.

apparatus, and notifies the Federal authorities of the smuggling scheme. A revenue cutter meets the yacht and the captain and crew are arrested. The captain names Morgan as the man higher up.

Meanwhile Morgan has been pressing his suit with Florence, who, believing her husband dead, has agreed to marry Morgan. Instead, he urges her to come to him without a ceremony. Florence then spurns him, and realizing his true nature turns her thoughts to Dorian. Then the government agents call to arrest Morgan, and at the same time she learns that her husband is alive. Florence sends for Dorian, welcomes him home, and together they tear up the papers for the proposed divorce, which she has kept in her possession.

SOME DETECTIVE!—Lazy Lukins and Fat Perkins are in love with Widow Farmer. Lazy's nickname doesn't appeal to the lady in question as she is of a decidedly industrious character. Lazy is a detective but his ability to ferret out clues is lost upon the widow. She prefers the fat, but frugal, Perkins, who runs the delicatessen store.

Nap and Sallie, the chimps, are Italian street venders. One afternoon, they get into a scuffle and run off, leaving the contents of their trays scattered over the pavement. Lazy happens along. He tries to solve the mystery of the trays but finally stops his deductions to gloat over a necklace which he finds among the contents of one of the trays. He decides to forget the mystery in the case and bear his trophy to the fair widow.

Meanwhile the chimps have made a raid on the delicatessen to the terror of the customers, the widow, and Fat Perkins. Lazy comes up but is scorned alike by the widow and Perkins. That evening Lazy endeavors to take the necklace to his love but Fat sees him as he lights a cigar before the delicatessen with the necklace hanging from his pocket. Fat thinks Lazy has been robbing the delicatessen and gains possession of the necklace after a squabble. He then hurries off with the jewelry, determining to beat Lazy to the widow with it. Lazy returns home. As he sits brooding, he decides upon a scheme which he caries out with the aid of Nap and Sallie.

Nap steals a pair of Fat's shoes as he dreams of the widow. Sallie enters the widow's room, by stealth, and steals the necklace which the widow has put away with kisses. Nap and Sallie meet in the old barn behind the widow's house and the necklace changes hands. Sallie returns to Lazy but Nap takes the necklace and, with Fat's shoes on his feet, returns to Fat's bedroom where he stuffs the necklace in one of the shoes and leaves.

The next morning the loss of the necklace is discovered. The widow is in despair but Lazy comes to the rescue with his detecting paraphenalia, and he and the chimps succeed in locating the criminal. The widow refuses to hear Fat's protestations of innocence, and her heart turns to the clever detective who has recovered her necklace for her.

HAUNTED.—The Newlyweds are given the use of a friend's bungalow for their honeymoon. With suitcases bearing the inevitable "Just Married" labels, they arrive at their destination and begin on a period that bids fair to be full of bliss. But Fate sends Montmorency, a stranded actor, striding down the railroad tracks with his partners, Nap and Sallie, the chimps, and he and the Newlyweds are drawn together by a queer coincidence.

Montmorency is seen by a circus man who covets the chimps, and the actor is forced to sell his partners. The circus man sends the chimps in an express wagon to the station to be shipped away but the express man is more interested in his book "Pity the Laboring Man" than in his charges, and the box with the monkeys in falls to the pavement before the house which shelters the Newlyweds. Nap and Sallie emerge from the broken box and take refuge in the nearest haven they find which chances to be the attic of the Newlyweds' bungalow.

Then commences a reign of terror. Mrs. Newlyweds thinks that her husband is perfect except for his smoking, and he thinks that she is perfect except for her excessive eating so that when his cigar and her lunch vanish, each blames the other and a quarrel is the result. As a matter of fact, the chimps have made a raid from the attic and even at the time of the quarrel, Nap is smoking peacefully behind the hall rack and Sallie is enjoying a lunch in the attic.

Finally mysteriously opened doors, laundry baskets that sway to and fro, a syphon that sprays them in the face as they open the kitchen door and the noise of soft footfalls where no persons are, lead the couple to the conviction that the house is haunted.

They decide to leave, only to find that the house has been mysteriously fired by the stolen cigar which Nap has left on Mrs. Newlywed's best hat on the rack in the hall. The two rush to pack their suitcases. But Mr. Newlywed's umbrella persists in dancing about the room, carried by some unseen thing, and they flee into Mrs. Newlywed's room to find her nightgown waving aloft upon the arms of what is apparently an apparition with its head hidden in the white folds.

Mrs. Newlywed faints at the continued horrors, and Mr. Newlywed is at his wit's ends. But help comes in the shape of the circus man and the careless delivery man. The circus man has waited in vain for the chimps at the station and has found the driver, compelling him to drive him back over the road he has just traveled in order to try and find some clue to the missing animals.

They ring at the Newlyweds bungalow and Mr. Newlywed, in fright, drops his wife on the floor and she revives. They both rush to the door and upon hearing of the loss of the chimps, see an explanation of the uncanny happenings of the past several hours. The chimps are located in the attic and everybody is happy.

WORLD EQUITABLE.

FATES BOOMERANG (Peerless—Five Parts—May 29).—The cast: Zell (Mollie King); George Castleman (Charles Gotthold); Mildred Castleman (June Elvidge); Arnold Morgan (Frank Goldsmith). Directed by Frank H. Crane.

George Castleman, an engineer, succeeds in securing the supervision of a big railroad in the West. He hurries home to tell the good news to Mildred, his wife. As usual she is at the Bridge Club, or other place of amusement, but being so full of his good luck he phones her to come home at once. However, she continues to play her game of bridge for another hour. An hour later she enters with excuses to George, who allows her kisses to make it all right.

He eagerly tells her the news and she is delighted, but when he talks of her going with him, she says: "Surely you do not expect me to go with you?" He laughingly explains that it is not for a few months, but for years—that it is a big railroad. But she persists in her refusal to go with him. He makes arrangements for the trip, and goes off alone to face the wilderness, with Mildred's words ringing in his ears, "When you want to see me, you can easily come home."

George reaches the West and the building of the road begins in earnest, but it is slow work in the mountainous country. One day Dan Holden, while sitting in front of his hut in the mountains, with his little grandchild Zell, sees in the distance the railroad crew breaking through the forest. As they draw nearer and nearer, day by day, both are fascinated by the work, never before having seen cars, tracks or steam shovels. Zell is attracted to George and he somewhat to her. However, he explains to her that he is married but she persists in seeing him, if only to cheer him up. One day, while returning from watching the men at work, old Mr. Holden falls and seriously injures himself. George carries him to his hut but the injury is too much for the aged man to survive and he dies two days later.

Lonesome, Zell shares her lonesomeness with that of the engineer. Months later, strange are the happenings in the little mountain hut and also in the beautiful home in the city. Zell is a real little mother, being called the little mother of the hills, and George is bending over, looking at their new born babe with true love and happiness. On the other hand, Mildred has met a man named Morgan, a flirtatious society man, who has designs upon her and urges her to bring divorce proceedings against her husband.

Leaving the city to get evidence against George, Morgan and Mildred arrive at the little village, leaving in a coach for George's hut. The driver, a half-witted chap, driving carelessly around a curve, drove his wagon and occupants over the edge of a cliff, losing his life as well as killing both passengers. The news was a terrible shock to George, but after directing his men to give the three unfortunates as decent burial as the little mountain place could afford, he was at liberty to consider Zell's love for him in a different light with the result that after marrying the little mother of the hills, he continues his work content at last that his wife and babe are worthy of his sacrifice.

INTERNATIONAL FILM SERVICE.

MYSTERIES OF MYRA (Sixth Episode—Two Parts—May 29.—Realizing the strange transformation that has taken place in Myra, whereby she now possesses the spirit of the Grand Master, Dr. Alden is deeply troubled, and tries to convince Mrs. Maynard that this is true. She is very sceptical and refuses to place any confidence in Alden's claim, even though she realizes that Myra is not herself.

Alone in her boudoir Myra is acting very strangely. She gathers all her jewels together and hides them, after which she phones her bank in order to ascertain the amount of her bank balance. She then proceeds to leave the house with the intention of drawing her money, but as she opens the door, Varney and Alden arrive. Alden asks for Mrs. Maynard, and is ushered in. Arthur Varney is embarrassed by Myra's behavior. Contrary to her usual way, she is more than cordial to him. As they enter the room where Mrs. Maynard and Alden are seated, Myra suddenly announces that she and Varney are engaged to be married. Dr. Alden, realizing that it is not Myra herself speaking, departs for his laboratory. Alone once more Myra announces to Varney that she is not Myra, but the Grand Master in the body of Myra, and instructs him to get the body of the Black Master from the lodge and to carry it to a certain deserted house in the nearby gorge. She then departs for the bank, where she withdraws her money.

Consternation reigns in the Black Order. The Grand Master has suddenly appeared in the Council Chamber, something that he has never done before. He seems frightened and yet imbued with a sort of nervous courage. He commands the members to clear out from the lodge. Once outside they are met by Varney, who explains to them the strange phenomena which has happened. Alden, arriving at his laboratory, is disturbed by the appearance of a well-known clairvoyant, who says he has a message for the doctor. At this point the Grand Master, in whose body is the spirit of Myra, telephones to the doctor for assistance. Strangely enough, at this very moment the medium commands Alden to answer his 'phone. It is Myra speaking in the form of the Grand Master asking for help. Before the message is completed the connection is broken, this resulting from the fact that the members have returned to the lodge and have made their former leader a prisoner. In Alden's laboratory the medium informs him that the spirit of his dead Hindu colleague is telling him to go to the house in the gorge quickly. Alden departs. Having securely bound and gagged the body of the Grand Master, the members are now taking him to this very place.

Myra has not left the bank, and, driving some distance into the country in the neighborhood of the gorge, sends her chauffeur back and starts out on foot. She arrives at the house, where she finds the body of the Grand Master, who possesses her spirit. Myra, now the personification of the Grand Master, tells him he possesses her spirit and that she will restore the respective spirits to their proper bodies, but she must first hypnotize him, and herself. Varney is outside the house and reports to Myra that, should she desire it, he can release the flood gates of the dam a short distance up stream which will cause the house to be washed away. She returns and proceeds to hypnotize the Master and herself. At this moment Alden arrives. The Master speaks to him from the lips of Myra: "If you kill my body her's will never awake."

She then hypnotizes herself and the Master, and after a time the two astral bodies return to their proper individualities. Again Myra is the sweet girl, while the body of the Black Master now contains his despicable soul. Alden remembers his promise not to kill the Master and rushes to the restored Myra. In the meantime the crafty Master withdraws and gives Varney the proper signal. A moment later the water bursts forth from the dam and the torrential stream descends with such force that the entire house is washed away. The Master escapes safely, while Myra and Alden are swept down stream. After a long struggle Alden is finally successful and succeeds in bringing the girl he loves safely to the shore.

THE PURSUING VENGEANCE (Five Parts—May).—The cast: Crochard (Sheldon Lewis); Mimi (Jane Meredith); Godfrey (Henry Mortimer); Lester (Henry Cargill); Countess Simone (Grace Hampton); Vantine (Ernest Cossard); Simmons (William Frederic); Pigot (Fred. Annerly); Drouet (Alfred Hese); Morrell (Emil Hoch); Parks (John Gray); Fifi (Margaret Forrest); Landlady (Margaret Woodburn); Landlord (Frederick Rogers). Produced by Martin Sabine.

The Countess Simone, whose jewels are famous, is selected for the first victim of the band. Vantine, a noted connoisseur, has purchased in Paris a wonderfully perfect Boule cabinet. It is brought to his home in New York carrying with it Death; for Vantine, while examining it, is mysteriously slain. the only marks upon him being two livid stains on the back of his left hand.

One after another investigators of the cabinet are slain in an equally unfathomable way. There appears to be no solution of the puzzle till Jack Godfrey, a "cub" reporter tackles the circumstances. Godfrey, armed with steel gloves, undertakes to discover the secret of the murderous cabinet. In the meantime, Crochard, the international crook, who has used the cabinet as a hiding place for part of his booty, pursues it to America, together with Mimi, his accomplice, and others of his retinue.

Through a skilful ruse he gains access to the death-cabinet which has become so deadly that the police have seized it and placed it in a cell at "Headquarters." Disguised as the detective, who has followed him across the Atlantic, Crochard exercises his cunning and his wits and makes a laughing stock of the man set on his trail. The climax is startling.
